Mr. GALLINGER. It would leave the Commission consisting of seven, unless it should be subsequently changed by amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask the Senator from West Virginia who made the motion if he will not withhold it until the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] can explain the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no disposition to explain the amendment, Mr. President. It explains itself.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to have the amendment restated, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 34 of the last reprint of the bill, line 9, before the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out "ten thousand" and to insert "seven thousand five hundred;" so that, if amended, the clause will read:

That the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby enlarged so as to consist of seven members with terms of seven years, and each shall receive $7,500 compensation annually.

Mr. DANIEL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia will kindly state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I understand that the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] was laid on the table; and I wish to know what has become of the amendment which he proposed as a substitute for section 8—whether or not it is now before the Senate?

Mr. GALLINGER. That amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. LODGE. I withdrew my amendment and substituted for it a provision which was laid on the table.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to make another parliamentary inquiry. Is it the intention of the Senator to reoffer his amendment?

Mr. LODGE. No, Mr. President, I shall not again offer it. As it is perfectly evident the Senate is opposed to it, I shall not take any more time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to suggest that the motion to lay on the table made by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] is pending. I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. DANIEL. I wish to make another inquiry while I am on my feet, Mr. President. The Senator from New Hampshire——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the Senator from Virginia making his parliamentary inquiry? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DANIEL. The Senator from New Hampshire has offered an amendment, which has not been debated. The unanimous-consent agreement, as I understood it, was that each Senator should be privileged to speak fifteen minutes and that he could speak on any subject that was before the Senate. Now, this motion is offered to cut off all debate, and I should like to inquire if the unanimous-consent agreement can be considered as off if that amendment is adopted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has heretofore ruled upon that precise question. In the opinion of the Chair the Senate has heretofore put its interpretation upon the unanimous-consent agreement as it affects a motion to lay an amendment upon the table. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to lay the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] upon the table is in order. The question now is upon that motion.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. The question now, as I understand, is on my amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. TELLER. Let the amendment be reported, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 34 of the last reprint of the bill, in line 9, before the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out "ten thousand" and insert "seven thousand five hundred."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which has just been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit another amendment, Mr. President, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 34, line 10, after the word "annually," it is proposed to insert:

The appointments shall be made as equitably as may be, so as to include the different sections of the country.

Mr. MALLORY. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that the words "as equitably as may be" are not necessary in the amendment, and they should be stricken out.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will accept the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as proposed to be modified by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] at the suggestion of the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] will be stated.

The Secretary read the amendment proposed by Mr. GALLINGER as modified, as follows:

The appointments shall be made so as to include the different sections of the country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. I move to strike out the word "seven," before the word "members," in line 8, page 34, and to insert "nine."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 34, line 8, section 8, before the word "members," it is proposed to strike out "seven" and to insert "nine."

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. DANIEL. I have the floor, I believe.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I believe that nine members is the correct number for this Commission. There is a like number of members of the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court of the United States is constituted of nine judges, and I think the Interstate Commerce Commission should be composed of a like number.

It is somewhat more difficult to get an expert and well-trained mind for the Interstate Commerce Commission than it is to get a man who is competent to be a Supreme Court judge. There is not a community anywhere in the United States, which has twenty-five or thirty lawyers in it, which could not furnish an experienced, highly educated, and well-trained member of the bar, who, in character, dignity, and erudition, would be well qualified to occupy a seat upon the Supreme Bench of the United States. Men who are trained in practical affairs, who have those experiences in life and that grasp of mind to make efficient Interstate Commerce Commissioners, are rarer and of a more difficult character to find. The responsibilities are equally as numerous, and in many instances they are equally as great.

The Supreme Court has terms of session; it has vacations; its judges are concerned in but one branch of human knowledge—the study of the science of law—and while it is true, as Bacon says, that "the sparks of all the sciences may be found in the ashes of the law," the practical relations of life in great business affairs and those experiences which ought to be found in the character of an interstate-commerce commissioner are not of the kind that are connate to either the bench or the bar.

The Interstate Commerce Commission settles hundreds of cases which make but little appearance upon the surface. Their offices are somewhat like those of the Representative and the Senator. The time consumed upon the floor and in the conspicuous part of the public service is but a small part of the time which is occupied in severe and assiduous labor. From the rising of the sun to the going down thereof, day in and day out, week in and week out, month in and month out, members of the legislative bodies of the United States are continuously occupied in the business of their constitutents and in a multiplicity of affairs which give no sign whatsoever upon the surface of public events. It is even so, Mr. President, with the Interstate Commerce Commissioner, being in that respect different from the office of judge. People from all parts of the country consult with the Interstate Commerce Commissioners. The cases that are heard and decided are but a small percentage of those which have to be considered and advised about. The Senate could not, in my judgment, render to the shipping people and the business people of the United States a better service than by building up in every way that they may the dignity and the importance of the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing liberally for them, and making it a body to be looked up to, respected, and obeyed by those sanctions of character and environment which impress the people of the country with the bench.

Now, Mr. President, I have noted an undercurrent pervading the debate in this body. It has not been one of distinctive criticism, but it has rather been one of suggestive belittlement of the existing Interstate Commerce Commission. If anyone will read the opinions of the Interstate Commerce Commission, where they have taken up and treated many difficult and novel situations, he is bound to be impressed with the fact that the gentlemen who have been Commissioners have been most studious public servants and have been most intelligent in the discharge of their offices. They have had to decide questions which, in their nature, are just like those on which men have to vote in political matters, which elicit criticism here or there, and are displeasing to some and pleasing to others; but, in the main, Mr. President, they have left the impress of a high order of intellect and of most assiduous devotion to duty in the memorials of the service which they have rendered, contained in their reports and their opinions.

Before I take my seat I desire to ask leave to print with my remarks a list of the cases in which the Interstate Commerce Commission have been overruled, with a brief memorandum of the comments of the judges upon the new evidence which was put in the cases in which they were overruled.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The Commission has been reversed in thirty-two cases (including one case partially reversed). In twenty-six of these cases the carriers took additional testimony in the circuit court. In a number of these twenty-six cases the additional testimony in court was very considerable in volume. In the case recently decided in the circuit court at Chicago, known as the "Live Stock and Live-Stock Products case," there were about 3,000 pages of additional testimony and 200 exhibits, in addition to the mass of testimony and exhibits before the Commission, which were also put in evidence before the court. The trial in court lasted thirty days. The estimated cost of printing the record in that case on appeal to the Supreme Court is $10,000.

COMMISSION CASES BEFORE THE COURTS WHEREIN EVIDENCE IN ADDITION TO THAT INTRODUCED BEFORE THE COMMISSION WAS CONSIDERED.

The facts bearing upon the controversy were gone into more fully than before the Commission. (K. and I. Br. Co. v. L. and N., 37 Fed. Rep., 567.)

The proof before this court established that said party rates of 2 cents per mile are reasonable and just. (I. C. C. v. B. and O., 43 Fed. Rep., 37.)

Much time was consumed in the taking of testimony on behalf of the respective parties. * * * It is the duty of the court to examine the entire evidence submitted, and base its judgment upon the case as here established. (I. C. C. v. A., T. and S. F., 50 Fed. Rep., 295.)

Nothing can be clearer than that the findings by the Commission are not here decisive of the questions of fact. (I. C. C. v. L. V., 49 Fed. Rep., 177.)

The case is now before us upon the pleadings, the report of the Commission, the evidence taken by the Commission, and additional proofs taken by an examiner appointed by the court. (I. C. C. v. L. V., 74 Fed. Rep., 784.)

We have only to add that the evidence before us is quite convincing. (Ibid.)

The evidence offered here on behalf of the railroads is, in the opinion of the court, sufficient to overcome any prima facie case that may have been made by the findings of the Commission. On the whole testimony, as now before the court, it is not believed that the Commission would have found the rate in question to be unreasonable. (I. C. C. v. C. N. O. and T. P., 56 Fed. Rep., 925.)

We think this is a proper occasion to express disapproval of such a method of procedure on the part of the railroad companies as should lead them to withhold the larger part of their evidence from the Commission, and first adduce it in the circuit court. (I. C. C. v. C. N. O. and T. P., 162 U. S., 184.)

The finding of fact by the Commission is adopted for the purpose of this opinion, together with some further facts not inconsistent therewith, proven by the testimony or of which judicial notice is taken. (I. C. C. v. D., G. H. and M., 57 Fed. Rep., 1005.) (Severens, dissenting opinion.)

We try the case in the courts de novo, on the facts there presented. (I. C. C. v. D., G. H. and M., 74 Fed Rep., 803.)

To this an answer was filed by the company, admitting the facts to be as found by the Commission, and alleged certain additional facts, to support which testimony was adduced. (I. C. C. v. D., G. H. and M., 167 U. S., 633.)

The facts sufficiently appeared in the report of the master who took additional testimony. (Fla. Fruit Exch. v. S. F. and W., 4 I. C. Rep., 400.)

The case was referred to a special master, whose findings substantially agreed with that of the Commission. (S. F. and W. v. Fla. Fruit Exch., 4 I. C. Rep., 589.)

No testimony was taken before the circuit court. The case was heard upon petition and answer. (I. C. C. v. Tex. and Pac., 57 Fed. Rep., 948.)

The cause was heard upon petition and answer and sundry exhibits. (Tex. and Pac. v. I. C. C., 162 U. S., 197.)

The case was conducted by the interested parties, and upon the additional evidence taken in court the petition was dismissed. (I. C. C. v. N. Y. P. and N., never reported; see App. D, Hearings before Senate Com., p. 16.)

It seems undesirable at this stage of the case to summarize generally the facts thus assumed to be true, as subsequent evidence taken in this court may modify such assumptions. The "assumptions" referred to were the findings of fact of the Commission. (N. Y. and N. v. N. Y. and N. E., 50 Fed. Rep., 867.)

The court, of course, may go fully into the proof on its own examination to determine whether it will approve the order, and may hear any additional proof adduced. (I. C. C. v. L. and N., 73 Fed. Rep., 409.)

The case made here is not the case as it was made before the Commission. New testimony has been taken. (I. C. C. v. Ala. Mid., 69 Fed. Rep., 227.)

Additional evidence may be put in by either party, and the duty of the court is to decide, as a court of equity, upon the entire body of evidence. (I. C. C. v. Ala. Mid., 168 U. S., 144.)

This court is not confined to a mere examination of the matter as heard by the Commission. It proceeds to hear the complaint de novo. (Shinkle, W. and K. Co. v. L. and N., 62 Fed. Rep., 690.)

The answers in this case are such as to warrant the taking of testimony by the defendants, and, if necessary, taking of further testimony on behalf of the Commission. (I. C. C. v. C. N. O. and T. P., 64 Fed. Rep., 981.)

By stipulation the testimony taken before the Commission was used at the hearing in the circuit court, and by consent certain documentary evidence (consisting of railway agreements, tariffs, reports, etc.) was filed as additional evidence on behalf of the defendants. (L. and N. R. Co. v. Behlmer, 175 Fed. Rep., 648.)

The testimony taken before the Commission was used on the hearing in this court, and additional testimony was taken by each of the parties after the cases got to this court. (I. C. C. v. Sou. Ry., 105 Fed. Rep., 703.)

Testimony and documentary evidence has been taken by said master, at the cities of Spokane, Seattle, and Tacoma, in the State of Washington, and in Portland, in the State of Oregon, and in San Francisco, Cal., and in St. Paul, Minn.; and said master has made a full and exhaustive report, setting forth the facts and his conclusions, from the evidence taken, and his opinion upon the questions of law involved in the controversy. (F. L. and T. Co. v. No. Pac., 83 Fed. Rep., 249.)

Each side took further proof, and the case was finally submitted to the court on the report and opinion of the Commission, and further testimony taken in this court. (I. C. C. v. E. T. V. and G., 85 Fed. Rep., 107.)

The court may direct further evidence to be taken; and, if it shall appear that the facts are otherwise than as reported, the court would be governed by the facts as found by itself in forming its judgment. (Ibid.)

In that court additional testimony was taken, but it was all merely cumulative of that which had been adduced before the Commission. (E. T. V. and G. v. I. C. C., 181 U. S., 1.)

After the case was at issue in this court evidence was taken both for the Commission and the railway companies. (I. C. C. v. W. and A., 88 Fed. Rep., 186.)

Before the circuit court the Commission contented itself with introducing in evidence certified copies of the proceedings had before it, other than the evidence taken by the Commission. * * * The evidence introduced on behalf of the railroad companies consisted only of the circulars and tariff sheets which had been issued and filed with the Commission. (I. C. C. v. C. B. and Q., 186 U. S., 320.)

The evidence, we think, supports these findings (of the Commission). (I. C. C. v. L. and N., 118 Fed. Rep., 613.)

This conclusion of the Commission seems to be warranted by the evidence before the Commission, and there is nothing in the additional evidence taken in the circuit court to justify finding a different result. (I. C. C. v. N. C. and St. L., 120 Fed. Rep., 934.)

In addition to the proof taken before the Commission, oral testimony was offered at the hearing. (I. C. C. v. L. S. and M. S., 134 Fed. Rep., 942.)

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I desire to inquire whether it is in order to move an amendment to make the Commission nine when an amendment was adopted, on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], that it should be seven?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Seven is the number named in the bill, and the Senator from Virginia has moved to amend by striking out "seven" and inserting "nine."

Mr. DANIEL. That is right; inserting "nine."

Mr. KEAN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "nine" and inserting "five," leaving the Commission to be constituted of exactly the same number as it is at the present time.

Mr. NELSON. I move to lay both of the amendments on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no.

Mr. KEAN. I withdraw my amendment, so as to let the other amendment be voted on now.

Mr. FORAKER. What is the amendment on which we are to vote?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state it.

The SECRETARY. On page 34, line 8, before the word "members," it is proposed to strike out "seven" and insert "nine;" so that the Commission shall consist of nine members.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey moves as an amendment——

Mr. KEAN. I withdraw that.

Mr. NELSON. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I renew the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota has moved to lay the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] on the table.

Mr. LATIMER. I renew the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is not in order.

Mr. FORAKER. I move to amend the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is not in order, the Senator from New Jersey having withdrawn his amendment. The only question before the Senate is the motion to lay the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia upon the table. The Chair understood that demand was made for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ELKINS. No; not on that motion.

Mr. NELSON. Not on that, but on some other. The question is on the motion to lay the amendment of the Senator from Virginia on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. So the Chair stated.

The motion to lay Mr. DANIEL'S amendment on the table was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I move to strike out the word "seven" and insert the word "five;" so that the Commission shall consist of five members.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 34, line 8, before the word "members," it is proposed to strike out "seven" and insert "five."

Mr. DICK. It will be necessary for the Senator to include an additional amendment by striking out the words "is hereby enlarged so as to" and to insert the word "shall," in order to make the amendment applicable.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well. I accept that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment of the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] as modified by the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. DICK].

The SECRETARY. On page 34, line 8, before the word "consist," it is proposed to strike out "is hereby enlarged so as to;" and in the same line, before the word "members," to strike out "seven" and insert "five;" so that, if amended, it will read:

SEC. 24. That the Interstate Commerce Commission shall consist of five members with terms of seven years.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the necessity of amending the section lower down, where provision is made for the appointment of the additional members.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator from Florida will make the motion, I will yield to him to do so. I was going to call attention to the fact that the term of service would have to be changed. Under the bill the Commissioners are now, I believe, to be appointed for seven years. I have not a copy of the bill before me. If the Senator from Florida has the bill before him, I would be glad if he would move the amendment to which he refers.

Mr. MALLORY. It requires considerable time to make the changes, commencing in line 12.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The necessary amendment may be made by striking out entirely section 8. It will require no other amendment to make the bill conform in this particular to the present law than to strike the section out. The salary of the Commissioners has been fixed as it is now fixed by law, and the number of Commissioners has been made the same.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator make that motion?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Very well. I move to strike out all of section 8.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of section 8 of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the reading of the bill be continued.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the next section of the bill.

The Secretary read section 9, as follows:

SEC. 9. That all existing laws relating to the attendance of witnesses and the production of evidence and the compelling of testimony under the act to regulate commerce and all acts amendatory thereof shall apply to any and all proceedings and hearings under this act.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have an amendment which I intended to propose for the addition to this bill of about twenty sections providing for the formation of national corporations for railroad and navigation lines. Since that amendment was proposed I have been authorized by the Interstate Commerce Committee to report a bill providing for a commission to inquire into the question of national incorporation and to report thereon. I have therefore, after consultation with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], subject to the approval of the Senate, concluded to ask simply that the amendment be printed in the RECORD, and with it certain extracts from the views which I presented upon the report of the rate-regulation bill to the Senate.

I hope that some such bill may finally be passed, which will enable the consolidation under national charter of great systems of transportation, which will embrace not only great transcontinental lines of railways, but also great steamship lines to foreign countries, thus promoting both interstate and foreign commerce.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada for the printing in the RECORD of the matter named by him? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I also desire to have printed the extracts from the report which I made on the pending rate bill, and a copy of the bill providing for a commission to examine into the question of national incorporation to which I have referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Railroad rate legislation. March 15, 1906. Ordered to be printed.]

Views of Mr. Newlands.

While I have joined in the report on House bill No. 12987, amendatory of the interstate-commerce act, and am in sympathy with its general purposes, and believe that it is well framed to cover its main purpose as to the regulation of rates, I think it should be classed with the incomplete and fragmentary legislation regarding interstate commerce in which Congress has thus far indulged.

I believe that this is the time for full and comprehensive legislation. I do not believe that our legislation will be as effective as it should be unless it adds to the pending measure provisions for the national incorporation of railways engaged in interstate commerce, guarding against overcapitalization, fixing with certainty the rule for the taxation of such railway property by the States, and prescribing a fixed limit for dividends.

Such legislation should not simply cover the interests of the shippers and the common carriers; it should embrace the interests of labor by providing for an insurance fund against accidents and old age and for conciliation of disputes between carriers and their employees. Such legislation should be simple, definite, certain, should cover every question relating to the regulation of interstate commerce, including the creation of the artificial beings called "corporations" that are to conduct it. It should frankly recognize the economic necessity of consolidation and combination and the essentially monopolistic character of the business, and regulate consolidation, combination, and monopoly, with a proper regard for the interests of the public served by it, the property rights of the capital employed in it, and the human rights of the labor employed by it.

RAILROAD GROWTH AND CONSOLIDATION.

The railroad mileage has increased from 23 miles in 1830 to 213,000 miles in 1905. This mileage is owned by over 2,000 railroad corporations, created by State laws. As the result of consolidation, combination, and recombination, the operation of these 2,000 railroads has been mainly unified under the control of less than ten systems, each organized under the laws of a single State, generally bearing the name of a single man, who is regarded as the dominant factor in its control.

The controllers of these systems resort for the machinery of combination to the States whose laws are most lax in proper restrictions regarding combination and overcapitalization.

CONTROL OF PRODUCTION.

In many cases the controlling corporation of a system, in addition to securing the control of a vast mileage through purchase or lease, also buys the stock of troublesome rivals, and thus gradually brings about a community of interests which results in the suppression of competition and the stability of rates. It also, in some cases, purchases the control of producing companies in coal and iron, and thus, in connection with other corporations bound to it by a community of interest, controls the production of coal and iron in such States as Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

In addition to this, the men who control the great industrial combinations have become the controlling spirits of the great railroad combinations, and thus monopoly in transportation and monopoly in production have become united in the realization of profit. The pending bill provides no remedy for this abuse.

CONTROL OF CAPITALIZATION.

As a rule in the formation of these great railroad combinations there is no public supervision or control over the amount of their capitalization, this being left entirely to the judgment of those interested. States which require the approval by a public tribunal of stock and bond issues made for consolidation and combination, such as Massachusetts and Texas, are avoided in the creation of such combinations. The States whose legislation is most lax in such matters are resorted to for corporate powers. The capitalization of all the railroads engaged in interstate commerce is about $13,000,000,000, about half in bonds and half in stock.

The bonds for the most part represent genuine investment; the stocks, it is claimed, have been largely watered.

The President in his message has called attention to the evils of overcapitalization in the following words:

"Of these abuses perhaps the chief, although by no means the only one, is overcapitalization—generally itself the result of dishonest promotion—because of the myriad evils it brings in its train; for such capitalization often means an inflation that invites business panic; it always conceals the true relation of the profit earned to the capital actually invested, and it creates a burden of interest payments which is a fertile cause of improper reduction in or limitation of wages; it damages the small investor, discourages thrift, and encourages gambling and speculation; while, perhaps, worst of all is the trickiness and dishonesty which it implies—for harm to morals is worse than any possible harm to material interests, and the debauchery of politics and business by great dishonest corporations is far worse than any actual material evil they do the public." * * *

CHANGES IN RAILROAD CONDITIONS SINCE 1887.

In the World's Work for October, 1905, appears an article by Professor Ripley, of Harvard University, entitled as above.

In this article Professor Ripley states that from 1889 to 1903 "while population and mileage increased one-third, the railroads in 1903 hauled the equivalent of two and a half times the total volume of freight traffic handled in 1889, the year of the earliest statistics." He adds:

"If the freight business of the United States increased five times as fast as population or mileage in fourteen years, the imagination runs riot concerning its probable magnitude fifty or one hundred years hence."

In this article also appears the following statistical statement:

"Gross revenues of American railroads in 1889 were about $1,000,000,000 and in 1903 they were about one billion nine hundred millions. The preliminary figures for 1904 show that they have practically doubled in the brief period of fifteen years.

"The net income available for dividends has grown even faster. The increase to 1903 was, roughly speaking, about 250 per cent, namely, from one hundred millions in 1889 to three hundred and fifty-seven millions in 1903. There is every probability that by 1905 the net revenue will be more than fourfold the figures in 1889."

GROWTH OF CONSOLIDATION.

Professor Ripley speaks of the enormous growth of consolidation since 1887, and calls attention to the fact that before 1890 a 5,000-mile railroad was about the maximum, and that the next decade, 1900, witnessed the growth of systems of about twice that size. He then adds:

"Since then, not simply consolidations, but recombinations of systems, each in itself the result of antecedent consolidations, have made their appearance. The Morgan, Vanderbilt, Pennsylvania, Harriman, and Gould properties during the last five years attained lengths of 15,000 to 20,000 miles, and shall anyone be rash enough to predict that the end is yet in sight?"

In addition to this form of consolidation, Professor Ripley says:

"Great systems are quietly assuming control of their lesser and parallel rivals through investment of surplus funds in their securities. In this way trunk-line territory has been practically closed to competition. The New York Central has secured the Lake Shore, and through it purchased a large interest in the Philadelphia and Reading Railway. At the same time the Pennsylvania Company, through the Baltimore and Ohio, purchased control of its former troublesome rivals in the South, the Chesapeake and Ohio and the Norfolk and Western. The Baltimore and Ohio is also used by the Pennsylvania as a catspaw to assist in pulling the Philadelphia and Reading out of the fire of competition. The last company, thus jointly controlled at arm's length by the two great trunk lines, becomes the principal factor in the great anthracite coal combination, which includes four or five other companies. With the Vanderbilt and Morgan control of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western and the Lehigh Valley, it will be apparent how little room there is for competition in this territory. The only free lance in any sense is the Erie, and rumor has it that the New York Central, through the Lake Shore and the Pennsylvania, is buying into its control at the present time."

INTERCORPORATE OWNERSHIP.

Under this heading Professor Ripley speaks of another form of consolidation which is going on. In fourteen years, he says, outstanding stocks and bonds of railroads owned by the public increased only 25 per cent, while railroad ownership of such securities increased four times as fast, or 100 per cent.

"In other words," says Professor Ripley, "railroad investments in other railroads have been growing about four times as fast as ownership by the general public, until in 1903 about one-fourth of the outstanding issues of railway stocks and bonds were owned by these corporations themselves."

This tendency has been accelerating during the past few years. Professor Ripley cites as an illustration the case of the Union Pacific Railroad, whose holdings five years ago of miscellaneous securities were about $11,000,000.

"In its annual report for 1904 this item is represented by $211,800,000, mainly stocks of other roads, with a few bonds. Including its holdings through auxiliary companies its investments have grown in five years from $90,686,000 to $342,587,000."

Professor Ripley shows how suitable counterpoises of nonvoting stocks and bonds enable control of these parent companies to be held with comparative ease by a few men, and adds:

"This is our dilemma, then. Such an inverted financial pyramid, if it prove its worth, must unconscionably enrich the few who control it—the public danger of the overwealthy. If it threaten to prove top-heavy it can be upheld only through larger exactions from the shipping and consuming public—extortionate rates; while, if it topple over, vast losses must come to the innocent public which provided nine-tenths of the real capital investment—witness widespread bankruptcy."

IS CONSOLIDATION DESIRABLE AND LEGAL?

It may be safely stated that consolidation has for the most part resulted in greater economy and efficiency of operation, in better and quicker service, in a more equal service, and in stability of rates. As to whether it has worked a reduction of rates is disputed. The verdict of the people would probably be in favor of controlled consolidation and against uncontrolled consolidation. None of these consolidations have been tested in the courts except that accomplished through the agency of the Northern Securities Company. It was condemned and dissolved. It is probable that others are equally illegal, but there seems to be little disposition to attempt to break them up. Consolidation and merger of railroads engaged in interstate commerce constitute a part of the economic development of such commerce.

This measure provides no supervision or control over consolidation or merger.

CORPORATE ACTIVITY IN POLITICS.

The activity of these great railroad combinations in politics has been increasing ever since 1896. They are in politics because they feel that their property may be at any time the subject of attack either by legislatures or by administrative officers. Their vast property is between the upper and the nether millstone—the upper millstone of the rate-regulating power, the nether millstone of the taxing power. Between the two, save for the protection of the courts, they could be ground to destruction.

Participation in politics is stimulated by the uncertainty and insecurity of their situation. In the States, as a rule, they take part in the selection and election of officials whose duty is likely to trench in any degree upon the taxing and rate-regulating power. In addition to being subject to the control of Congress as to interstate rates they are subjected to the control of forty-five different State legislatures or commissions as to the rates of State commerce. They are also taxed under forty-five different systems embraced in the laws of as many States.

There is no certainty, no uniformity, no permanency. Thousands of local officials are engaged in making the valuations and fixing the tax rates. The railroads are therefore in politics, and as they do everything systematically their participation in politics means either organization of or identification with a machine in most of the States of the Union, and since, as a matter of business, they pursue the lines of least resistance, this often means alliance with corrupt elements of the communities in which they operate. Having been drawn into politics by the necessity for protection they are likely to become aggressive and dominant in political control. It is expensive business for the railroads and it is a grave menace to the institutions of the Republic.

UNDOUBTED POWERS OF THE NATIONAL GOVERNMENT.

No one can question the power of the National Government to create corporations for the purpose of carrying out the powers intrusted to it by the Constitution. Under the granted powers of the Constitution we have created national banks, we have acquired and are now completing the Panama Canal, and have acquired the stock of and are operating the Panama Railroad. Under these powers we have also incorporated several railroads, among others the Union Pacific, the Atlantic Pacific, and the Texas Pacific railroads, the two former constructed through Territories, the latter constructed from a point in Texas to a point in California, all done under the powers granted in the Constitution to provide for the national defense, to establish post-offices and post-roads, and to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States.

Economic efficiency requires that the same railroad should accommodate both State and interstate commerce. State commerce is subject to the regulation of the State, interstate commerce is subject to the regulation of the United States. There should be no difficulty concerning the harmonious cooperation of the greater and the lesser sovereignties under a national incorporation act.

When I first introduced a joint resolution for the creation of a commission to frame a national incorporation act for railroads, I presented the view that it was unnecessary to seek either the cooperation or the consent of the States; that the United States had the power to create corporations for the transportation of interstate traffic; that it had the power to exempt the instrumentalities it chose for this purpose from all States burthens, either as to taxation or as to regulation of rates, upon the theory that the States could not put burthens upon national instrumentalities which might destroy their efficiency. But upon reflection I am convinced that it is wiser to secure the cooperation of the two sovereignties. I would suggest, therefore, the following legislation:

WHAT NATIONAL INCORPORATION SHOULD INCLUDE.

It is clear to my mind that we should have a national law for the incorporation of railways engaged in interstate commerce; that no incorporation formed under it should be permitted to enter upon its work until its certificate of incorporation defining its purpose and powers should be submitted to and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission; that such corporation should not be permitted to commence construction or to purchase or acquire existing railroads until its plans and estimates are approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission; that such corporation should not be permitted to issue its bonds or stock until the amount thereof and the consideration therefor are submitted to and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, after a public hearing; that all subsequent issues of stock and bonds should require a similar hearing and approval; that no existing railroad now owned by a corporation created by the laws of any State should be acquired or purchased without the consent of such State; that railroads so constructed and acquired by such national corporation should be subject to the reasonable police laws of the States in which they are operated; that the stock and bonds of such national corporations should be exempt from all taxation, but that the actual property and equipment of such corporations should be assessed by the States in which they are located at such percentage of its value as is customary and general, and should be taxed at the same rate as other property, or, better, that the State should levy a tax not exceeding 4 per cent upon such proportion of the gross receipts of the railroad as the mileage of such railroad within the State bears to the entire mileage operated; that nothing in the act should interfere with the power of the State to regulate the rates for the State traffic upon such railroad; that the Interstate Commerce Commission should make a valuation both of the road constructed and the road and equipment purchased or acquired and should make a record of the same, and that the issue of bonds and stock should equal such value and no more, and that all subsequent issues of stock and bonds should represent the actual value of property constructed or acquired.

APPROVAL OF STOCK AND BOND ISSUES.

A national incorporation act should limit stock and bond issues to the cash paid in, or to the value of the property acquired, and so strict should this provision be that no issue of stock or bonds should be permitted save with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. There are two States in the Union to-day whose corporate legislation is of the highest character—the State of Massachusetts and the State of Texas. In both of these States the railroad commission must approve the issues of stocks and bonds, and in Texas no stock or bond issue is legal unless the approval is indorsed upon the stocks or bonds.

What we wish to do is to nationalize either the system of Texas or the system of Massachusetts, and to denationalize the system of New Jersey. It is possible that we may have to use powers both of persuasion and of coercion in bringing in existing corporations under a national charter. It may be that we will have to validate a large portion of the capitalization already created, but if we can save the country from the overcapitalization of the future, even though we validate a large part of the overcapitalization of the past, we will confer a lasting benefit upon the American people.

A FAIR RETURN.

The return which national corporations are to have upon their capital should be a fair rate of interest on a fair valuation, and in giving the franchises to collect tolls we should provide that it should be exercised in such a way as to guard the public interest and save the public from extortion. The Supreme Court has declared that the railroads are public highways; that the right to collect tolls can not be exercised without a grant from the sovereign; that the tolls must be reasonable, and that in a judicial inquiry the reasonableness of the toll must be determined by a consideration of the value of the property employed in the public use, the gross receipts, the operating expenses, the cost of maintenance, the taxes, the interest on debts, etc., and that rates should be so adjusted as to yield, after all reasonable allowances, a fair return upon such valuation.

The best way of maintaining for all time the valuation of these roads is to have the capital stock express the real capital employed, and not a fictitious capital, and then we will know upon what amount a fair return should be paid.

In Smyth v. Ames (169 U. S., 546) the Supreme Court says:

"We hold, however, that the basis of all calculations as to the reasonableness of rates to be charged by a corporation maintaining a highway under legislative sanction must be the fair value of the property being used by it for the convenience of the public. And in order to ascertain that value, the original cost of construction, the amount expended in permanent improvements, the amount and market value of its bonds and stock, the present as compared with the original cost of construction, the probable earning capacity of the property under the particular rates prescribed by statute, and the sum required to meet operating expenses, are all matters for consideration, and are to be given such weight as may be just and right in each case. We do not say that there may not be other matters to be regarded in estimating the value of the property. What the company is entitled to ask is a fair return upon the value of that which it employs for the public convenience. On the other hand, what the public is entitled to demand is that no more be exacted from it for the use of a public highway than the services rendered by it are reasonably worth."

And yet although the Supreme Court has laid down the rule for the regulation of rates, as involving a fair return upon the value of the property affected, in the consideration of which certain factors are to be considered, such as the stock and bond issues, the actual cost, the actual cost of reproduction, etc., we in our legislation do not provide the factors by which the Interstate Commerce Commission can be guided. We should furnish them with the means of controlling the capitalization of these corporations, and if we do not enter upon a national incorporation of railways, we should at all events provide that the Interstate Commerce Commission should enter upon a valuation of the railroads, and to that valuation should be added from time to time the increases of bond and stock issues made by the corporation with the approval of the Commission.

TAXATION.

Then there is the question of a uniform system of taxation to be devised. Whenever the National Government creates a corporation for the carrying out of a great public purpose, and when the National Government uses the property of that corporation as an instrumentality for carrying out the powers conferred by the Constitution, it can, if it chooses, absolutely exempt such property from State burdens, for the power to tax involves the power to destroy. If it can do this it can certainly do what I contend for, namely, lay down the rule by which States shall tax the property of such corporations within their boundaries.

We all know the looseness of the State laws regarding the taxation of railroads. We know that the range of assessment is a wide one; that the lesser degree of assessment is simply a valuation of the tracks and of the right of way, and that the higher degree of assessment involves the combined value of the stock and bonds. In addition to this the stock and bonds themselves in the hands of the stockholders can be assessed in most of the States, and thus we have a double system of taxation. As long as the taxation of railroads is subject to the conflicting laws of forty-five different States is it to be wondered that railroads keep in politics? Can we throw $10,000,000,000 worth of property into the political arena, subject to public control, both as to rates and to taxes, and then ask the $10,000,000,000 to keep out of politics?

The United States Government should fix a rational and fair rule for the taxation of railroad properties which would leave nothing to discretion and which could be ascertained with mathematical certainty. Such a tax is a percentage tax upon gross receipts levied by the various States in proportion to mileage. It has the advantage of mathematical certainty and would relieve railroads of all necessity, so far as taxation is concerned, of interfering in politics.

Besides this, if the Interstate Commerce Commission is to fix the rates it is absolutely essential it should have all the factors for determining what is a fair return upon the capital invested, and one of those features is the allowance of the taxes; and if these taxes can be rudely disturbed from time to time by political action, involving violent readjustments, there can be no certainty either in the action which they take or in the rates for transportation which are the result of their action.

RAILROAD EMPLOYEES.

There are other provisions which a national incorporation act should contain. One is an insurance and pension fund for employees. One per cent of the gross receipts of all the railroads of the country, amounting at present to over $2,000,000,000 annually, would be $20,000,000 annually. This sum put into an insurance and pension fund, and invested under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, would yield ample returns for the relief of employees suffering from injury or old age. The charge should be frankly imposed on the public as one of the fixed charges of operation, and allowance should be made therefor in fixing rates.

The Interstate Commerce Commission should be made a board of conciliation as to all disputes between employees and the railroads. As it is, whenever there is a dispute between a railroad company and its employees, if they fail to agree, there is war—war which does not involve them only, but which involves the entire country, threatening an impairment and even destruction of the commerce between the States and between communities. Can it be said that it is wise to adhere to a system which threatens at any time to paralyze trade and to lock up the activities of the entire country? I would not provide compulsory arbitration, but I believe that the conciliation of the Interstate Commerce Commission would be as effective in such matters as has been the conciliation of the railroad commission of Massachusetts in disputes between railroads and shippers.

THE NATION SHOULD ACT.

These are the questions which come before us in the consideration of national incorporation. We are considering questions of the general welfare, of the national defense, of the national postal service, of the national commerce, and of foreign commerce—all of them intrusted by the Constitution to the representatives of the people of the United States in Congress assembled. We have not exerted these powers to the full. Is it time that in the interests of the entire country we should assume the functions plainly given to us by the Constitution and provide with deliberation and judgment for their full exercise?

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP.

It is plain that the people are restive under existing conditions. They realize that consolidation, capitalization, and return on capital are practically uncontrolled; that a few men in the great financial centers have almost absolute power in these matters; that our dual system of government tends to a confusion in control which practically exempts them from all control; that the complexity of the situation makes the railroad men the dominant power in politics; that the confusion of bond and stock issues, of stock watering, of leases, mergers, and combinations absolutely paralyzes the judgment of the average right-thinking man, and is a fruitful source of corruption and fraud, political and financial.

They realize that the men who are prominent in the great industrial corporations are getting control over the transportation of the country, and that the union of control of the finances, the production, and the transportation of the country in the hands of a few has already created a plutocracy unsurpassed in wealth and power in the world's history, and that if this continues we are upon the threshold of still greater concentration of wealth and power.

They will look for simplicity in whatever plan of relief is proposed, and unless we unify and simplify the control of transportation in a few thoroughly controlled great national corporations whose finances and operations can be easily understood and whose functions will be entirely taken out of politics, they will drift to national ownership as the easiest solution.

The argument is a simple and taking one. If outside of the United States three-fifths of the trackage of the world is in national ownership, why should not America own her railroads? If the universal tendency is to the ownership by nations, why should not we follow their example? If the nation can build the most gigantic public work of modern times, the Panama Canal, and if it can own and operate a from-ocean-to-ocean railroad at Panama, why can it not build and own and operate lines through the United States from ocean to ocean and from the Lakes to the Gulf? If Chicago can contemplate the ownership of interurban railroads costing hundreds of millions, can not the nation take in hand the ownership of interstate railroads costing billions? Such in brief is the argument in favor of national ownership. The method is not difficult.

It would be easy to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to institute suit to condemn the shares of stock in all the railroads in the country engaged in interstate commerce, leaving the bonds outstanding as a lien upon the property. Thus the interests of the stockholders would be purchased by the nation, and the Interstate Commerce Commission could step into the position of directors of the various companies with their present organizations of officials and employees and could gradually work out a method of national administration. The present bond issues amount to about $6,000,000,000, bearing interest at about 4½ per cent, for which Government bonds at 2½ or 3 per cent could be gradually substituted as the railroad bonds matured, thus accomplishing a saving of $90,000,000 to $120,000,000 annually. The capital stock, whose par value aggregates about $6,000,000,000, and whose market value aggregates a little less, could be condemned at approximately the market rates and paid for by the sale of 2½ or 3 per cent United States bonds.

As the present annual revenue of all the railroads is over $2,000,000,000, it would furnish a sufficient sum to pay all the fixed charges of the companies and the low rate of interest upon the Government bonds issued for the purchase of stock and produce a surplus which would make ample provision for betterments and extensions, and also provide a sinking fund which would extinguish the entire debt in fifty years. There can be no doubt about the legality of such a procedure. A similar bill was passed unanimously in the Senate at the last session, authorizing the condemnation of the stock of the Panama Railroad. By this method the Government would acquire without any revolutionary methods the control of all the railroads engaged in interstate commerce in the country, and, assuming that the administration was honest and efficient, the saving effected by the substitution of low-rate bonds for high-rate stock and the gradual retirement of existing bonds at much lower rates of interest would eventually pay for the roads.

Should the country determine to simply take hold of the railroad construction of the future, leaving the existing railroads in the hands of their present owners, the Government could easily build a railroad of 3,000 miles across the continent from Norfolk or Charleston to Los Angeles or San Diego, which would become the spinal column of a great governmental system. Government ownership presents no difficulties, either constitutional or practical, except possibly the difficulty of honest and efficient administration, and the country will certainly drift to it unless the existing abuses of uncontrolled monopoly, of overcapitalization, of accomplished union between the producing and transportation interests, of political control, and of unjust preferences and discriminations are done away with. Even assuming that the Government management may not be as economical, the time may yet come when the people will regard equality of service as of more importance than economy of service. Such, briefly, is the argument for national ownership.

But I believe the policy I am advocating would give the country all the benefits of government ownership with none of its dangers. It would abolish the evils which have arisen from unrestricted monopoly, automatically bring about a reduction in rates, put the railroads out of politics, close the door against the entrance of over a million men into the political patronage, and retain the management of the able men whose genius created our present efficient system of transportation out of the crude conditions which prevailed a generation ago.

FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. NEWLANDS to the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, viz: Add the following sections:

FORMATION OF NATIONAL CORPORATIONS FOR RAILROAD AND NAVIGATION LINES.

SEC. 12. That any number of persons not less than fifteen may, under and subject to the requirements and conditions in this act provided, form a corporation for the purpose of constructing, equipping, maintaining, improving, and extending, and, as a common carrier, operating, a line or lines of railroad or navigation between points in different States of the United States, or between a State and a Territory, or in a Territory, or between a State and the District of Columbia, or between the United States and foreign countries, or for the purpose of acquiring by purchase or lease and operating any such line or lines of railroad or navigation already constructed or established, or for all of such purposes.

POWERS.

SEC. 13. That every corporation organized under this act shall have powers and be subject to restrictions as follows:

(a) To assume a corporate name and under such name to have corporate succession for a period stated in its certificate of incorporation, and if no other period be therein named, such succession shall be perpetual.

(b) To sue and be sued in its corporate name.

(c) To issue bonds and capital stock, as hereinafter provided.

(d) To adopt, use, and alter a corporate seal.

(e) To elect all necessary officers and appoint managers and agents, as hereinafter provided.

(f) To hold, purchase, convey, mortgage or lease such real or personal property as the lawful purposes of the corporation may require, including the right to acquire and hold the capital stock, or bonds, or both, of other railroad corporations and corporations properly subsidiary or incidental to the management and operation of the railroad business, including navigation lines, and to lease the property of such other corporations: Provided, That such right to acquire and hold capital stock of other railroad corporations and corporations so subsidiary thereto shall be exercised only by a national railway corporation which itself operates the railroad or navigation lines of which the stock is so acquired and held.

(g) To manage its business, make contracts, incur liabilities, and borrow money, subject to the requirements or provisions, or other conditions, in this act contained.

(h) To make by-laws not inconsistent with the laws applicable to such corporation, or the rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

CAPITALIZATION.

SEC. 14. That such corporation shall provide for and issue only such amount of bonds and stocks as may be necessary for such construction or purchase, or for the improvement or equipment of the railroad and navigation lines constructed, established, or acquired, together with the proper cost of organizing and promoting the company and the amount of capital reasonably required in addition for working capital. No bonds or stock shall be issued except for money paid or for property acquired at its actual cash value. The issuance of stock or bonds and the amount thereof shall in every case be subject to the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which shall grant full public hearings in relation thereto, and of such hearings public notice shall be given by or under the direction of the Commission. The United States shall be represented at such hearing by the Attorney-General, or one of his assistants. The Commission shall certify in writing to the incorporators, or to the corporation its determination, and shall record the same in the records, and all bonds and stock not issued in compliance with such determination shall be void as against such corporation.

CERTIFICATE OF INCORPORATION.

SEC. 15. That the original incorporators shall sign and acknowledge a certificate setting forth the following facts:

(a) The name of the company, which shall contain the words "National Railway Company," and which shall not be the same as that of any other corporation organized under this act, or sufficiently similar thereto to cause confusion therewith.

(b) Nature of the business proposed to be engaged in.

(c) Duration or corporate existence.

(d) Principal place of business.

(e) Route of railway already built.

(f) Route of railway proposed to be built.

(g) The proposed amount of bonds and stock, which shall be determined as provided in section 3, and the respective amounts, conditions, and privileges of the separate classes of stock, if it is desired to have more than one class.

(h) The par value of the shares.

(i) The number of shares subscribed by each incorporator.

The said certificate, together with the engineer's report provided for under section 6 in cases where such report is required, shall be submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which shall direct such amendments therein or additions thereto as may be deemed necessary, and shall, when such certificate is in conformity to law and in other respects is approved by the Commission, indorse the approval of the Commission thereon, and record the said certificate, with such indorsement, and the day and hour of the submission of the approved certificate, in proper books kept by the Commission for such purpose. The corporate existence shall commence with such day and hour, and such record and a duly certified copy thereof shall be prima facie evidence of such corporate existence.

FINDING OF PUBLIC NECESSITY.

SEC. 16. That in case such certificate shall provide for the construction or establishment of new lines of railroad or navigation, the Commission, as a condition precedent to such corporate existence, and before approving such certificate, shall determine, after public hearing, whether public convenience and necessity require the building of such new lines, said determination and the method of arriving thereat to be in accordance with rules established by said Commission. If such determination shall be to approve the construction aforesaid, it shall be recorded with said certificate of incorporation. If such certificate shall provide for the acquisition, by purchase, lease, or otherwise, of any line already constructed or in course of construction, it shall be lawful for the Commission, after hearing, to deny the filing of such certificate, if in its judgment, after public hearing, such acquisition would be detrimental to the public interest. But if the Commission shall approve such acquisition as in the public interest, its determination shall in like manner be recorded with said certificate of incorporation.

The construction, extension, or acquisition of additions to any line or lines of railroad or navigation, or the acquisition of any other lines or parts of lines or shares of stock in other companies as aforesaid, by any company incorporated under this act, is hereby prohibited unless and until such construction, extension, or acquisition shall receive the approval of the Commission as of public necessity or in the public interest upon application therefor duly filed and public hearing held, and any such approval shall be stated by the Commission in writing, with its reasons therefor, and recorded in its records.

ENGINEER'S REPORT.

SEC. 17. That no certificate of incorporation provided for in this act shall be filed or recorded unless the same is accompanied by the sworn report of one or more skillful engineers, showing the character, structure, grades, cost of duplication, cost of construction, and the manner of construction of the road or roads, line or lines, proposed to be built, established, or acquired, and containing statements in relation to such other matters as rules adopted by the Commission may require.

MEETING OF STOCKHOLDERS.

SEC. 18. That the Commission shall establish rules governing the first and other meetings of stockholders, notices thereof and quorums required thereat, the election of the board of directors, executive committee, president, and other officers of the company, and for the adoption of by-laws. Such rules shall provide for not less than five nor more than fifteen directors, an executive committee of the board of directors, with managing powers, the election of a president, vice-president, treasurer, secretary, and such other officers as the by-laws shall require. The by-laws of the company shall not be effective until approved by the Commission, as in accordance with its rules. The Commission shall have authority to amend such rules from time to time as may, in its judgment, be required. The by-laws of the company shall provide for the removal of directors by vote representing two-thirds of the stock issued and outstanding at any annual or special meeting. Stock held in the company's treasury shall not be voted at any meeting.

STOCKS AND BONDS.

SEC. 19. That in case the entire stock shall not have been subscribed for prior to the filing of the certificate of incorporation, the directors shall open books of subscription to such stock in such manner as may be provided for by the rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Before issuing the bonds of such corporation, the amount and time and term thereof and the rate of interest must be approved by said Commission. Before offering such bonds upon the general market they must be offered to the stockholders at not less than par, and thereafter such portion thereof as shall not be taken by the stockholders may be sold in the general market upon such notice as the Interstate Commerce Commission shall by rule prescribe.

CERTIFICATE OF ORGANIZATION.

SEC. 20. That when at least one-half of the capital stock shall have been subscribed for a majority of the directors shall make and swear to a certificate setting forth the following facts:

(a) Names and addresses of directors;

(b) Names and addresses of officers;

(c) Amount of capital stock subscribed for;

(d) Amount of capital stock paid for in other than cash, specifying separately and in detail the nature of such consideration and the total amount of stock separately allowed for other than cash;

(e) All delegated powers conferred by by-laws on others than the board of directors;

(f) A complete and true copy of the by-laws of the corporation. And it shall be the duty of the board of directors, within thirty days after the passage of any vote, amendment, altering, repealing, or adding to the by-laws of the corporation, to file with the Interstate Commerce Commission a complete and true copy of such vote, amendment, alteration, repeal, or addition;

(f) Such certificate shall be submitted to the Commission, and after having been amended under the direction of the Commission to conform to the requirements of this section, if such amendment be necessary, the approval of the Commission shall be indorsed thereon, and the certificate, with its indorsement, shall be recorded in full in a proper book kept by said Commission for such purposes, together with the day and hour of the submission of the approved certificate, and said corporation may begin business on and after such time.

CAPITAL STOCK.

SEC. 21. That the par value of each share of stock shall be $100. No stockholder shall be liable for the debts of the corporation beyond the amount of his subscription to the capital stock, except as expressly provided in this act. Each stockholder shall be entitled to a certificate of stock, which shall evidence the amount of stock held by him. The stock shall be personal property; shall be transferable only on the books of the company, in such form as the by-laws may prescribe; and shall be subject to a lien in favor of the corporation for all debts due to said corporation from the owner of said stock. The stock may be sold for unpaid subscriptions in such manner as may be prescribed by the rules of the Commission. Each share of stock shall entitle the holder of record to one vote, and in voting for directors any stockholder may cast his vote or any part thereof for one candidate, so as to exercise the privilege of a cumulative vote. Votes may be cast by proxies, and the form of such proxies and the list of stockholders entitled to vote shall be prepared as provided by by-laws in accordance with the rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Stockholders, by two-thirds vote of each class of stock, may create different classes of stock, either in the original or in subsequent issues, if the Interstate Commerce Commission shall find that the creation of such classes of stock is proper and necessary for the purposes of the corporation; and such stockholders may, by such vote, determine the preference, conditions, and privileges attaching to such classes, respectively, provided that preferred stock so issued, and any stock so issued other than common stock, shall have no voting powers.

BONDS.

SEC. 22. That the corporation may, by a majority vote of its stockholders, issue bonds, notes, or other evidence of indebtedness, payable not less than a year from the date thereof; but the total of such obligations of the corporation shall be determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission,

MEETINGS, INCREASE OR DECREASE OF STOCK.

SEC. 23. That annual and special meetings of stockholders shall be held, notices thereof issued, and quorums required thereat, in such manner and form as provided by the by-laws, in accordance with the rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The stockholders shall have power to elect directors and by two-thirds vote to remove them; by majority vote to increase the issue of any class of stock, subject to the provisions of this act, and by such vote to decrease any class of stock, provided that no such decrease shall be valid as against creditors which shall render the corporation insolvent.

Stockholders may also by such vote of each class of stock make any alteration or amendment in the certificate of incorporation of the company not inconsistent with law which it would have been lawful to insert or omit or make in its original certificate of incorporation, such alteration or amendment to be subject to the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

REGULATION BY INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

SEC. 24. That all corporations organized under this act shall be subject to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof.

BOOKS AND RECORDS.

SEC. 25. That the treasurer shall keep proper books of account of all transactions of the corporation, and the secretary shall keep proper and full records of the transactions of all meetings of the stockholders, the board of directors, and the executive committee, and all of said books shall be open to the inspection of the Commission at any time, and also to the inspection of any stockholder at any reasonable time and place: Provided, That any court of competent jurisdiction shall, upon petition of the corporation, have power to enjoin the exercise of such right of inspection by a stockholder whenever it shall appear that the same is not bona fide, or is being used for the advantage of business competitors, or if for any other reason it shall appear that the exercise of said right is not in such case equitable or reasonable. It shall be the duty of the respective officers having charge of such books and records to permit upon demand, after ten days' previous notice, such inspection by a stockholder unless such right of inspection shall be enjoined as above provided.

REPORTS.

SEC. 26. That all corporations formed under this act shall make to the Interstate Commerce Commission such reports as are now by law required to be made to said Commission, and such further reports as the rules of said Commission shall from time to time require.

DISSOLUTION.

SEC. 27. That any such corporation may, after lawful private or public sale of the railway property and equipment, upon the vote of three-fourths of its capital stock, wind up and close its business and dissolve under such forms of procedure as to claims, distribution of assets, notice to creditors, publication of votes and certificates of dissolution, as may be prescribed by the rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

EMINENT DOMAIN.

SEC. 28. That any corporation organized under this act may acquire real estate necessary for the proper execution of its corporate purposes, including right of way, sidings, terminals, depots, water rights, gravel, and stone. In case the corporation and the owner of such real estate are unable to agree upon a price therefor and the same can not be acquired by agreement, the corporation may apply to any competent court in the State or Territory where such property is located for the appointment of appraisers, and upon reasonable notice the judge of said court shall appoint three appraisers, who shall be sworn, and shall view the premises and estimate all the damages that may arise to any person from the taking and occupation of such real estate for railroad purposes. The appraisers shall return an appraisal of such damages in writing, signed by them, to the clerk of said court, and when accepted by said judge and recorded by said clerk it shall have the effect of a judgment in favor of the persons respectively to whom damages may be appraised and in favor of said corporation by way of transfer of the title of said real estate to such corporation: Provided, That no title shall so pass nor shall such real estate be occupied for purposes of construction or operation until the damages appraised to any person interested shall have been paid, or shall have been deposited for his use with the clerk of such court. Forms of notice of acts done, and method of procedure under this section, may be prescribed by the rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission in accordance with the provisions of this section.

TAXATION.

SEC. 29. That railroads and navigation lines owned by corporations duly organized under this act are hereby declared to be instrumentalities for the regulation of interstate and foreign commerce. The franchises, stocks, bonds, fixed evidences of indebtedness, operations and traffic, and the corporation itself shall not be subject to taxation by any State or Territory, but the physical property of such corporation situate in a State or Territory, including its right of way, its real estate, stations, office buildings and equipment shall be subject to assessment at such average percentage of their actual value as shall be customary with reference to other property in such State or Territory, and to the customary tax on such assessment. In lieu of such tax any State or Territory may impose a tax not exceeding 4 per cent on such proportion of the gross receipts of such corporation as the number of miles of line in such State or Territory bear to the total miles of line operated by such corporation. In estimating the miles of line each mile of second track shall be regarded as equal to one-half mile of track, and each mile of third or fourth track shall be estimated as equal to one-third of each mile of main track. For the purposes of each State the Interstate Commerce Commission shall certify to the taxing authorities of each State or Territory the gross receipts for the preceding year, the total mileage as aforesaid, and the proportion of such total mileage operated in such State or Territory.

STATE POLICE AND STATE RATES.

SEC. 30. That nothing herein contained shall be construed as interfering with the police laws of any State regarding railroads incorporated under this act and operating in such States, nor shall anything herein contained be construed as affecting the right and power of each State to regulate purely State commerce on railroads organized under this act. But the Interstate Commerce Commission shall hold conferences from time to time with the regulating power of any State with a view to such harmonious adjustment and regulation of State commerce and interstate commerce as will protect the public against abuses or extortion, and the railroads against inadequate returns upon their investment, and as will promote the efficiency of such corporations as common carriers. With such end in view the said Commission shall call and hold at least once each year a conference with the railroad commissioners of the several States, and with such other State officers having any duty of supervision, taxation, or regulation of railroads within their respective States. Such conference shall be held in the District of Columbia, and the presiding officer at such conference shall be the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, or some other member of said Commission designated by its chairman. The proceedings of such conference shall be printed and distributed by or under the direction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

ACQUISITION OF STATE RAILROADS.

SEC. 31. That such corporation may, with the consent of any State, upon the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, acquire the railroad of any corporation now organized under the laws of such State, and may issue for the purchase thereof such amount of bonds and stock as may be authorized by said Commission, but such authorization shall only be made after a full public hearing, at which the Attorney-General shall appear, either personally or by one of his assistants, and no issue of bonds or stock therefor shall exceed the value of such road as ascertained by said Commission.

With the consent of the State under which any railroad corporation is or may be organized, merger between the corporation owning such road and a corporation organized under this act may be accomplished under this act; and bonds and stock may be issued by any corporation organized under this act for such purpose, provided such proposed merger is approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the amount of the bonds issued, together with the rate of interest thereon, and of the stock issued in the accomplishment of such merger, are also approved by said Commission.

PENSIONS.

SEC. 32. That it shall be a condition of the grant and continuance of any franchise to do business under this act that the corporation holding such franchise shall set aside annually a percentage of the gross receipts of said corporation, not exceeding 1 per cent, to be held as a fund in the Treasury of the United States for the payment of pensions to the employees of such corporation who shall have been disqualified for active service either by injury in the service or by age. The conditions entitling employees to pensions, the amount and time of payment, the investment of the fund, the disbursing of the same, and the entire management thereof, shall be under rules and regulations to be made, and from time to time amended, by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

BOARD OF CONCILIATION.

SEC. 33. That the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby empowered and directed to act as a board of conciliation between corporations organized under this act and their employees as to any dispute arising between such corporation and their employees in the matter of compensation, hours, and conditions of labor, the protection of life and limb of said employees, and such power shall be exercised by said Commission in accordance with the rules and regulations to be made, and from time to time altered by said Commission. All powers and duties now exercised by the Chairman of said Commission and the Commissioner of Labor under the act entitled "An act concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employees," approved June 1, 1898, are hereby transferred to, vested in, and required of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

PENALTIES.

SEC. 34. That any officer, director, or agent of such corporation who shall be engaged in promoting or opposing any legislation or governmental action, either Federal or State, shall from time to time make oaths to the Interstate Commerce Commission to a statement of his expenditures in that behalf. No corporation organized under this act shall make any expenditure whatever for the purpose of aiding or defeating any political party or candidate for office, and for every such offense such corporation shall be subject to a fine of ——— dollars.

Any officer, director, or agent of such corporation who shall willfully make, assist in making, cause or direct to be made any false statement, material misrepresentation, or false entry in any book, report, return, account, or certificate required by or under this act to be kept, shall be, upon conviction, subject to a fine of not more than ——— dollars, or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, and shall furthermore be liable in a civil action for damages caused to any creditor or stockholder thereby.

Any officer, director, or agent of such corporation who shall willfully refuse or neglect to perform any duty imposed upon him by this act, for which refusal or neglect a penalty is not herein otherwise expressly provided, shall be subject, upon conviction, to a fine of not more than $5,000 or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

Any corporation organized under this act which shall fail to conform to and comply with any of the requirements, or observe any of the prohibitions, in this act contained, shall be subject, upon conviction, to a fine of not less than ——— dollars nor more than ——— dollars, and each day of the continuance of such failure shall be deemed a separate offense.

All fines collected under this act shall be paid into the pension fund herein provided.

JURISDICTION OF SUITS BY AND AGAINST RAILWAY COMPANIES.

SEC. 35. That any corporation organized under this act shall, for the purpose of all actions by or against it, real, personal, or mixed, and all suits in equity, be deemed a citizen of every State in which its lines are located, and in such cases circuit and district courts of the United States shall not have jurisdiction other than such as they would have in cases between individual citizens of the same State. The provisions of this section shall not be held to affect the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States in cases by the United States, or by direction of an officer therein, or cases for winding up the affairs of any such corporation.

Any case involving the recovery of fines or penalties under this act may be brought in the circuit court of the United States for any judicial district wherein the corporation has its principal office or through which the line or any part thereof may run. In every such case, for the purposes thereof, the jurisdiction of the court shall be coextensive with the territory of the United States, and its writs of subpœna, removal of persons, execution, and all other process, shall run throughout the United States. All existing laws pertaining to the taking and compelling of testimony in cases arising under the act to regulate commerce, or its amendments, shall apply in cases arising under this act.

APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER AND ANNULMENT OF CHARTER.

SEC. 36. That in case the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have reason to believe that any corporation organized under this act has been guilty of the violation of any of its provisions, or of said act to regulate commerce and the acts amendatory thereof, said Commission may apply to any circuit court of the United States through whose jurisdiction any part of the railroad operated by said corporation shall run for the appointment of a receiver by said court for said corporation; and such circuit court shall have power to appoint such receiver in case said court shall find said corporation so guilty of a violation of this act, and shall make such orders and continue said receivership for such time as in the opinion of the court will best prevent the continuation of such violation; and any such circuit court shall have power upon application by the Interstate Commerce Commission to annul and revoke the charter of any corporation organized under this act for continued violation of the terms of said act.

RULES.

SEC. 37. That the Interstate Commerce Commission shall make and from time to time alter, amend, or repeal rules necessary for the complete enforcement of the provisions of this act.

AMENDMENT OR REPEAL.

SEC. 38. That this act and all franchises required under it shall be at all times subject to amendment, alteration, or repeal by act of Congress.

A bill (S. 4471) creating a commission to consider and recommend legislation relating to the incorporation of common carriers engaged in commerce between the States and foreign countries, and for preventing the overcapitalization of such corporations, and for promoting a uniform method of taxing the property and securities of such corporations, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created to be composed as follows: Five members of the Senate of the United States and five members of the House of Representatives of the United States, to be appointed by the presiding officer of each House of Congress, respectively: Provided, That not more than three of said members of the Senate and not more than three of said members of the House of Representatives shall be members of the same party.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of this commission to investigate and report to the Congress on or before the 1st day of its next session what legislation, if any, is desirable for the incorporation or consolidation of common carriers engaged in commerce between the States or with foreign nations, and also what legislation, if any, is desirable for the prevention of overcapitalization by such carriers, and what legislation, if any, is desirable for the purpose of securing a just and uniform method of taxing the property and securities of such common carriers by the various States, and what legislation, if any, is desirable for the purpose of insuring the employees of such carriers against the risks incident to their employment, and what legislation, if any, is desirable for the purpose of securing the conciliation of disputes between such common carriers and their employees.

SEC. 3. That the commission shall give reasonable times for hearings, if deemed necessary, and if necessary it may appoint a subcommission or subcommissions of its own members to make any investigation in any part of the United States, and it shall be allowed actual necessary expenses for the same. It shall have the authority to send for the persons and papers and to administer oaths and affirmations. All necessary expenses, including clerks, stenographers, messengers, rent for place of meeting, and printing and stationery, shall be paid from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; however, not to exceed $5,000 for expenditure under this section, to be paid upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the commission.

SEC. 4. That any vacancies occurring in the commission, by reason of death, disability, or from other cause, shall be filled by appointment by the officer and in the same manner as was the member whose retirement from the commission creates the vacancy.

Mr. CARMACK. On what page of the bill are we now? I desire to offer an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On page 31. Section 9 has been read and is open to amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senator from Tennessee to allow the reading of the bill to be completed. Then his amendment will be in order.

Mr. CARMACK. Very well. I want to offer an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 10. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed, but the amendments herein provided for shall not affect causes now pending in courts of the United States, but such causes shall be prosecuted to a conclusion in the manner heretofore provided by law.

SEC. 11. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill has been completed. The bill is still before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. CARMACK. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to come in after section 7. I call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After section 7 it is proposed to insert the following:

That any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company receiving property for transportation from a point in one State to a point in another State shall issue a receipt or bill of lading therefor and shall be liable to the holder thereof for any loss, damage, or injury to such property caused by it or by any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company to which such property may be delivered or over whose line or lines such property may pass, and no contract, receipt, rule, or regulation shall exempt such common carrier, railroad, or transportation company from the liability hereby imposed: Provided, That nothing in this section shall deprive any holder of such receipt or bill of lading of any remedy or right of action which he has under existing law.

That the common carrier, railroad, or transportation company issuing such receipt or bill of lading shall be entitled to recover from the common carrier, railroad, or transportation company through whose negligence the loss, damage, or injury shall have been sustained the amount of such loss, damage, or injury as it may be required to pay to the owners of such property.

Mr. CARMACK. The numbering of the section will have to be changed.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I will say that this is one of the amendments upon which the committee agreed, but which we never inserted in the bill for the simple reason that we never inserted any amendment in the bill. We got into a deadlock.

Mr. KEAN. This was an amendment agreed to by the committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. I know the committee agreed to it unanimously, and I hope it will go on the bill.

Mr. KEAN. I hope it will go on the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK].

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. PILES obtained the floor.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have a motion that I desire to make.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. PILES. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. I rose, Mr. President, to press the motion that I made to reconsider the first amendment that was adopted. Am I recognized for that purpose?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Washington to yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. PILES. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will take my own time on that, but I want to be recognized for that purpose by the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Illinois later.

Mr. PILES. I desire to propose an amendment to section 1 of the reprint of the bill of the 14th instant. On page 4, line 24, after the word "commodity," I move to amend by inserting "other than timber and the manufactured products thereof."

Mr. ALDRICH. That amendment is not in order now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's amendment will be in order when the bill is in the Senate.

Mr. PILES. Very well.

Mr. HOPKINS obtained the floor.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator from Illinois to yield to me for a moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator from Washington if he will not reserve his amendment until the bill gets into the Senate?

Mr. PILES. I ask permission to reserve the amendment when the bill gets into the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request of the Senator from Washington will be noted.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I should like to have the Secretary read the amendment which I have moved to reconsider.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. On page 1 of the bill, after the words "apply to," at the end of line 6, the following amendment was inserted:

Any corporation or any person or persons engaged in the transportation of oil or other commodity, except water and except natural or artificial gas by means of pipe lines or partly by pipe lines and partly by railroad or partly by pipe lines and partly by water, at any place within the jurisdiction or within the governmental authority of the United States, who shall be considered and held to be common carriers within the meaning and purpose of this act, and to.

Mr. HOPKINS. Senators will remember that when this amendment was first proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] it did not contain the words commencing with "governmental authority," on line 4 of page 2. That is an amendment to the amendment, which was proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. LODGE. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the amendment of the Senator from Alabama begins with the words "at any place within the jurisdiction."

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; that is right. So that that amendment not only makes common carriers of the pipe lines within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, but carries it to the Philippines, to Porto Rico, to the Isthmus of Panama, and to the Hawaiian Islands.

Now, I think all will agree that many of the amendments which have been adopted to this bill are of a proper character and have improved the efficiency of the bill, if it shall be enacted into law. But this amendment, as it was amended on motion of the Senator from Alabama, illustrates how easy it is to go too far with amendments.

Prior to this bill being considered by the Senate, the Union Oil Company of California, an independent oil corporation of that State, had entered into negotiations with the Secretary of War, under the approval of the President of the United States, to lay an oil pipe line across the Isthmus. This company owns large oil-producing lands in the State of California. It is a competitor with the Standard Oil Company in that section of the country. But owing to the charges of transportation, it was utterly impossible for it to come in competition in the Middle West and in the Eastern and New England States with the Standard Oil Company and other companies of the East, so it entered into the negotiations to construct this pipe line across the Isthmus.

After that arrangement had been made with the President of the United States, it spent about $2,000,000 for tank vessels, so as to have a fleet of tank vessels to carry the crude product from the Pacific coast to the Isthmus, and another fleet from Colon to the Atlantic and southern ports of the United States. The adoption of this amendment makes this pipe line a common carrier, and as it was originally adopted it gives the Standard Oil Company the same right to use the pipe line across the Isthmus that the independent company of California will have.

This question of making the line across the Isthmus a common carrier was raised before the Secretary of War and a full conference was had upon the subject. It was pointed out at the time the negotiations were had that to make it a common carrier would destroy the influence of this company in competition with the Standard Oil Company along the Atlantic coast. Not only that, but this company agreed to pay $500 a month for the privilege of crossing the Isthmus, and if the Standard Oil Company should have the privilege that the Union Company has of using the pipe line the independent company would not only be out the half million dollars which it cost it to establish the pipe line and the $2,000,000 to establish the tank fleet, but it would be out $500 a month which it has to pay to the Government. The Secretary of War is very anxious that this amendment shall be reconsidered and the provision making the pipe line a common carrier shall be eliminated from the amendment.

But these are not all of the misfortunes that have befallen this company since it entered into negotiations with the President. At the instance of the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], after the amendment was adopted making all pipe lines common carriers an amendment was adopted providing that in the near future no common carrier can carry coal or other natural products owned or in which it may be directly or indirectly interested except such as are necessary for the conduct of its own business. So if the amendments which have been adopted by the Senate stand and if such a construction is placed upon the amendment relating to coal and other natural products offered by the Senator from West Virginia by the courts as the Senate evidently intends the condition of this company would be this: At an expense of $2,000,000 it has established its tank fleets to ply from the Pacific coast to the Isthmus and from the Isthmus to the Atlantic coast and has paid $500,000 to establish the pipe line across the Isthmus, and under this amendment it is prohibited from conveying a barrel of oil either in its tank vessels or across the Isthmus and this great plant is placed at the disposal of the Standard Oil Company and other independent companies. In order to show the wishes of the Secretary of War upon the subject, I ask to have read a letter which he sent me the other day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read, if there is no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 10, 1906.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I sincerely hope that the provision which has been recently made an amendment to the rate bill requiring that any pipe line for the conveyance of oil from one side of the Isthmus of Panama to the other shall be a common carrier will not ultimately become part of the act. An examination of the evidence taken before the Interoceanic Canals Committee will show the facts with respect to the license already issued to the Union Oil Company, of California, for the construction of a pipe line (pp. 2573–2574, and Exhibit No. 27, pp. 2688–2703).

The facts are, the Union Oil Company is an independent oil company owning a very large tract of oil land in California from which it obtains a fine quality of crude oil. It is anxious to ship this oil from California to New York, by way of the Isthmus, on tank steamers on both oceans. It has made contracts for the tank steamers and is about to erect an oil refinery in New York to enable it to compete with the Standard Oil Company in the sale of oil in the East. Our engines upon the Isthmus are not now arranged for the consumption of oil, but Chief Engineer Stevens has reported to me that in the near future it will be profitable to make the change. He has also reported that there is room enough on the Isthmus for six or seven pipe lines. It is not intended to allow these pipe lines to cross the bridges or the trestles of the railroad company. I am informed that if oil can be furnished us at 90 cents a barrel this will be the equivalent of coal of varying steaming qualities at prices between $3.24 and $4 per ton. I have been glad to recommend to the President the granting to the Union Oil Company of a revocable license, which in terms is nonexclusive, at a compensation, to be paid to the Zone government, of $500 per month, to be used for school purposes, to erect and maintain a pipe line from one end of the Zone to the other, with a condition that whenever the Government wishes to call upon the company it must furnish crude oil at a maximum price of 90 cents a barrel. The Government, by virtue of this license, is under no obligation to take oil at all from the company and has full opportunity to invite competition from all other persons willing to deliver oil upon the Isthmus, whether they have a pipe line or not. The line can be removed by the Commission at any time. The Union Oil Company has a license of a similar character from the Panama Government, and it proposes to erect its tanks and pumps in Panama or Colon, within the jurisdiction of the Panama Government. Its pipes are now on the Isthmus, and, as already said, its contracts for tank steamers have already been let.

Two companies of California, associated with the Standard Oil Company, asked that the Union Oil Company be compelled to make its line a common carrier. I submitted this proposition to the Union Oil Company, and its reply was, first, that they would need the pipe for constant transportation of their own oil, and, second, that as under such a requirement different qualities of oil would have to be introduced into the pipe, the pipe would have to be cleaned after the use of one quality in order that the next kind of oil pumped might not be affected in value and quality. The letter on this subject may be seen in the evidence already referred to.

Upon the statement of the Union Oil Company, and for reasons I am about to give, I recommended to the President that the application to make the pipe of the Union Oil Company a common carrier be not granted. As an alternative, however, I notified the two companies associated with the Standard Oil Company that there was room for six or seven pipes upon the Isthmus, and that the President would grant to them a franchise of exactly the same character as that granted to the Union Oil Company, and I may add that I said to them verbally that if they could not get a satisfactory franchise from the Panama Government, they might place all their plant, including pumps and tank houses, in the Zone. I also said to them, with the permission of the President, that if they wished to make their pipe a common carrier they could have that privilege. In response to an inquiry made by Mr. Lindon W. Bates, on behalf of the Texas oil producers, I notified him that if the Texas oil producers, or any other persons, desired to construct a pipe across the Isthmus under the same terms as those given by the Union Oil Company, they might have such a revocable license.

What I am very anxious to secure is the construction of two or three pipe lines across the Isthmus, in order that we may have real competition in the furnishing of oil to aid us in our fuel needs on the Isthmus, and I wish in addition and incidentally to facilitate as far as possible the cheap transportation of crude oil from one side of the Isthmus to the other, whether from the Atlantic side to the Pacific or from the Pacific to the Atlantic.

I think that a mandatory provision requiring every pipe line to be a common carrier across the Isthmus will probably prevent the construction of any. Certainly it will prevent the construction of more than one, and I am quite sure that one, though declared to be a common carrier, will not secure the actual competition which two pipes would bring about. The wisdom of a provision of law declaring that a pipe line in this country shall be made a common carrier between States is wholly aside from the point, for it is not at all analogous to the one I am discussing. The pipe lines constructed in the States are pipe lines under permanent franchises, much more likely to invite investment of capital than a mere revocable license. The conditions on the Isthmus are, of course, entirely unsettled, and the operations with respect to the transportation of oil by pipe line and its use for consumption on the Isthmus, and for transportation in tank steamers to and from the Isthmus, are altogether experimental. It seems to me that temporarily at least the matter might be left to the Executive. If it becomes wise to require that these pipe lines be made common carriers in the future, the President may effect this result under the revocable license by withdrawing the license unless the change is made, or it may be done by act of Congress, but, with deference, I think it ought for the present to be left to the President's discretion to say when the occasion has arisen for the change.

Very sincerely, yours, WM. H. TAFT.

Hon. A. J. HOPKINS,
United States Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I wish to inquire what is the precise motion of the Senator from Illinois?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the first amendment in the bill, found at the foot of page 1 and the top of page 2.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] putting all pipe lines in the United States upon the footing of common carriers.

I offered an amendment to that amendment that that law should apply to every part of the United States and to every country over which the United States has the exclusive right of jurisdiction and government. The Senator from Massachusetts accepted my amendment and it went in, of course, with his and was adopted by the Senate. I have no special interest at all in the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts putting pipe lines on the footing of common carriers. I do not know whether the Senator wants to abandon his entire amendment. Does the Senator from Massachusetts adhere to his amendment?

Mr. LODGE. I have now no control over the words of this amendment.

Mr. FLINT (to Mr. MORGAN). The only purpose is to strike out your amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I have no disposition to abandon it. I certainly shall not abandon that clause without a struggle.

Mr. MORGAN. I want to know whether the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois is to strike out the words that I suggested to the Senator from Massachusetts and which he accepted as a part of his amendment?

Mr. HOPKINS. My motion is to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

Mr. MORGAN. The entire amendment?

Mr. HOPKINS. The entire amendment. That brings the matter back before the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I take it for granted the Senator from Illinois wants to reverse the action taken by the Senate in regard to making pipe lines common carriers and is opposed to the entire project. He does not want the Government of the United States to declare that pipe lines are common carriers and that they are subject to regulation as to rates by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Is that the situation? I do not know; I am not prepared to say that I have a firm conviction that the Senate has acted wisely or justly in requiring all pipe lines to become common carriers, even though they carry only their own products, which seems to be the effect of the amendment. I do not know that that is wise, but if the Senator from Illinois wishes to get rid of the entire amendment in that way I do not know that I have any objection to it.

Mr. HOPKINS. My purpose in moving a reconsideration of the vote and getting the amendment before the committee is to oppose the amendment the Senator from Alabama offered to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. I asked him to accept the qualification in respect to the language; that is all.

Mr. HOPKINS. The language that the Senator had ingrafted on the amendment is the language I desire to have eliminated from it.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I understand the Senator from Illinois to be trying to get rid of the effect of this legislation on the part of the Senate, and that he does so in favor of a special and particular transaction on the Isthmus. That is what I understand him to be trying to do. While we make all other pipe lines in the United States common carriers, there is one pet on the Isthmus which is not to be put on that footing. I have been nurturing that pet for a little while. It comes as near being a case of graft as any ever presented to this body, and at another time and on another bill that subject will be fully presented.

The record contains the evidence of the entire transaction, and it has an oily smell about it; I might even say a fishy smell. The President of the United States has no right under any law of Congress to grant to anybody a concession for a pipe line in the Canal Zone. If that sort of property, that sort of privilege, that sort of concession can be conferred at all under the Constitution of the United States, in favor of a particular individual, in such manner and on such terms as to exclude all other people, Congress alone can do it, which I deny; and the President of the United States has no power, under any act of Congress of which I am aware, at least, to make such a grant of a peculiar privilege in favor of one of his friends on the Isthmus.

I will content myself on this occasion by putting in the RECORD of the proceedings before the Senate the entire correspondence that took place between the President, by the Secretary of State, and the various applicants for privileges of that kind across the Isthmus. There were several of them. The privilege was granted to one, and the others were excluded, for the reason that the amount of money required to put up a plant for a pipe line is a pretty large one; and these other gentlemen, from Texas, and also on the other side of the continent, on the Pacific side, and ranging even up here into the Allegheny country, objected that anyone should be selected to enjoy this privilege under such terms and conditions as would exclude others.

The Government of Panama grants the privilege of putting up the pumping stations and the tanks within the cities of Colon and Panama. The Government of the United States can not control that. So the Union Oil Company, of California, has nothing to do but to get authority to lay a pipe line across the Isthmus, on the cross-ties of the railroad, and bring its oil across and shut out the balance of the world, because the cost of the privilges is very heavy, in the first place, and secondly, because the balance of the world has to get from Panama a privilege for its pumping stations. The Secretary of War says he is willing that the next people who come along shall put their pumping stations inside the Canal Zone. The Secretary of War has nothing to do with that business. It can not be done without an act of Congress. No such power as that is conferred upon the President. The President has no right to grant to a man the privilege to mine gold in the Canal Zone or to mine coal there, or to cut timber there, or to do anything else. His only duty there is to build the canal. No power of that sort has been conferred upon the President, and it is a sheer usurpation of power; that is all.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. MORGAN. Wait a moment. This is one amongst a number of like transactions that will be brought in review before the Senate of the United States and will at last, I hope, convince the Senate that there is some necessity after all for exercising the powers of Congress in the Isthmus instead of leaving it to the unfettered will of the President of the United States.

Now, that is the question. It is a matter of no concern to me whether this amendment be put on the bill or not. If it is voted down, of course that does not preclude the Senate upon a proper bill connected with the Canal Zone from putting it on and having justice done to all the oil producers in the United States, in the Atlantic country and also in the Pacific country. There has been such anxiety, there has been so much writing done about this matter, there has been such a keen desire to prevent justice being done to all the people of the United States in this case that I can not help suspecting that there is something behind it that we do not know about. It is a very extraordinary transaction, and it seems you can not touch anything that has been done in that Isthmus in favor of any particular person or in favor of any particular clique of persons or in favor of the Panama people or in favor of the Panama Government without getting up a tremendous howl about it.

I am willing that this shall pass off for the present. I do not care whether it goes on the bill or not. I have no particular preference for the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, because I think in some cases it will perhaps operate to do wrong. But I want to put these papers in the RECORD; and I can say it to his credit that the first man on the Isthmus to raise any opposition to this was Mr. Shonts. Mr. Shonts has been overruled by the President and the Secretary of War. He has to go under. He did not want this thing attempted.

Mr. FLINT. I should like to ask the Senator whether he has made investigation to ascertain whether the Union Oil Company is not, as a matter of fact, an independent oil company, and whether those who are trying to stop the adoption of this amendment making the pipe line a common carrier are not the Standard Oil Company's representatives on the Pacific coast?

Mr. MORGAN. I never thought it worth while to go into any controversy between the Union Oil Company and the Standard Oil Company to find out what was just and proper to be done by the Government of the United States. You may say "Standard Oil Company" with a view of bringing odium upon a claim advanced by that company, but it does not affect me. The Union Oil Company is said to be an independent company. Independent of what and whom?

Mr. FLINT. Independent of the trust.

Mr. MORGAN. Of the trust? What trust?

Mr. FLINT. The oil trust on the Pacific coast.

Mr. MORGAN. On the Pacific coast? We are then trying to break up a trust over there. I do not know how far we will go. We are exploring a very wide and unexplored, almost unknowable, field. Men come to me and tell me there is a certain renowned individual in the diplomacy, in the finances, in the management of all this business, who is to be the chief beneficiary of this action. I will not call his name. It is not necessary to do it. I do not know whether that is true, but I intend to find out, if there is any power in the United States to force men to speak the truth—men who refuse on all occasions to talk when you put a question to them that is calculated to bring the truth out of them. I expect to prosecute that to a proper conclusion.

But I am not affected by the question whether this is in favor of the Standard Oil Company or the alleged trust on the Pacific coast. All I know about it is this: I have not yet heard that any of the Beaumont people in Texas, or any of the oil producers down South, have been combined into any trust whatever. They have protested against this. They are protesting now. They say to take the Canal Zone and make it the location of a peculiar, extraordinary, and exclusive privilege in favor of a particular company, because it calls itself "independent," on the other side of the continent, is rather treating them with injustice. The Beaumont people want justice here. The people of the United States want to grant them justice, and to grant everybody justice, and grant no special favors to certain favored individuals.

Mr. President, I will ask to have inserted in the RECORD the history of this matter as it has been developed on examinations by the Interoceanic Canals Committee, contained on pages 817 to 827 of the reported proceedings of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Alabama? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HIGGINS OIL AND FUEL COMPANY,
Beaumont, Tex., July 15, 1905.

ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION,
Mr. W. LEON PEPPERMAN,
Assistant Chief, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of the 7th instant, with regard to the use of crude petroleum oil for fuel purposes in the construction of the canal across the Isthmus, will say that we shall be pleased to name you prices on this oil, for six months' or a year's supply f. o. b. ship, Sabine, Tex., where vessels drawing as much as 23 feet of water can load, but as we have not a boat large enough to send to Colon, and not knowing whether a foreign tank steamer would be allowed to deliver oil there or not (on which a much lower rate of freight could be secured), we would suggest that you arrange for the transportation yourself, and put up your own tank (which if any oil company did they would certainly take into consideration the cost of the same in naming you a price, and also a profit on the freight, while, on the other hand, if you made your own freight arrangements and built your own tank you would get it at exactly cost, and would also enable you to get better competitive prices for oil at this end of the line).

Trusting that we may hear from you whenever you are in the market, we are,

Yours, truly, HIGGINS OIL AND FUEL COMPANY,
By C. L. WALLIS, General Manager.

ISTHMIAN CANAL AFFAIRS,
OFFICE OF ADMINISTRATION, PANAMA CANAL BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., July 7, 1905.

SIR: By direction of the chairman of the Isthmian Canal Commission, I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of June 19 to Mr. Wallace, stating that you wish to contract to furnish oil for use as fuel on the Isthmus of Panama.

In reply, you are respectfully informed that the Commission is now considering the question of the advisability of using oil for fuel on the Isthmus, and also of the construction of a pipe line. Several different parties have made propositions to construct tanks or pipe lines and furnish oil, and they have been advised to visit the Isthmus in order to inform themselves as to the conditions there, preparatory to submitting their propositions in full.

Before any contract is made, however, proposals will be invited, and everyone interested will be given an opportunity to bid, should it be finally decided to use oil for the purpose stated.

Very respectfully,

W. LEON PEPPERMAN,
Assistant Chief.

C. L. WALLIS,
General Manager Higgins Oil and Fuel Co.,

HIGGINS OIL AND FUEL COMPANY,
Beaumont, Tex., June 19, 1905.

Mr. WALLACE,
Chief Engineer Panama Canal Construction,
(Care of The Panama Canal Commission),
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We understand that you recently asked for bids on 50,000 tons of coal, and in this connection permit us to call your attention to the fact that this section of the country is producing crude petroleum oil at the rate of about 150,000 barrels per day, and which is used, nearly altogether, in Texas and Louisiana for fuel by the various railroad companies and by steamers and tugs plying along the coast, and also by the contractors who dig the canal and are raising the grade of the city of Galveston about 16 feet by means of dredges.

Our oil ranges in gravity from 17° to 24° Baume and it is reckoned that 3½ to 4 barrels of oil equals a ton of the best bituminous lump coal.

The market price of this oil f. o. b. ship, in bulk, at Port Arthur or Sabine, Tex., at the present time, is 50 to 55 cents per barrel of 42 gallons, for spot shipments. At present we are not in a position to name you a delivered price at Panama, as we do not own a steamer large enough to send that far away from here that would carry enough to justify going. However, there are plenty of foreign tank ships that we could get on a low charter if we could get the business. We were offered an American tank bottom at a charter of 35 cents per barrel from Port Arthur or Sabine to Panama, but she will not be available until about October 31. We have no doubt but what a foreign bottom could be secured at a much less price. It would cost, approximately, about $13,000 or $14,000 to put up a 55,000 barrel steel tank at Panama, if no piling foundation was required and the tank was set on the ground, as we put them up here. If we had a steady contract, or enough business to justify it, if the Government would not put up a tank at Panama, and we could secure a 5 or 10 acre site on deep water with free wharf and landing privileges, we might put up a tank there ourselves, if we got the Government contract, which we have here at Sabine, Tex., for their deep-water dredge boat.

There is a great saving in burning oil on railroad trains and on marine outfits, as you save a great deal in the cost of hauling, in the way of firemen and stokers, and you also gain about 20 per cent in boiler capacity, as the oil makes so much hotter and steadier fire, and when you are through with it you cut it off and there is no coal burning and going to waste for hours afterwards in your furnace.

You can, no doubt, get six and twelve months' contract for furnishing oil, but this, of course, would cost a little more than spot shipments for immediate delivery as named above.

If the above subject interests you, will be pleased to take the matter up further with you.

Yours, truly,

HIGGINS OIL AND FUEL CO.,
By C. L. WALLIS,
General Manager.

GULF REFINING COMPANY,
Pittsburg, Pa., June 9, 1905.

THEO. P. SHONTS, Esq.,
CHAS. A. MAGOON, Esq.,
J. F. WALLACE, Esq.,
Executive Committee Isthmian Canal Commission,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: As the Government will undoubtedly be a large consumer of fuel for the operation of its railroad and steam dredges on the Isthmus of Panama and in the various power plants used in connection with the building of the Panama Canal, we wish to respectfully bring to your attention the subect of the use of Texas petroleum as fuel instead of coal.

The location of the Texas field and the large production of oil in that locality, amounting last year, in round numbers, to 26,000,000 barrels, makes it possible to compete successfully with coal as a fuel on the Isthmus, with an annual saving of many thousand dollars to the Government.

In order that you may readily understand that this company is entirely independent of the Standard Oil Company, or any combination to control the price of crude oil, I give you below a list of our officials and directors.

Officials of the J. M. Guffey Petroleum Company: J. M. Guffey, president; W. L. Mellon, vice-president; R. B. Mellon, treasurer; C. F. Farren, secretary.

Directors of the J. M. Guffey Petroleum Company: J. M. Guffey, capitalist, Pittsburg; J. H. Reed, chairman Carnegie Steel Company; Pierre Jay, vice-president Old Colony Trust Company, Boston, Mass.; R. H. Baker, general agent Equitable Life, Texas; R. A. Greer, attorney, Beaumont; D. M. Clemson, Carnegie Steel Company; W. W. Blackburn, treasurer Carnegie Steel Company; T. H. Given, president Farmers' Deposit National Bank, Pittsburg; Joshua Rhodes, capitalist, Pittsburg; W. L. Mellon, Mellon National Bank, Pittsburg; A. W. Mellon, Mellon National Bank, Pittsburg; R. B. Mellon, Mellon National Bank, Pittsburg; C. H. Markham, formerly general manager Southern Pacific Railway, now general manager Guffey company.

Officials of the Gulf Refining Company: J. M. Guffey, president; W. L. Mellon, vice-president; R. B. Mellon, treasurer; C. F. Farren, secretary.

Directors of the Gulf Refining Company: J. M. Guffey, capitalist, Pittsburg; J. H. Reed, chairman Carnegie Steel Company; D. M. Clemson, Carnegie Steel Company; T. H. Given, president Farmers' Deposit National Bank, Pittsburg; R. B. Mellon, Mellon National Bank, Pittsburg; W. L. Mellon, Mellon National Bank, Pittsburg; R. A. Greer, attorney, Beaumont, Tex.

Most of these gentlemen are well known in the financial world, and their connection with our enterprise is a sufficient guaranty of our ability to carry to a successful conclusion any contract that we may enter into.

This company, in connection with the J. M. Guffey Petroleum Company, is the most thoroughly equipped independent oil company in the world, they having a combined capital of $15,750,000. The Guffey company is the largest producing and pipe-line company in the Texas field, and the Gulf company owns and operates, at Port Arthur, Tex., the largest independent refinery in the world. In addition to this and our docking facilities we own and operate, exclusive of chartered vessels, a large fleet of tank steamers and barges, which I enumerate below, giving you the capacity, in barrels, of each vessel:

	Barrels.
Steamship Larimer	33,500
Steamship Ligonier	33,500
Steamship J. M. Guffey	25,000
Steamship Cantania	25,000
Steamship Winnifred	25,000
Barge Conneaut	17,000
Barge Conemaugh	17,000
Barge Shenango	25,000

In addition to having a large production of our own, we do a general pipe-line business in the State of Texas, purchasing oil from the many small producers.

We are carrying in storage to-day between six and seven million barrels of crude oil.

I simply mention the above facts concerning our companies so that you may readily see that you are asked to deal with a company that has ample facilities for carrying out a contract, no matter how large.

You are doubtless familiar with the fact that liquid fuel is being used largely at the present time by many industrial plants in the South and on the Atlantic seaboard, and by some of the southern and western railroads, notably the Southern Pacific, the Kansas City Southern, and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad, as well as the British Admiralty.

While you are no doubt in position to get reliable statistics, which will enable you to make an accurate comparison with coal, I have taken the liberty of quoting from a lecture delivered before the Franklin Institute in Philadelphia by Dr. Charles B. Dudley, chemist of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, in which he gives the following tables showing the relative value of oil and coal, based on exhaustive experiments made by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company under his direction:

Relative value of coal and oil, fuel account alone considered.

Oil per barrel:	Equal to coal per ton.
$0.20	$0.74
.70	2.61
1.00	3.73
1.10	4.10
1.20	4.47
1.30	4.85
1.40	5.22
1.50	5.59
1.60	5.97
1.70	6.34
1.80	6.71
1.90	7.08
2.00	7.45

Relative value of coal and oil, all ascertained economies considered.

Oil per barrel at—	Equal to coal per ton.
$0.20	$0.65
.30	.98
.70	2.28

1.60	5.22
1.80	5.87
2.00	6.52

It will be observed that these figures are based on oil weighing 7.3 pounds to the gallon, whereas Texas oil weighs from 7.67 to 7.78 pounds to the gallon, and as the heat is directly in proportion to the weight of the combustible, it is plain that a comparison of Texas oil with coal will make a much more favorable showing for oil than the above figures.

I quote from Mr. Dudley further, as follows:

"As will be described in detail later, there are certain chances for economy in burning oil that do not occur with coal. Of these there have been pretty well worked out, as just stated, economy in handling fuel and ashes, and economy in repairs to locomotives. The amount of these has been obtained in dollars and cents, and is, perhaps, best expressed by saying that, taking all ascertained economies into account, a pound of petroleum is as good as 2 pounds of coal."

The result of this and many other interesting experiments in this country and Europe has been compiled by the Baldwin Locomotive Works, of Philadelphia, in a little pamphlet on oil-burning locomotives entitled, "Record of Recent Construction, No. 37," copy of which I hand you herewith, trusting that it may be of interest to you in considering this subject.

You will note that Doctor Dudley recommends the use of reduced oil in preference to crude oil. We are in position to supply you with either grade, and will make prices per gallon, per barrel, or per ton, as may be more convenient and satisfactory to your Commission.

While, as a rule, we are loath to enter into long-time contracts, owing to the rapid change in the oil market, we understand fully that a change from coal-burning to oil-burning apparatus would involve a considerable expense to the Government, and that you would not care to consider a short-term contract; hence we are willing to enter into a contract at a fixed price, for a reasonable number of years, entirely sufficient for the economies obtained to make the expense of the equipment insignificant.

If, after considering this matter carefully, your Commission is of the opinion that, owing to the conditions surrounding the use of this fuel—that is, the cost of installation, ownership of same, etc.—it is not practicable to advertise for bids and let the contract in the usual way, we are willing to submit a proposition to supply you at a price and for a term to be agreed upon between us, we undertaking to erect tankage, lay pipe lines for the discharge of cargo into tanks on property donated by the Government or purchased by us, agreeing at the end of the contract period to turn over the entire installation at cost, plus a reasonable interest on the investment for the term of the contract, either to the Government or to the successful bidder, should we lose the contract.

Or if your Commission prefer to erect and own your own tankage, lay pipe lines for unloading ships, etc., we are willing to enter into contract for a period agreed upon for the delivery of the oil into the Government tanks.

It is not for the purpose of securing any preference in the consideration of this subject that the above suggestions are made. All we ask is a "square deal," and are willing to consider the matter on any basis suggested by your honorable Commission, relying on our superior facilities and strong financial position, backed by 7,000,000 barrels of oil in storage, to secure the contract.

After you have considered the matter carefully, I shall be glad to have an expression from your honorable body as to whether either of the plans suggested appear feasible, and if not, an outline of any plan that would meet your views, together with a statement of the approximate annual consumption of oil, or, if you do not have this data, the approximate consumption of coal, in tons. We can then, if necessary, send our representative to Colon to look over the field and consult with your engineer relative to site for the erection of tankage and to work out necessary details to enable us to submit proposition.

For your information will say that our ships draw from 22½ to 23½ feet of water, and it would require this depth to discharge cargoes without the expense of lightering.

I shall be glad to take the matter up with you personally at any time, giving you any information that you may desire concerning our company or its operations.

Yours, very truly,

GULF REFINING COMPANY,

THE TEXAS COMPANY, MARITIME BUILDING,
New York, May 23, 1905.

T. P. SHONTS, Esq.,
Chairman Isthmian Canal Commission,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Agreeable to your suggestion to put in writing our application for permission to establish a fuel-oil station in the Canal Zone we beg to submit the following:

As to our responsibility.—The Texas Company and its affiliated interests have been and are to-day the largest producers and shippers of fuel oil in the Southwest.

We have handled during the last two years upward of 12,000,000 barrels of oil, making cargo shipments as well as supplying the commercial trade and every railroad in our territory.

As to our plant, facilities, and equipment, we beg to refer to all of these railroad fuel-oil users, and more especially to the Santa Fe and International and Great Northern, which last-mentioned two railroads have been and are still looking to us for their entire fuel-oil requirements.

We feel confident that we are in the best position to furnish your fuel-oil requirements on account of our special facilities, the stocks of oil we carry, and the additional available supplies of such in our territory. As a freighting proposition it seems to us we have also a considerable advantage over either coal or Pacific coast oil.

As to our integrity, commercial standing, and financial ability, we would name the National Park Bank, Mr. J. J. Mitchell, president Illinois Trust and Saving Bank, and Mr. J. W. Gates. Will be pleased to furnish other references, if desired.

Application for fuel-oil station.—We respectfully solicit a lease or allotment of sufficient land within the Canal Zone for the erection of a station for fuel, illuminating, and lubricating oils, together with docking privileges and necessary rights of way for pipe lines from dock to tanks, etc., upon such terms as you may prescribe.

Understanding that you will leave New York for Colon on June 14, we will have our Mr. Thompson there at the same time, that he may answer any question as to technical details or other matters upon which you may desire information on the ground. He would also be prepared to advise with your engineering department as to best available location for proposed station.

Distribution of oil by tank cars or pipe lines.—If it is the intention to make distribution of fuel oil over your railway in your own tank cars, then a switch or track facilities for a tank-loading rack would also be necessary.

If you decide to distribute the fuel oil by pipe line, we would be prepared, upon being made acquainted with the physical conditions applying, to lay such lines or to assist you with specifications for the necessary equipment, that you might install these yourselves. We are thoroughly familiar with this kind of work.

Upon your favorable consideration of our application we are ready to proceed at once with the erection of a fuel-oil station of not less than 75,000 barrels capacity, being quite willing to take our chances of securing a contract for part or all of your fuel-oil requirements when you are prepared to place the same.

At any time you may be ready to take up this question we shall be prepared, when furnished with details and specifications as to quantity, time, manner, and point of delivery, to name a price on a one, two, or three year contract.

Yours, very truly,

THE TEXAS COMPANY,
J. S. CULLINAN, President.

THE TEXAS COMPANY,
MARITIME BUILDING, 8 BRIDGE STREET,
New York, September 21, 1905.

T. P. SHONTS, Esq.,
Chairman Isthmian Canal Commission,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In connection with the formal application for station site in the Canal Zone, which we are filing herewith, I beg to advise that if favored with a location it is our purpose to divert some of the tank steamers which we now employ in the trade between Port Arthur and New York and other eastern ports to the trade between Port Arthur and Panama. These steamers are suitable for towing barges, and thus might be made available to transport freight from the terminus of the Kansas City Southern Railway, which, as you no doubt are aware, extends from Port Arthur to Kansas City, Mo., through the leading rice, lumber, and petroleum districts of the Southwest.

I mention this, feeling that it might be of interest in connection with creating a new line of communication for supplies with Panama, a point that might be of interest to your Commission, particularly under the quarantine conditions now existing against other southern ports.

If we are given the privilege of a location for a station site and your Commission should later decide to accept oil as a fuel, either on the railway or in connection with the canal construction, we will be glad to make the facilities and experience of the Texas Company available to assist in the installation of such pipe lines, tankage, or equipment as might be needed in delivering the oil to the point where it was to be used as consumed.

We would like to call your attention particularly to the value of Texas oil for disinfecting. It has been extensively used this year throughout Texas and Louisiana with very satisfactory results.

While we understand that your Commission is not yet ready to consider the question of adopting the use of oil, and that it may be some time before you will be in a position to take up the question, you will appreciate that it will take some time to install the necessary tankage and equipment; and knowing the supplies of oil that are available, we feel sure that it will eventually be adopted and stand ready on our own account to provide the necessary transportation, tankage, and equipment, that we may be in a position to handle the business at such a time or in such amount as may be used.

Trusting our application may have early consideration, we beg to remain,

Yours, very truly,

THE TEXAS COMPANY,
J. S. CULLINAN, President.

THE TEXAS COMPANY,
MARITIME BUILDING, 8 BRIDGE STREET,

T. P. SHONTS, Esq.,
Chairman Isthmian Canal Commission,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We herewith make formal application for sufficient surface use of property within the Canal Zone on which to install a fuel-oil storage station.

Our representative reports the location best adapted for this purpose to consist of about 12 acres of land adjoining the Panama Railroad, either on the east or west side of the railroad, at a point between Fox River and Monkey Hill, Mount Hope Station.

If the plans of your Commission will not permit of our securing the site designated above, we are desirous of obtaining a site at some other point accessible to the harbor and the railroad on which such a storage station may be located.

Trusting this application may receive your early and favorable consideration, we beg to remain,

Very respectfully, yours,

THE TEXAS COMPANY,
J. S. CULLINAN, President.

LINDON W. BATES, 74 BROADWAY,
New York, October 20, 1904.

Admiral WALKER,
Chairman Panama Commission, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have the honor to request permission to install and operate an oil-fuel pipe line, with branches and accessories, between the Atlantic and Pacific terminals of the canal. The location and regulation of permanent and temporary pipe lines and of the storage and distributing tanks shall be that prescribed and approved by the Commission.

Respectfully,

LINDON W. BATES.

PROPOSED PIPE LINE FOR THE SUPPLY OF FUEL OIL ON THE ISTHMUS OF PANAMA.

This project consists in the installation of an oil pipe across the Isthmus of Panama, serving and connecting the cities of Colon and Panama, and located conveniently near the route of the new canal, with a single spur extending toward Alhajuela to the upper Chagres regulation works.

The objective of the installation is to supply crude oil for all forms of power, heating, and sanitary purposes required for the various operations in the canal construction and its attendant interests, and by the inhabitants of the cities of Panama and Colon, and the United States Zone. The convenience of such a line for sanitary purposes in eradicating the mosquito cheaply is manifest.

The plan comprehends a pipe line arranged so that the same may be tapped at places most convenient for the supply of fuel oil to consumers and to the work on the canal, and to suit whatever classification or division of work that may be followed. Large control and storage tanks near Colon or other suitable site, together with the necessary pumping plant and common to the most modern and improved oil pipe lines, will be installed.

Route.—The attached plan illustrates a route projected along or near the line of the existing Panama Railway. The section between Bohio and Culebra is purely tentative, since a definite location can not be fixed until after the line in plan and elevation for the new canal is permanently established, although it appears probably that the line parallel to the present railway will be practicable. A line may be selected farther from the railway than that indicated and distribution effected by stub lines.

Our carefully prepared diagram of flow shows the flow of oil at the different points on the line. The pipe line is calculated for delivering 100 per cent in excess of the quantities shown upon the diagram, and is dimensioned so that the sum of the static and friction heads will not exceed 250 pounds per square inch. The pump capacity will be installed accordingly.

Installation.—The pipe line is to be buried or covered where practicable and where necessary. The pipes and valves and tanks are to be coated for durability, and all materials are to be of the best quality for purposes indicated. Tanks are to be properly insulated, eliminating all danger of fire.

Valve houses are proposed as delivery centers. These houses are to be large enough to permit the attendant to have a small sleeping and living compartment, so that the same may always be found on the place.

Two pumps are proposed—one as reserve to the other and so that a tank ship can be unloaded in case the latter is not provided with its own unloading pumps. Steam pumps are considered in the estimate, but oil-engine driven pumps can be substituted. The advantage in the latter case would be considerable, since good boiler feed water will not be easy to obtain, while the harbor water will be suitable for cooling the oil engines.

In operation the pumps will supply the tanks and line at 52 K, and the rest of the line will be supplied by gravity, or nearly so.

A telephone system is included for operation and control between pumping station and tanks at 52.5 K. Tanks at 24 K and 46 K will have to be controlled by the pressure gauges and floats, and, if advisable, automatic cut-off valves, in order to prevent excessive pressure.

Permit.—No exclusive permit to install and operate a pipe line is sought, but simply an opportunity to sell and conveniently deliver this commodity to purchasers, subject to suitable conditions and regulations, under which there is no interference with canal work.

Plans.—Detailed plans are ready for submission.

74 Broadway, New York.

PRESIDENT ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to inclose, for convenience of consideration, several copies of a brief digest of the oil pipe-line project contemplated under my application, for which careful studies, estimates, and arrangements have been made.

A competitive opportunity is sought on the Isthmus to store, sell, and conveniently deliver this commodity, subject to the following primary conditions:

First. That the installation and the business conducted shall not conflict with the interests of the United States.

Second. That the installation for which permission is granted shall be subject to inspection and approval by the Commission.

Third. That the permit does not give any property titles, and does not authorize any invasion of private property or rights.

Fourth. That the permit shall grant no rights precluding the installation of other pipe lines for a similar purpose.

Very truly, yours,

LINDON W. BATES.

PAPERS CONCERNING WOMEN FROM MARTINIQUE.

[The following are the papers referred to on page 738 of the printed record:]

ISTHMIAN CANAL ZONE, EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Ancon, January 19, 1906.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your direction of January 15, 1906, to secure "statement from clergymen * * * concerning women from Martinique."

Complying with said request, I transmit herewith affidavits of all the clergymen stationed in the Canal Zone or who engaged in religious work therein, with the exception of Rev. Mr. Wood and Rev. Percy King. Mr. Wood is in South America and Mr. King in Darien, hence the inability to secure statements from these gentlemen.

Respectfully submitted.

Yours, very truly, CHARLES E. MAGOON,
Governor.

The SECRETARY OF WAR,
Washington, D. C.

(Inclosures: Affidavits from the Reverends Wise, Hendrick, Loveridge, Eskins, and Jackson, and affidavit covering interview with Reverend Larridan.)

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, while I thought and still think that this matter had better be considered in the Senate, where it is about to go, nevertheless, since the motion to reconsider has been made, I am heartily in favor of it, but for another reason and an additional reason to the one the Senator gave.

It will be remembered by Senators who were here that when the amendment was originally offered by the Senator from Massachusetts it covered the transportation not only of oil by pipe lines, but of gas also. By some process which I do not remember the word "gas" went out of the amendment. I suggested to the Senator from Massachusetts that there was no reason why gas should be excluded from transportation by pipe lines and oil alone included, to which the Senator agreed. Upon two separate motions made at different times the Senate voted upon that proposition and voted to include gas transported by pipe lines as well as oil transported by pipe lines, both having been decided by the courts to be interstate commerce.

At a later time in the day, in the midst of considerable confusion, a motion was made by some one, I do not now remember by whom, striking out the words "for municipal purposes." A large number of Senators here—I know a great many of them—under a misapprehension, voted for that motion. But by that misapprehension the amendment was made not to cover the transportation of natural gas by pipe lines, a thing which the Senate had overwhelmingly on two former motions included.

For this reason, Mr. President, in addition to the reason given by the Senator from Illinois, I shall heartily favor his motion to reconsider, although I thought the subject had better be taken up in the Senate; and I trust the motion will prevail.

I wish to say, in this connection, that the words "except water" were also included in the amendment, and I think the showing of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] and other Senators from that part of the country that this would interfere with the transportation of water for irrigation and power purposes was conclusive upon that subject. So I shall hope that when the amendment is reconsidered "water" will not be included in the motion of any Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Indiana make me apprehensive that if the amendment is reconsidered we may have trouble about it. It was bad enough when we adopted it, at the time we did adopt it; but it became much worse when, later, in the consideration of the bill we provided that no common carrier should be allowed to transport any product that belonged to itself or in which it had any interest, direct or indirect.

Now, what is the condition? We are constructing at Cincinnati, as I informed the Senate when this matter was under consideration before, a pipe line to connect that city with the natural gas fields of West Virginia. It is a very expensive enterprise. It is estimated that it will cost about $5,000,000. We are building the pipe line large enough, according to the estimate of engineers who are thought to be competent, to transport enough natural gas to supply the municipality of Cincinnati and the people of Cincinnati, to supply the city not only for municipal purposes, for lighting the streets, but to supply the manufacturing establishments of the city with cheap fuel. But if we are now, when that pipe line is completed, not to be allowed to transport our own gas we might as well stop. The only purpose of it is to transport our own gas.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator from Ohio a question?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Might not precisely the case which the Senator from Ohio is describing be also true with reference to the transportation of oil?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly, it might be true.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. So the question recurs that I originally addressed, when this matter was up, to the Senator from Massachusetts, that if the transportation of oil in pipe lines be included, why ought not also gas to be included?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I am not concerned about oil, but I am about gas. What the Senator from Indiana suggests as to oil is equally true, no doubt. If an oil company has constructed a pipe line for its own use and benefit, and we now make it a common carrier, and then prohibit all common carriers to which this act applies from carrying their own products or any property that belongs to them, of course the pipe line company will have to go out of business so far as its own business is concerned. It can carry oil only for the public.

But going back to our own case, for I do not want to get away from it——

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator let me ask him a question? I should like to ask the Senator if these pipe lines are used by any except by the companies owning them? They do not haul for the public at all? They simply use them for the purpose of hauling their own oil and gas to distribute to the public?

Mr. FORAKER. I think most of them do, from what I have been told. I have no personal knowledge about it.

Mr. CLAY. If they are prevented from hauling their own oil or gas, they would be prevented from doing any business at all, would they not?

Mr. FORAKER. It is absolute confiscation. That is what it is, and nothing else.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I wish to correct a statement made by the Senator from Indiana that this amendment was never adopted, but that in the confusion——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; the Senator must have misunderstood me. If I made any such statement as that, I hasten to correct it.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope the Senators will not take all my time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I thought the Senator rose in his own time to ask me a question. I did not make that statement, I will say to the Senator. If the Senator understood me to say that it was so adopted, I stated it inadvertently.

Mr. GALLINGER. Upon that statement I have nothing further to say. The Senate did vote to insert "except water and except natural and artificial gas for municipal purposes," and subsequently the words "for municipal purposes" were stricken out.

Mr. FORAKER. My time is passing. I only want to be allowed to indicate the situation we will be in if we should reconsider and then strike out the exception as to natural or artificial gas. I do not know what the effect will be as to oil, for I do not know to what extent the pipes of the oil companies are used exclusively for their own business; but when it comes to natural gas I know what we are trying to do in that one instance. We are trying to put down a 16-inch pipe with a capacity that will supply Cincinnati. If when we get to the gas fields, having spent our $5,000,000, which we are having a great deal of trouble to raise, and which we could not raise at all if it were known that this provision would become a law, we shall be required to receive all the natural gas other people may see fit to bring to our pipe and transport it from the place in West Virginia where the gas is found down to Huntington, we will say, dump out a lot of it there for the accommodation of that city, and on to Maysville, and on to Portsmouth, and to other cities, supplying them, for that is what the business of a common carrier means, we would have to increase the capacity, perhaps put in another pipe and at another $5,000,000 expense, or if we did not have to do that, assuming that we would not be allowed to continue to transport our own property, we would have to quit absolutely.

Therefore, Mr. President, if we adopt the change such as the Senator from Indiana gives notice he will ask for, if we reconsider, then we will have to reconsider the amendment by which we have provided that no common carrier shall carry any product that belongs to it except only in so far as it may be necessary for its own use.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, if the motion of the Senator from Illinois to reconsider carries, then the entire amendment is eliminated?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; it is then open to amendment.

Mr. DICK. I want to know the practical effect. What exception does the Senator expect to make in lieu of it in order that this company may operate across the Isthmus and yet leave other companies in operation under the effect of the law?

Mr. HOPKINS. I had in mind only to strike out all after the word "water" in line 3 of the amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. In line 3, after the word "water," to strike out the words "at any place within the jurisdiction or within the governmental authority of the United States." I understand the Senator from Alabama does not object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider made by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS]. [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair, the noes have it.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider is not agreed to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I reserve this amendment——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not necessary to do so now. That can be done after the bill comes into the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Before the bill gets into the Senate, I wish to give notice of my right to reserve for a separate vote this amendment or any part of it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest to Senators who wish to put additional amendments in the bill or to change amendments already in it that we would facilitate business and get to a vote much sooner if we would pass the bill to the Senate, and then when the bill gets in the Senate let Senators suggest those things they want stricken out or those things they want added without trying to reconsider now. Here is an instance right here. There are Senators here who want to reconsider, one for one purpose and another for another, and they cut each other's throats. If Senators will just wait until we get the bill into the Senate, then all the amendments will stand on their own merits.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator yield just a moment? I stated to the Senator from Illinois and to the Senate when I was making a few remarks that I thought it much better to take this question up after the bill was reported to the Senate, and not in Committee of the Whole; but since the Senator from Illinois had moved to reconsider and that question was pending before the Senate I was in favor of that motion. I agree with the Senator that it is wise and proper to take it up in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. CULBERSON. I make a motion to reconsider an amendment adopted, on page 4, to which I think there is no opposition at all in the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will not the Senator apply the reasoning I just made to that amendment, the same as the one we have just refused to reconsider?

Mr. CULBERSON. There is absolutely no opposition to the motion to reconsider in this case, so far as I have heard.

Mr. TILLMAN. But there is trouble about fixing an amendment exactly to suit Senators.

Mr. CULBERSON. That will come up later.

Mr. TILLMAN. You want to reconsider it, and then——

Mr. CULBERSON. That is all.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to get the bill out of the Committee of the Whole, and then we can discuss these little amendments in the Senate to-morrow.

Mr. CULBERSON. It will take but a moment. I have heard no opposition at all to a reconsideration of that amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I suggest to the Senator from Texas, if he will permit me, that he take this question up when the bill is reported to the Senate. The Senator from Illinois has just made a motion to reconsider an amendment, and the Senate did not sustain him.

Mr. CULBERSON. I insist upon my motion to reconsider, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment on page 4 was adopted, beginning on line 9 and ending in line 18. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas to reconsider.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

Mr. CULBERSON. Without asking for its consideration now, I ask leave to perfect the amendment which is now pending to the bill by a substitute.

Mr. TILLMAN. And then let it be printed and go over?

Mr. CULBERSON. To be printed and go over.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let the amendment be read from the desk.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the bill as now amended——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will suspend until the Chair has made an order in reference to the amendment just proposed. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas to the amendment which has been reconsidered will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let it be read.

Mr. McLAURIN. I have an amendment to offer to the amendment, or rather a substitute for the amendment, that I shall offer and have printed also.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota will kindly state his point of order.

Mr. NELSON. The motion to reconsider the amendment of the Senator from Texas has prevailed, and the question now is upon the amendment of the Senator from Texas, and he has got to make some disposition of it in Committee of the Whole or else it would be reported to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair holds that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let the amendment of the Senator from Texas be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request is that the proposed amendment of the Senator from Texas to the amendment be read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment on page 4 of the bill insert the following:

That no carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall hereafter directly or indirectly issue or give any interstate free ticket, free pass, or free transportation for passengers except to its officers, agents, and employees, and members of their immediate families, to its actual and bona fide attorneys, to ministers of religion and inmates of hospitals and eleemosynary and charitable institutions, and to indigent, destitute, and homeless persons. Any carrier violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall for each offense pay to the United States a penalty of not less than one hundred nor more than two thousand dollars: Provided, That this provision shall not be construed to prohibit the interchange of passes for officers, agents, and employees and members of their immediate families, nor to owners and caretakers of live stock when traveling with such stock or when going to point of shipment or returning from point of delivery, nor shall anything in this provision be deemed to prohibit any carrier from carrying passengers free on account of charity from and to places visited by general epidemic or pestilence or wholly or largely destroyed by fire, water, earthquakes, or other calamitous visitations with the object of providing succor, relief, and other assistance to the inhabitants. Jurisdiction of offenses under this provision shall be the same as that provided for offenses in an act entitled "An act to further regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States," approved February 19, 1903, and any amendment thereof.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is it in order to move an amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the amendments are to be printed and lie on the table until to-morrow.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But if in Committee of the Whole they are printed and lie on the table until to-morrow morning, it follows we can not proceed further with the consideration of the bill, which is ready to be reported to the Senate with this exception, is it not? I understand that with the single exception of this amendment the committee is now ready to report the bill to the Senate.

Mr. McLAURIN. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will in a moment, as soon as I complete my statement. If these amendments must be printed and lie on the table until to-morrow morning, it follows that the Committee of the Whole can do nothing further with the bill until to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill can not be reported to the Senate until the pending amendment is disposed of.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Therefore the proposition stands that we must immediately dispose of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas or else we must pass over the consideration of the bill until to-morrow morning. That is the reason why I suggested to the Senator that we consider this amendment in the Senate. It simply blocks the wheels of legislation. Since we are considering the amendment of the Senator from Texas, I ask if an amendment to that amendment in the nature of a substitute is in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not in order, under the rule.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I should like to know why an amendment to the amendment is not in order.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I submit an amendment which I intend to propose when in order. I ask that it may be now read and ordered printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment sent to the desk by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Before it is read I wish to say to the Senator from Georgia, that with the permission of the Chair——

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will permit the amendment to be read.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will in just a moment.

Mr. BACON. I did not understand that I was offering the amendment in the Senator's time. The Chair recognized me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia is offering the amendment in his own right.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I asked the Chair whether it would be in order to propose an amendment to the amendment at this time, and the Chair ruled it would not be in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair ruled that it would not be in order to offer a further amendment at the present time, as an amendment to the amendment is pending.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I merely asked the question for information.

Mr. BACON. I offered the amendment in my own time, and I ask that it be read.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas will state his point of order.

Mr. CULBERSON. My point of order is that the amendment which is printed on page 4 is not now the amendment pending; that a motion having been made to reconsider, and that motion having prevailed, I was entitled to substitute in lieu of that the amendment which was read at the desk, and that is the amendment which I understand to be pending now.

Mr. BACON. I simply ask that my amendment may be read for information at this time.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BACON. It will take but a minute to read it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Texas that the vote having been reconsidered, the amendment was brought before the Senate, and the question was on agreeing to that amendment. The amendment was open to amendment, and the Senator from Texas proposed a substitute, which is an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Chair misunderstood me. The motion by which the amendment printed on page 4 was adopted having been carried, the amendment was under my control as the mover of it. I ask leave to substitute——

Mr. CLARK of Arkansas (to Mr. CULBERSON). Withdraw it.

Mr. CULBERSON. I withdraw it and substitute in lieu of it the amendment which was read at the desk. Consequently, the latter is the pending amendment and not the one that is printed, I submit to the Chair.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, if that is the pending amendment, I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The vote having been reconsidered, the question was upon the amendment as printed in the text. To that the Senator from Texas offered an amendment as a substitute.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have withdrawn the printed amendment, and I ask——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. After the Senate voted upon the amendment it was not in the power of the Senator from Texas to withdraw it. It having been a subject upon which the Senate expressed its judgment, it was beyond the Senator's recall.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well; but at the same time it ought to be borne in mind that the Senate reconsidered the vote by which it adopted the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. That did not place it in the Senator's control.

Mr. CULBERSON. I offer, then, this amendment as a substitute for what is printed on page 4, so as to conform to the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now that the Senator——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia was recognized. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Indiana after the proposed amendment of the Senator from Georgia is read.

Mr. FRYE. But has not the Senator from Texas the right to offer an amendment to that amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so stated.

Mr. FRYE. Then that is the whole amendment which is pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas offers his amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole and which was reconsidered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed as a substitute by the Senator from Texas for the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I have the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BACON. I will not yield until after the amendment I offer has been read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment sent to the desk by the Senator from Georgia will be read.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment on page 4 insert:

That no carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall hereafter directly or indirectly issue or give any interstate free ticket, free pass, or free transportation for passage to any Senator of the United States or Representative in Congress, or to any justice or judge of the courts of the United States, or to any officer of either of the Executive Departments of the United States. Any such carrier violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall for each offense pay to the United States a penalty of not less than one hundred nor more than two thousand dollars.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, because it is perfectly clear that the consideration of the amendment at this time will merely lose an hour or an hour and a half when it may as well be taken up in the Senate for this purpose, I move that the amendment be laid upon the table so that we can take it up in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana moves that the amendment and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas to the amendment be laid on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the bill be reprinted as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CARTER. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. ["No!" "No!"] I made the suggestion at the request of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous consent that I may state the reason for the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that he may state the reason for the motion just made by the Senator from Montana. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McLAURIN. I will ask the Senator——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. MORGAN. I can not yield.

On to-morrow the Committee on Interoceanic Canals have agreed to meet at 2 o'clock and come to a final conclusion of some kind in regard to the type of the canal. The meeting is one of very great importance to the members of the committee and to the country, and if we can get an hour's additional session here in the morning we probably can get far enough along with the business to enable the committee to hold that very important meeting. I therefore request that when we adjourn we will adjourn until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. SCOTT. What is the motion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

Mr. ELKINS. I move to amend by saying 10 o'clock.

Mr. CARTER. I withdraw the motion, in view of the manifest opposition to it, and move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. McLAURIN. I hope the Senator from Montana will withhold the motion for a moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Montana that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 16, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 15, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by Mr. ALEXANDER MCDOWELL, its Clerk.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that Mr. DALZELL be elected Speaker pro tempore.

The motion was unanimously agreed to.

Mr. DALZELL assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

The SPEAKER entered the Hall and took the chair.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Journal be approved.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A moment ago, during the temporary absence of the titular Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] was elected Speaker pro tempore. My inquiry is, whether he was elected for the day or for the period of the temporary absence of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Probably it will take both of us to run the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, with that response, I will not drive the inquiry any further. I am inclined to think it will. [Renewed laughter.]

The motion was agreed to; and the Journal was approved.

SALARIES OF SCHOOL-TEACHERS, ETC., IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER. A separate vote was reserved yesterday upon the proposition relating to the appointment of members of the board of education.

The Clerk will now report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "members," in line 9, page 1, strike out everything down to the word "of," in line 4, page 2, and insert "all of whom shall have been for five years immediately preceding their appointment bona fide residents of the District of Columbia. The members of the board of education shall be appointed by the supreme court judges;" so that the passage will read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the control of the public schools of the District of Columbia is hereby vested in a board of education to consist of nine members, all of whom shall have been for five years immediately preceding their appointment bona fide residents of the District of Columbia. The members of the board of education shall be appointed by the supreme court judges of the District of Columbia, for terms of three years each, except that the original appointments under this act shall be as follows."

Also, in section 2, page 2, line 10, strike out the word "Commissioners" and insert "judges of the supreme court."

Mr. SIMS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SIMS. Can this amendment be divided and voted on separately?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state a separate vote was reserved upon two amendments. The second amendment, of course, if the first should be agreed to, would necessarily have to go with the other.

Mr. SIMS. It is the first amendment on which I desire a division.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the amendment as reported was an amendment striking out and inserting, which is not divisible.

Mr. SIMS. Then it can not be divided?

The SPEAKER. No; a simple motion to insert probably could be, but to strike out and insert is not divisible.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words in reference to this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered by unanimous consent.

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, I will say we might as well defeat the bill——

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont and others. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. It seems to the Chair, unless objection is made, that the vote might well cover the two amendments, which embody one proposition. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi to the fact that the amendment just read, striking out and inserting, provides for appointment of the school board by the Commissioners; prior to that, the next one is to fill the vacancies. It provides that the vacancies shall be filled by the supreme court. Of course if the first amendment is agreed to, logically the other would follow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They are both parts of the same subject-matter.

The SPEAKER. Practically so. Without objection, the vote will be taken on both amendments. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BABCOCK. I would ask the Speaker to state the effect of the amendment, or else I will ask unanimous consent to do so myself.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded. The amendments have been read, and the question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BABCOCK. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I demand the yeas and nays on this proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. A parliamentary inquiry. A vote "yea" amounts to giving the appointment to the judges?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Regular order!

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. And a vote "nay" is against it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 142, nays 67, answered "present" 18, not voting 155, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CANNON, and he voted "no," as above recorded.

So the amendments were agreed to.

The following pairs were announced.

For the session:

Mr. WANGER with Mr. ADAMSON.

Until May 24:

Mr. FULLER with Mr. RICHARDSON of Kentucky.

Until May 18:

Mr. CHAPMAN with Mr. HOPKINS.

Until further notice:

Mr. DAVIDSON with Mr. LEE.

Mr. SOUTHARD with Mr. PATTERSON of South Carolina.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH with Mr. SHEPPARD.

Mr. WELBORN with Mr. GUDGER.

Mr. NEVIN with Mr. FIELD.

Mr. HASKINS with Mr. LEVER.

Mr. JENKINS with Mr. SMITH of Kentucky.

Mr. SCHNEEBELI with Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota with Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana.

Mr. HITT with Mr. LEGARE.

Mr. LILLEY of Connecticut with Mr. REID.

Mr. GROSVENOR with Mr. CLARK of Missouri.

Mr. FULKERSON with Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN.

Mr. MCGAVIN with Mr. SMITH of Maryland.

Mr. DRISCOLL with Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana.

Mr. OTJEN with Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. MANN with Mr. HOWARD.

Mr. DEEMER with Mr. KLINE.

Mr. MCCALL with Mr. BROUSSARD.

Mr. DOVENER with Mr. SPARKMAN.

For this day:

Mr. LITTAUER with Mr. COCKRAN.

Mr. KEIFER with Mr. JAMES.

Mr. CURRIER with Mr. BARTLETT.

Mr. DWIGHT with Mr. GARBER.

Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. HEARST.

Mr. BOUTELL with Mr. GRIGGS.

Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. SULLIVAN of New York.

Mr. KNAPP with Mr. LAMAR.

Mr. WADSWORTH with Mr. VAN DUZER.

Mr. TIRRELL with Mr. STANLEY.

Mr. WACHTER with Mr. WEISSE.

Mr. SIBLEY with Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa with Mr. TALBOTT.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio with Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama.

Mr. MADDEN with Mr. SHACKLEFORD.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. RAINEY.

Mr. KAHN with Mr. RYAN.

Mr. OVERSTREET with Mr. POU.

Mr. HUFF with Mr. MOORE.

Mr. HUBBARD with Mr. MAYNARD.

Mr. HEPBURN with Mr. MCLAIN.

Mr. GRONNA with Mr. LEWIS.

Mr. FASSETT with Mr. GRANGER.

Mr. GOEBEL with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.

Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. FINLEY.

Mr. DARRAGH with Mr. FLOOD.

Mr. BANNON with Mr. BRUNDIDGE.

Mr. BIRDSALL with Mr. BUTLER of Tennessee.

Mr. BOWERSOCK with Mr. BYRD.

Mr. BROWN with Mr. ELLERBE.

Mr. REYNOLDS with Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky.

Mr. LORIMER with Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi.

Mr. WATSON with Mr. CLARK of Florida.

Mr. BARTHOLDT with Mr. LIVINGSTON.

Mr. CONNER with Mr. RHINOCK.

Mr. BENNET of New York with Mr. TRIMBLE.

Mr. BRADLEY with Mr. MCDERMOTT.

On this vote:

Mr. RODENBERG with Mr. GAINES of Tennessee.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FOSTER of Vermont, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FISHING IN ALASKAN WATERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 267) to prohibit aliens from fishing in the waters of Alaska, with certain House amendments disagreed to.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendments to the Senate bill, and agree to the conference asked for.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that the House do insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. POWERS, Mr. HIGGINS, and Mr. STANLEY.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the request of Mr. HAYES to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Thomas Cox (H. R. 8895), Fifty-ninth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. CRUMPACKER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on Friday last a paragraph had been passed, to a portion of which a point of order was pending. That will be taken up now for consideration and determination. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the point of order was made upon lines 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13 of page 35. Mr. Chairman, I hold that the point of order is not well taken, that this provision is in order under Rule XXI, and I may say at the outset that it is a common provision adopted by Congress for all public works which are in process of construction and river and harbor work, and a similar provision was adopted for the rebuilding of the Naval Academy and also of the Military Academy at West Point, but points of order were not made upon those provisions at that time, and it is fair to presume that the House when it passed upon that had in mind that these provisions were nothing more or less than limitations upon the appropriation.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has raised the point that the deficiency act of last year contained a provision directly in point in the consideration of this point of order, and refers to section 3679. Mr. Chairman, I hold that this section does not apply, and a careful reading of it, I think, will show that fact:

No Department of the Government shall expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year or involve the Government in any contract or obligation for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations, unless such contract or obligation is authorized by law.

And it might go further and say, "Unless such contract or obligation is authorized by law in a regular appropriation bill;" and further:

All appropriations made for contingent expenses or for other general purposes, except appropriations made for the fulfillment of contract obligations expressly authorized by law or for objects acquired or authorized by law without reference to the amounts annually appropriated therefor, etc.

So that it will be seen the exception is made as to those things which are authorized by law presumably in the regular appropriation bills.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How does this Congress make law—on an appropriation bill or by separate acts?

Mr. FOSS. Why, the appropriation bill itself makes law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is it not contrary to the rules of the House for a law to be made on an appropriation bill? Is it not expressly contrary to the rules of this House to make law on an appropriation bill?

Mr. FOSS. No; I do not understand so, if in order under the rules.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand it, it unquestionably is.

Mr. OLMSTED. Does the gentleman understand that when law has been made on an appropriation bill it is not law?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no; not at all; but it is contrary to the rules to make law on an appropriation bill when the point of order is made against it.

Mr. TAWNEY. In that case the law is not made, for the provision goes out of the bill.

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly; but when the point of order is not made, and it stays in the bill, and it is passed by both Houses and approved, it is the law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly; but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] is arguing that this provision of the deficiency act contemplated that law should be made on appropriation bills—expressly what the rules of this House do not contemplate.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I understood the gentleman from Illinois to say that the law had been made in an appropriation bill.

Mr. FOSS. The law, as far as the establishment of this training station is concerned, has already been made. That was made two years ago, and we hold that it is an object already authorized, already established, and that it is proper to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to make a contract to carry out the construction of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The law that the gentleman from Illinois seeks to write on the statute books is not in reference to the station, but it is a law that will authorize the making of a contract that is not authorized now.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, the intent and purpose of this act is simply to curtail the deficiency from appropriations made on the regular appropriation bills, and, in my judgment, it does not apply and can not be applied to the provision before the House.

Now, we come to the general proposition of whether it is in order to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to enter into a contract for a greater sum than the appropriation provided in the bill, and that is the real proposition before the committee. In 1883, when we started in to build a new navy, in the act of that year a point of order was raised by Mr. Blount, of Georgia, upon the paragraph for the increase of the Navy, and the point of order was made to the whole paragraph. That section provided for the construction of the steel cruiser of not less than 4,000 tons displacement now specially authorized by law, two steel cruisers of not more than 3,000 or less than 2,500 tons displacement each, and one dispatch boat, as recommended by the naval advisory board in its report of December 20, 1882; and this section further provides the limit of cost for those ships as found to be proper by this advisory board, and, furthermore, this provision contains an appropriation for $1,300,000 less than the total cost of the construction of those ships, so that the question is fairly presented here whether or not it is proper or in order to authorize a contract for a greater amount than the sum appropriated in the bill. Now, Mr. Chairman, this was at a time, as I stated, when we first started the construction of our new Navy and related to those ships, the Atlanta, the Boston, the Chicago, and Dolphin, sometimes called the A, B, C, and D of the new Navy. Mr. Blount raised the identical point which is raised here, and on the point of order he said:

I think we will save time by having the questions of order passed upon at the outset. I raise the question of order on the following language: "Two steel cruisers, of not more than 3,000 nor less than 2,500 tons displacement each, and one dispatch boat, as recommended by the naval advisory board in its report of December 20, 1882, $1,300,000." I make the point of order that there is no authority of law for the construction of those vessels, that this is a new item, and therefore is out of order in this bill; and further, under the law as it now stands the Secretary can not make a contract binding the Government beyond the appropriations made by law, and yet there is a proposition providing a portion of the sum and giving him authority to make a contract for more. The language is explicit.

So that this proposition was fairly brought to the attention of the Chair, and the Chair ruled, Mr. Page, of California, then being Chairman of the Committee of the Whole:

The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is not well taken. The Chair thinks that under section 717 of the Revised Statutes this House may make appropriations or not, as it chooses, for the construction of new vessels of war. That is what this paragraph does, and it only limits the appropriation, as has always been the rule. It has always been held by former Chairmen that a bill making an appropriation for a specific purpose might limit the purpose.

And from that decision Mr. Blount took an appeal to the committee, and the committee sustained the opinion of the Chair.

Now, Mr. Chairman, from that time down, for twenty-two years, the precedents are all one way upon this question of whether you can authorize a battle ship, authorize the making of a contract for a battle ship, fix the limit of cost upon it, and yet not appropriate a single dollar. That has been decided time and time again. I can call special attention to two decisions, one by Mr. Butterworth, as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole in the first session of the Fifty-first Congress, on page 3221, volume 106, where he decides in substance the same question. I will not read that decision, but if the Chair desires to read the decision I would be pleased to have him. Then the same decision was made by Mr. SHERMAN in the second session of the Fifty-fifth Congress (p. 3458, vol. 172, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD), all sustaining the point that you can authorize a ship without appropriating a single dollar for it, authorize the making of a contract, and fixing thereon the limit of cost. So I say, Mr. Chairman, there is an unbroken line of decisions all to this one end. What is the proposition before us? A lesser proposition than the provisions which were decided by those decisions. Do we ask an authorization of a naval training station? No. Do we want an establishment for one? No. That has already been authorized and established by Congress. Not so in the case of a battle ship, not so in the case of new vessels, but here Congress has already established and already authorized this naval training station by the passage of a law two years ago, and this provision simply carries out the plain manifest intention of Congress to go on and construct that naval station.

Why, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] says it will be perfectly in order to appropriate $2,000,000 here to-day and build this naval training station, the full amount required for the construction of buildings. He says there will be no question about that; that that would be in order. He is right.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Chair whether it could be contended that we could appropriate $2,000,000 here for the construction of the buildings of this naval training station this year, and yet not be able under the rules of this House to do the lesser thing—to authorize the contract and only appropriate $750,000 toward it? Is the lesser greater than the whole? Now, Mr. Chairman, why should not this principle, which has been so clearly declared in favor of ships, apply to men? Admiral Farragut once said that the Navy consisted of ships and men. Can you hold that the principle authorizing Congress to construct a battle ship and fix a limit of cost without any appropriation and authorizing the President to enter into contract shall not apply also to the training of men to man that ship? Is not the principle one and identical and the same?

Now, Mr. Chairman, just a word in conclusion. There is no question as to the plain, clear intent of Congress to establish this naval training station. Are our rules made for the purpose of carrying out the clear, plain intent, purpose, and policy of Congress to do a thing, or through technical construction are they to be used to subvert that very purpose?

Mr. Chairman, I have presented what I considered to be the proper view with which to look at this provision.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair has come to a conclusion about this matter, I do not care to take up the time of the committee any further.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide the question. The paragraph provides for the construction of buildings and other necessary improvements at the naval training station on the Great Lakes and carries an appropriation of $750,000, and, among other things, provides that, before any part of the sum is expended, complete plans are to be prepared and approved by the Secretary of the Navy covering the contemplated new buildings at the naval training station, which shall involve a total expenditure of not more than $2,000,000.

No question is raised respecting the provisions in the paragraph so far as I have read, but the question of order is raised to the second proviso, which reads as follows:

That after the preparation and approval of the plans herein provided for the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to enter into contract or contracts for the buildings on plans as approved to an amount not to exceed $2,000,000, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law.

The question raised by the point of order is whether it is in order on an appropriation bill of this character to authorize an executive officer of the Government to contract for a building or public improvement over and in excess of the amount of the appropriation. A general statute upon the subject, section 3733 of the Revised Statutes of 1878, provides:

No contract shall be entered into for the erection, repair, or furnishing of any public building or for any public improvement which shall bind the Government to pay a larger sum of money than the amount in the Treasury appropriated for the specific purpose.

Then section 5503 of the Revised Statutes provides that—

Every officer of the Government who knowingly contracts for the erection, repair, or furnishing of any public building or any public improvement, to pay a larger amount than the specific sum appropriated for such purpose shall be punished by an imprisonment of not less than six months nor more than two years, and shall pay a fine of $2,000.

Now, it is clear that in the absence of express legal authority the Secretary of the Navy would not have the right to contract for the erection of buildings mentioned in the paragraph above the specific amount appropriated. All contracts in excess of that sum would be void. The Chair is of the opinion that the provision in last year's deficiency act to which his attention has been called is not applicable. If the law as it now exists prohibits contracts for more than the amount appropriated, any provision that would confer that authority would of necessity change existing law.

The Chair is somewhat familiar with the decision cited by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] respecting contracts for the construction of war vessels. Without passing upon that particular question, it may be suggested that the statutes that have been quoted do not mention and probably do not include war vessels. Those statutes apply to public buildings and improvement, and it is a matter of serious doubt, at least, whether war vessels come within the designation of public buildings and public improvements.

The rules of the House permit appropriations for objects already authorized by law. The naval training station on the Great Lakes may be assumed for the purposes of this decision to be authorized by law. But the rules provide that no provision changing existing law shall be in order in any general appropriation bill or any amendment thereto. The existing law unqualifiedly prohibits contracts for public buildings and improvements beyond the amount specifically appropriated. The proviso in question clearly changes existing law. It repeals pro tanto the two sections of the statute which the Chair has read to the committee. Whether the rule of the House respecting legislation in general appropriation bills will operate beneficially in this particular case or otherwise is a matter the Chair is not at liberty to consider. The law forbids the contracts sought to be provided for. No limitation contrary to existing law can be put upon an appropriation in a general appropriation bill. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 35, after the word "dollars," in line 7, insert: "And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall pay a fair and reasonable price for the plans herein provided for, and thereafter no money shall be expended or obligation incurred for architects, except that the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to employ in his discretion a consulting architect, at a compensation not exceeding $5,000 per annum."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I would state that that provision is framed after the provision that was adopted here after some discussion upon the rebuilding of the Military Academy at West Point.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. I understand that an architect has already been employed and is now at work designing this improvement. Is not that a fact?

Mr. FOSS. An architect has been employed by the Secretary of the Navy—they have no architect in the Navy Department—to get up preliminary plans and sketches; but it is perfectly proper for this committee to make any provision it may see fit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What I wish to know is under what terms this architect is employed. The criticism that was made in regard to the rebuilding of the Naval Academy was that the architect was paid 5 per cent of the amount authorized. And 5 per cent on $8,000,000 is $400,000. It was claimed that 5 per cent was the ordinary and regular architect's fees. What I wish to ascertain is whether the contract or arrangement already made contemplates the payment of 5 per cent of the cost of these improvements?

Mr. FOSS. I have not seen the contract, but I have been informed that the contract as made was for the usual architect's fee, and as soon as I learned of that I drafted this provision, because I think that, knowing the sentiments of Congress, it should be left on the same basis as in the case of the Military Academy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. As a matter of fact, under the present contract, this architect will receive $100,000.

Mr. FOSS. Under the present contract. Well, I do not know how far that contract extends, whether it extends simply to the preliminary plans or goes further, to the superintendency of the whole construction, or not; I have not seen it, but I presume it does. But if so, if the Secretary of the Navy makes such a contract, and if he had authority to make such a contract, it is perfectly in order for this House to pass this provision, which would allow him to purchase the plans and leave the superintendency as provided for in this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to offer an amendment, because if the Secretary has made an arrangement or contemplates an arrangement to pay 5 per cent, undoubtedly he would construe that as a reasonable fee to pay.

Mr. FOSS. I believe the architects usually separate, as I understand, this 5 per cent to include superintendency and inspection of the materials as well as the plans. They charge, I am told, 1 per cent for preliminary plans, sketch plans, and 1½ per cent for working plans, and 1 per cent for detailed plans, and superintendence about 1½ per cent. I think that is the usual way that this matter is divided up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What I want to ascertain is this: How much can possibly be paid to these architects for the preparation of these plans if this particular amendment will be adopted, upon the theory that the cost of the building will be about $2,000,000?

Mr. FOSS. I do not know; it is left to the Secretary of the Navy to make the best terms he can, just the same as we did in the case of the Military Academy, leaving it to the Secretary of War to make the best terms he could; and not put in any limit of cost, because usually the rule is that where a limit is put in the officer takes that as a direction to pay the whole amount.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But unless Congress expresses its opinion in a definite manner that 5 per cent is more than should be paid, it is very likely that the Secretary of the Navy will say the usual fee of the architects or the reasonable fee, and the associations of architects throughout the country will unquestionably bring all the powers and influence they can to show that 5 per cent is a reasonable charge.

Mr. FOSS. I should hope the Secretary of the Navy would not be any more liberal than the Secretary of War was in paying for the plans of the Military Academy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much did the Secretary of War pay?

Mr. FOSS. I have been told. Perhaps the gentleman can inform me.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know how much the Secretary of War paid.

Mr. FOSS. I am of the opinion the Secretary of War paid 3½ per cent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, then, I will move to insert in that amendment, Mr. Chairman, before the last proviso, that in no event shall he pay to exceed 3½ per cent of the cost of the contemplated improvements.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Before the proviso which authorizes the employment of a consulting architect at $5,000 a year.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask my friend from New York if he will yield to a suggestion? I do not want to take the gentleman from New York off his feet. I merely want to ask him if he does not believe that as the superintendent of the buildings at the Military Academy was specially provided for at an annual compensation of $5,000, 2½ per cent commission for merely drawing the plans would be sufficiently generous?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will offer the amendment as 2½ per cent, and that will make, with the $2,000,000 contemplated and the $250,000 already provided, something like $61,000 for the mere preparation of the plans. I ask the Clerk if he can report the amendment in the form that it would be as amended?

Mr. FOSS. Does not the gentleman think that ought to be added to get an architect?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know. I think the price heretofore paid is quite exorbitant. Many an architect will be willing to take 2½ per cent and have his name associated with a monumental improvement of the character proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York had better prepare his amendment. The Clerk seems to have some difficulty in incorporating it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. While the gentleman from New York is preparing his amendment, if I may be permitted, I want to suggest to my friend from Illinois, that for the mere preparation of the plans I think 2½ per cent is adequate compensation, if this bill carries, as it probably will carry, a stated compensation for superintendence during the period of construction. I think it very likely, and very properly so, too, that the man who drew the plans should be employed for that service; and as it would not probably take all of his time, he will still have an opportunity for outside business. I think the compensation which Congress fixes in these cases is usually a liberal one, and would adequately compensate the gentleman.

Mr. FOSS. I will say to the gentleman that I do not think we ought to limit the price; we ought to treat this matter the same as we treated the situation when it came up on the Military Academy bill. We ought to leave it to the Secretary of the Navy to make satisfactory terms. The subject of making plans is one about which there is much erroneous impression. I believe the architect is entitled to his fee the same as the lawyer, the laborer, the doctor, or anybody else. There are many gentlemen who think that the work of making plans is a very simple matter, but it is a very long proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me ask the gentleman if Congress did not leave to the Secretary of the Navy discretion in this matter in connection with the Naval Academy, and did not the Secretary of the Navy pay $400,000 for plans and supervision, 5 per cent of $8,000,000?

Mr. FOSS. Congress made no provision whatever. I am trying to get around that proposition by offering the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I submit to the gentleman——

Mr. FOSS. Congress did not do anything in that case. Here we are trying to do something.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be reported before any action is taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois and then the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Insert in line 7, after the word "dollars," "And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall pay a fair and reasonable price for the plans herein provided for, and thereafter no money shall be expended or obligation incurred for architects, except that the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to employ in his discretion a consulting architect at a compensation not to exceed $5,000 per annum.

The amendment to the amendment is as follows:

Insert after the words "provided for" the words "in no event to exceed 2½ per cent of the estimated cost for the improvement."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is not adopted, I take it from the reading of the original amendment as offered by the gentleman from Illinois that it would then be in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy to allow for the preparation of plans all that he might see fit, including the superintending of construction, or for any other expenditure that might be necessary and incident to the preparation of the plans. I think there ought to be some limitation. If it is the purpose of the gentleman from Illinois to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to employ some one to prepare the plans, and that person shall be employed to superintend the construction, then the percentage specified in the amendment will be less than we have been in the habit of paying. The Treasury Department allows 5 per cent, but that includes not only the preparation of the plans, but the superintendency of the building as well.

Now, if it is the purpose of the gentleman from Illinois to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to employ some one to prepare the plans for these improvements and not go any further, then there ought to be a limit, or otherwise he will charge 5 per cent of the estimated cost of the building for the preparation of these plans, leaving the expense of the superintendency of construction to be met hereafter. I think, if that is the purpose of the gentleman from Illinois, the amendment of the gentleman from New York should be adopted.

Mr. FOSS. The purpose of the amendment is to shut out the question of superintending construction, and that will be done under a consulting architect at $5,000 a year. This is the identical provision that was adopted by the House on the Military Academy bill. There it was left to the Secretary of War to make the best terms for plans that he could, and then under this provision for a consulting architect at $5,000 the construction was superintended. I am informed that the architect received only 3½ per cent instead of 5 per cent for making the plans. Now, this provision contemplates the same thing.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman say that under a similar provision on the Military Academy bill the architect received 3½ per cent for the preparation of plans, and that the superintendent of construction was the consulting architect, who received $5,000 a year?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; that is the provision which was adopted on the Military Academy bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; but what was done under that provision is what we are interested in. Now, did he receive 3½ per cent for the preparation of plans?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. And the consulting architect received $5,000 a year for superintending the construction?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. How long was he preparing the plans?

Mr. FOSS. I do not know; I presume for a considerable length of time.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], the chairman of the committee, a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I want to know what was the original appropriation for this naval station—how much money has been appropriated?

Mr. FOSS. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. And how much has been expended, approximately?

Mr. FITZGERALD. About $10,000, I think.

Mr. FOSS. Yes; to January 1, 1906.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. What was the estimated cost of this plant at the time it was undertaken by the Government?

Mr. FOSS. There was no estimated cost stated two years ago, but it was presumed that this naval station would cost about as much as the one at Newport, which, I may say, cost between one million and a half and $2,000,000, and with further improvements and remodeling which they expect to make, of $750,000, will cost in the neighborhood of two millions to two millions and a half of money.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Is it not a fact, in the hearings before the gentleman's committee two years ago, it was stated that the cost would not exceed $750,000?

Mr. FOSS. Oh, no.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I got that statement from a speech of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], delivered when this proposition was up in 1904. Mr. Chairman, I notice that there is a provision in this bill for the making of these plans for the construction of this plant. I understood the chairman of the committee to state a few moments ago that the Secretary of the Navy had already prepared and adopted some plans and specifications.

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I want to ask the gentleman under what authority the Secretary of the Navy did that?

Mr. FOSS. The appropriation of two years ago was for $250,000 for the establishment of a station. The Secretary of the Navy—at that time Mr. Morton—I presume felt that he had the authority to consult an architect to get out preliminary plans or sketches upon which he could base estimates, to be sent here to Congress, for the construction of that station.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Well, if under that act he had the authority to do that much, why is there any necessity for this provision in the present bill? If he had authority to have prepared preliminary plans, would he not have authority to have the completed plans prepared?

Mr. FOSS. It is doubtful whether he would have such authority. I should think that the matter of the appropriation of $250,000 might cover the question.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. The gentleman thinks it might?

Mr. FOSS. Yes. I think there is a question of doubt as to whether he had authority to go any further than to get out preliminary plans, and yet I am not going to pass upon that question.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Will the gentleman tell the House who was the architect employed by Mr. Morton?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Jarvis Hunt, of Chicago.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Does the gentleman know what compensation it was agreed that he should receive?

Mr. FOSS. The usual architect's fees, I am informed.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Which, according to the discussion here, ranges from 3½ to 5 per cent. If it is 5 per cent, it would be $100,000.

Mr. FOSS. Including superintendence, it is 5 per cent.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. In getting these preliminary plans, did Mr. Morton invite proposals from any other architects? Did he submit it to competition in any way?

Mr. FOSS. Not that I am informed of.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Does the gentleman know how he made the selection?

Mr. FOSS. No.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Just arbitrarily selected somebody to make these plans?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; and he selected a good architect, too.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I will ask the gentleman this further question, if he does not think it is time to apply another coat of whitewash to Mr. Morton?

Mr. FOSS. Well, that question is not involved here to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking a question. The total aggregate expenditure contemplated here under these plans is $2,000,000.

Mr. FOSS. For the construction of the building.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, 3½ per cent is the amount which was allowed the architect who prepared the plans under the same amendment which the gentleman has offered—plans that were prepared for the Military Academy.

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is agreed to, namely, limiting the amount that the Secretary can pay for these plans to 2½ per cent of the cost, that would be $50,000 merely for preparing the plans, and I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he does not think that is a sufficient sum for the service?

Mr. FOSS. I do not think you can get a first-class architect to do it in this country.

Mr. TAWNEY. But this 2½ per cent does not include the superintending the construction of the building.

Mr. FOSS. Of course it does not, but the architects themselves allow about 1½ per cent for superintendence. This question of plans, of getting out preliminary plans and sketches and getting out another set of plans for working plans and then detailed plans, running along for months and months, is not a small job, let me say to the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. And let me say to the gentleman from Illinois that we are constructing a power plant here, or propose to construct one, under the authority heretofore given by Congress, and the Superintendent of the Capitol has submitted a proposal to various contractors for the construction of that plant, the cost of which will aggregate between a million and a million and a half of dollars. Plans and specifications for this plant have been prepared and submitted by all of the bidders, and I am told that the cost of the plans and specifications to each bidder was only about $7,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that a conversation of this importance between the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations ought to be heard by a quorum of the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi make that point?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I make the point that there is no quorum present; yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Mississippi defer the point of no quorum until the gentlemen of the House have returned from the restaurant, where they are now lunching?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, not being a plutocrat myself, I think we had better have them here.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting). A hundred Members are present—a quorum.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to congratulate you, Mr. Chairman, upon your arithmetical calculation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to call the attention of the committee to what is involved in this paragraph. The paragraph is so framed it does not put any limit upon the complete improvements of the naval training station; it only limits the amount to be expended for buildings there. As I understand the statement of the officer in charge of the new naval training station, it will take $1,500,000 to build the buildings in which 1,000 men may be trained, and it is the purpose eventually to provide a station up there for the training of 2,000 men.

Mr. FOSS. That is not the intention of the committee. The estimate is for 1,000 men.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, the statement was that they would necessarily have to put up an establishment to train 2,000 men. Now, those buildings alone which are affected by this amendment are to cost $2,000,000. It seems to me that some limitation should be placed upon the amount that is to be paid for the preparation of the plans, and, in my opinion, 2½ per cent of $2,000,000—$50,000—is sufficient. Any other Member of the House believing that a larger sum should be paid is at liberty to offer an amendment in conformity with his views.

Mr. FOSS. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. I would say to the gentleman, do you not think it is fair to leave this matter entirely upon the basis of the Military Academy, and——

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. FOSS. I will accept your first amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have the law under which plans of the Military Academy were prepared, and I will say to the gentleman there is no such provision in here as is contained in this amendment. There is a limitation upon the amount to be paid after plans are prepared, but there was no attempt on the part of Congress to limit either to a reasonable sum or otherwise the amount to be paid for the preparation of plans. It is a notorious fact that great dissatisfaction was occasioned in Congress when it was ascertained that for the new buildings at the Naval Academy 5 per cent was paid upon the contemplated cost of $8,000,000. The limit since then has been raised to $11,000,000——

Mr. FOSS. Not $11,000,000; $10,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, $10,000,000 at least.

Mr. FOSS. It was done by Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course it was done by Congress, but the limit has been raised from eight to ten million dollars. Nobody, as far as I know, in the House knows whether 5 per cent on the additional $2,000,000 has been paid to the architect.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. Was the price paid for preparation of plans only?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It included everything.

Mr. PERKINS. Plans and superintendence both?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It included everything; but here is a provision to make provision for the preparation of plans, and, in my judgment, there should be some reasonable limitation fixed upon the amount. I repeat, in my opinion 2½ per cent is a reasonable limitation. That is why I offered the amendment. If Members think a greater sum than that should be paid, they can offer an amendment. But I have no doubt that they will gladly accept the $50,000 for the preparation of these plans.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS].

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 30.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting the same amendment, with 3 per cent instead of 2½ per cent.

Mr. FOSS. If the gentleman will insert 3½ per cent, the same as for the Military Academy, I will accept it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman can call my attention to any provision of law making it 3½ per cent for the Military Academy I will change the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by inserting, after the words "provided for," the following: "In no event to exceed 3 per cent of the estimated cost of the improvement."

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In voting for the original amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] I was not indulging in buncombe. I believe that amendment carried an adequate compensation for the making of these plans. Apparently the majority of the limited number of gentlemen present in this committee did not agree with that view. They voted down the 2½ per cent limitation. Now the amendment is renewed, changed only to the extent of fixing that compensation at 3 per cent. Very pertinently the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has suggested that there is no evident authority in law for the payment of 3½ per cent at the Military Academy, but even, Mr. Chairman, if there were such a law exhibited here to-day, I should still support the amendment for a 3 per cent limitation upon the fees in this case, because I do not believe that the interests of the Government were sufficiently safeguarded in the construction of the buildings at the Military Academy in the matter of limiting the fees paid for the plans.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, we will unquestionably have to pay for superintendence during the construction of these buildings, and it is notorious that the Government pays liberally for such services as that. And I believe that if the Members of this House will seriously consider that they are proposing to give a very large compensation for an amount of work which did not tax for any prolonged period the talents of the architect, they will support the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. I believe it ought to prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS].

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 31.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think on a question of the importance of this there ought to be a hundred Members present. I make the point of order that there is no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas raises the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] There are 100 Members present, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] to include in the amendment 3½ per cent commission to the architect.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. A substitute would be in order, would it not?

The CHAIRMAN. It might be.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I move to substitute 3½ per cent, to include charges for superintendent during the period of construction.

Mr. BUTLER. You can not get an architect to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by inserting after the words "provided for" the words "in no event to exceed 3½ per cent of the estimated cost of the improvement."

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. OLMSTED having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On May 9, 1906:

H. J. Res. 149. Joint resolution extending the thanks of Congress to Gen. Horace Porter;

H. R. 15334. An act to authorize the construction of dams and power stations on the Coosa River at Lock 2, Alabama; and

H. R. 11796. An act for the diversion of water from the Sacramento River, in the State of California, for irrigation purposes.

On May 10, 1906:

H. R. 16521. An act directing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and convey a certain parcel of land to Johnson County, Wyo.;

H. R. 8226. An act granting an increase of pension to Laura B. Ihrie;

H. R. 10251. An act granting an increase of pension to Sarah M. E. Hinman;

H. R. 11635. An act granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah Lunsford;

H. R. 15397. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward Gillespie;

H. R. 15687. An act granting an increase of pension to William F. M. Rice;

H. R. 15907. An act granting an increase of pension to Lewis De Laittre; and

H. R. 16215. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary Dagenfield.

On May 11, 1906:

H. R. 15435. An act to empower the Secretary of War to convey to the city of Minneapolis certain lands in exchange for other lands to be used for flowage purposes.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment "to include superintendency of the construction of said building."

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, what is the question now? What is the parliamentary status?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is trying to find out. The Chair begs to say to members of the committee that it is not the business of the reading clerks to write amendments, and they are sometimes announced in such indefinite terms that it is difficult for the Clerk to put them in form or to know where they belong.

The Chair holds that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas is not in order. It is too remote. It is an amendment to an amendment to an amendment. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

The question was taken; and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] as amended.

The question was taken; and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I gave notice the other day that I desired to strike out the words "and for other necessary improvements." It is a mistake to insert them on line 25, on page 34. We received this other provision from the Navy Department, and those words should be stricken out, so that every dollar of this appropriation shall go to the construction of buildings.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. They were stricken out the other day.

Mr. FOSS. No; I gave notice that I would move to strike them out.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman send his amendment to the Clerk, so that the committee may know what it is?

Mr. FOSS. It is to strike out the words "and for other necessary improvements," on page 34, line 25. That provides that the money that is appropriated shall go to the construction of buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 25, page 34, strike out the words "and for other necessary improvements."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be recognized in opposition to the amendment. The estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Navy were in somewhat different language from this provision in the bill. It contains this language: "For necessary improvements," and in addition to that it had a provision, which I will offer in a moment, which provided that complete plans should be made not only for the buildings to be erected at this naval training station, but for all contemplated improvements to be made at the station. Members of the committee would be inclined to believe that the limit of cost of preparing this naval station is $2,000,000. As a matter of fact, if the provision be adopted in its present shape, the cost of this naval training station will be from $2,500,000 up. Already $250,000 has been made available for the improvement of the ground and for other improvements in connection with the station. I believe there should be some definite limit fixed upon the entire cost, and when the plans for this naval station are prepared, they should include plans for every improvement contemplated at the place. Now, whatever may be the estimate, the cost of improvements should be fixed in this bill, and then those in charge of the work should go ahead with the work, knowing how much they could expend on that particular work.

Mr. JOHNSON. Has the gentleman from his experience on the Naval Committee an idea as to what the proper amount of limit of appropriation should be?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not on the Naval Committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. I thought you were.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have never been other than an "honorary" member. Why, I believe in the hearings before the committee it was stated that it would cost two or three hundred thousand dollars in addition to the $2,000,000. From the hearings it would appear that they had no definite information as to just how much it would cost to make the other improvements. In this connection, I am inclined to think that it was the belief that this was a restriction of the cost of the buildings alone. Now, there should be some limitation upon the amount of money which will be eventually expended in putting this training station into proper shape. This ultimate cost should be fixed, and I hope the gentleman from Illinois, in his desire to make this a proper station, having due regard to economy, will accept an amendment that will include complete plans for all the improvements, and fix some definite limit upon the entire cost of the station.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I will state this: That the Department in sending us these estimates, could only send the plans and estimates for the construction of the buildings; that while there were things which would necessarily follow, as for instance, the water supply, sidewalks, and the distribution of light, heat, and power, yet the estimates could not be determined wholly as to that until they had got the buildings located and under way. Here was a large tract of land without anything but trees and foliage on it. It is very different, for instance, from the rebuilding of the Naval Academy or the Military Academy, where the buildings were put largely on the old sites. But these other expenses which would come in, and which were comparatively small, can not be determined until later. And, as anyone knows, when they are building a house, they would first build the house and afterwards improve the grounds. All these would naturally come later. There were $250,000 appropriated for the purchase of land and the establishment of the station at the beginning, but which now is available, by reason of the donation of the land, for these incidental improvements. Now, these matters will always be under the control of Congress, anyway.

Mr. JOHNSON. How much land was donated by Chicago? All that will be needed?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; all that is needed. One hundred and seventy-two acres, worth $1,000 an acre, which was donated by the citizens of Chicago for this naval training station.

Mr. JOHNSON. Have you the preliminary plans that have been made, and can you give us any idea as to what this station will cost?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; there are these estimates. Now, the full estimates were $2,000,000 for the construction of the buildings and $528,000 for the incidental matters, such as sidewalks, drainage, steam distribution, electric distribution, fences, breakwater, rifle range, telephone system, etc.—$528,000 additional estimates, but some of these the committee say will not be necessary. I will say to the gentleman that I hope that this $250,000 already appropriated, which was rendered available by reason of the donation of the land, which would have had to be applied to the purchase of land, will take care of the greatest part of these things.

The whole spirit of the Navy Department and the committee is to hold this training station down in its cost to what is reasonable and economical. I call for a vote.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELIHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend remarks made by me on the naval bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD remarks made by him during the discussion of the naval bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 35, line 5, after the word "building," insert "and complete improvements and for each and every purpose connected therewith."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in the estimate sent to Congress by the Secretary of the Navy that is practically the language that was used:

Naval training station, Great Lakes—buildings: Toward the construction of buildings, and for other necessary improvements at the naval training station, Great Lakes: Provided, That before any part of this sum is expended, complete plans shall be prepared and approved by the Secretary of the Navy covering all contemplated new buildings and improvements at the naval training station, Great Lakes, and for each and every purpose connected therewith.

Mr. FOSS. But the Secretary of the Navy did not fix any limit on the cost.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The question of limit is not involved in this amendment; but what is involved in this amendment is this: That before they commence to make the improvements they shall prepare complete plans for all of the contemplated improvements, and with the complete plans whatever the limit of cost may be it will be proper to fix it in this bill. Personally I believe the expenditure of $2,250,000 should give a very adequate naval training station for men who are to spend not more than four months in training at the station. If the gentleman from Illinois thinks it will cost more than $2,250,000, he can increase the limit of cost. This provision as it now stands is ingeniously drawn. It only limits the cost of the buildings, but does not require plans to be prepared for other improvements to be had in connection with the buildings. So that instead of a naval training station costing $2,000,000 it may cost $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 or whatever else it may be contemplated.

Mr. FOSS. Oh, no, no; that is ridiculous.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the hearings before the Naval Committee. Captain Ross, who is in charge of this place, stated that it would cost $1,500,000 for the main building to train 1,000 men; but he said it would be necessary, in order to have a proper training station, to have facilities for training 2,000 men. If it cost $1,500,000 to train 1,000 men, it will cost $3,000,000 for buildings to train 2,000 men. In addition to that, fourteen single officers' quarters are required for one unit of 1,000 men, and these officers' quarters are to cost $12,000 apiece.

So, if there are to be 2,000 men, there must be twenty-eight single officers' quarters, each costing $12,000. So, I say, this is the time to fix the limit and to make the Secretary of the Navy have prepared complete plans so that Congress may know what it is about to do, and in authorizing some particular thing it may do so intelligently and not be told afterwards that the authorization was only to train 1,000 men, and it will thereafter be necessary to double the facilities at a cost of two or three million dollars additional. As this is the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy himself after, I suppose, some consultation with the architect who is now at work, I suppose the gentleman from Illinois will have no objection to accepting such an amendment.

Mr. FOSS. I would say that this is not the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy did not fix any limit to the cost at $2,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not fixing the limit of cost in offering this amendment, but it is the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, and I read it from the estimates submitted by him.

Mr. FOSS. I understand that in the provision the gentleman offers it includes everything within the limit of the $2,000,000. Is not that true?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not necessarily, because I have another amendment that I will offer.

Mr. FOSS. The Secretary of the Navy never made any such recommendation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Secretary of the Navy recommends the language that is used in my amendment; he recommends that it be enacted into law, and I read it from his recommendation in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. FOSS. Not if they were to limit the cost at $2,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not put that limit on it; the gentleman from Illinois put that limit on it.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, we had a very full hearing on this whole matter. The Secretary of the Navy in the original estimates that came before the committee in regard to putting in a provision for plans for everything connected with the naval training station did not fix any limit of the cost. After our hearings, after discussion of the whole matter with the commandant of the training station and also with the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance a provision was sent to me by the Navy Department with this proviso, word for word, which the committee inserted in the bill. I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 16, noes 34.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval magazine, Mare Island, California: One magazine building, 30 by 80 feet, $7,000; extension of building "A5" 50 feet, $3,100; extension of primer house 20 by 20 feet, $1,200; in all, $11,300.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. That motion is made for the purpose of referring briefly to the statements made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] when the naval bill was under discussion on Friday last. The gentleman from Iowa said:

The gentleman has omitted that other case, quite recent, when one of our larger and more valuable vessels was run into a dock in the harbor of New York. One would suppose these gentlemen would be familiar with such waters.

After citing this, among other instances of alleged neglect by commanders of our war ships, the gentleman from Iowa goes on to say:

Mr. Chairman, these are only a few that occur to me from my knowledge gained from the newspapers of these instances of inefficiency or incapacity to handle these great vessels. We are spending millions of dollars to build up a great navy. I think it is the part of patriotism to do this, but there ought to be some guaranty, some assurance that when we secure such vessels they will not be recklessly destroyed by incompetency or inefficiency.

The members of the committee will see that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] indulged in a very severe stricture upon the captain of the vessel which run into the dock in New York Harbor. We all know the gentleman from Iowa to be a man of upright character, a man who would not knowingly criticize a person in or out of the Navy unless in his judgment that criticism was thoroughly merited, and from my knowledge of the gentleman I feel sure that when the facts of this particualr case are called to his attention he will be the first to acknowledge that he was in error in what he said with regard to this particular accident. This accident happened on June 29, 1897, under the following conditions:

The old battle ship Maine was proceeding down East River, between the navy-yard and Brooklyn Bridge, very carefully, when there happened a collision between an excursion steamer and a tug towing some barges immediately ahead of the Maine. Capt. Charles D. Sigsbee, now a rear-admiral of the United States Navy, was then in command of the Maine and on the bridge. Seeing this accident, the captain turned his vessel toward shore to avoid a collision, when another vessel, the Colorado, belonging to the Mallory Line, I think, came down the river in tow of a tug and filled in nearly all of the space between the piers and the two vessels in collision. The captain then undertook to go between these vessels and the pier, and just at that time an excursion steamer from New Jersey, carrying on board some 800 women and children, appeared from behind the Colorado in the narrow opening toward which the Maine was making. There was a crisis that no seamanship could have foreseen, and the problem for the captain of the Maine to consider was whether he would keep on his course, the excursion steamer being on the wrong side of the river, run into her, sink her, and possibly sacrifice hundreds of lives, or run his vessel into a pier; and on the moment, with rare judgment and discretion, the captain of the Maine chose the latter alternative, and ran the vessel into a pier. Mr. Chairman, a court of inquiry was held upon that accident. The papers of New York at the time rang with praises of the seamanship and the presence of mind displayed by Captain Sigsbee in avoiding an awful sacrifice of human life. The board of inquiry which sat upon the matter reported that the captain was entirely blameless. After the report had been made to the Navy Department by the board, Captain Sigsbee received a letter which I will take the liberty of reading. It is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 4, 1897.

SIR: Following are extracts from the report of the board which investigated the circumstances connected with the collision between the U. S. S. Maine, under your command, and a car float and pier in the East River, New York, on the 29th ultimo:

"It appears to the board that the situation was forced upon the Maine by the collisions which occurred between other ships ahead of her and by the confusion resulting therefrom; and that the commanding officer of the Maine, having steered toward the New York side to avoid collision with those vessels, and there finding the Isabella crowded with people coming through the narrow gap which he intended to use, the second phase of the situation was also forced upon him, and there was left to him to choose between the collision with the Isabella or with the New York pier.

"The serious disaster which might have resulted from collision with the Isabella and the comparatively slight injury liable to occur from collision with the New York piers leaves no doubt in the minds of the board that the judgment of the commanding officer of the Maine was sound and correct, and that he probably avoided serious disaster and loss of life to the Isabella by taking the course he did.

"The testimony shows that good order and discipline prevailed and that all orders and signals were clearly understood and promptly obeyed."

The Department congratulates you upon the promptness and correctness with which you solved the problem as to which of the alternative courses you should pursue in the critical situation in which, without fault of your own, you found yourself upon the occasion referred to. The readiness with which you met the needs of the occasion shows that you possess those qualities which are called for in every great crisis. You have reflected credit upon yourself and upon the service to which you belong.

Very respectfully,
THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
Acting Secretary.

Capt. CHARLES D. SIGSBEE, U. S. Navy,
Commanding U. S. S. Maine,
North Atlantic Station.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, in the face of such a letter as that, of which any officer in any service might be proud, the criticisms of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] of this particular case are wholly unmerited, and I am sure he will be the first to admit it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval hospital, Norfolk, Va.: For the renovation of the present hospital buildings and the erection of new wards, $100,000.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, after the word "wards," in line 26, page 38, I move to insert the words "the cost not to exceed $200,000." That should have gone in the bill originally. So that it will read, "and the erection of new wards, the cost not to exceed $200,000, $100,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 38, in line 26, after the word "wards," insert "the cost not to exceed $200,000."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total public works under Navy Department, $5,023,550.

Mr. FOSS. Those two lines, 11 and 12, I move to strike out. They simply relate to the total and should not appear in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 11 and 12, page 39.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee to what extent this appropriation is increased over the current appropriation?

Mr. FOSS. For public works?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSS. I think it is $800,000——

Mr. TAWNEY. My information is, the current appropriation is $20,000, and this is an increase of $137,000, and I would like to ask you why?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. You mean the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes. Total public works under the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, $157,000, which I understand is an increase of $137,000.

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Are you erecting any new hospitals?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. A hospital at Norfolk, Va.

Mr. FOSS. Not a new hospital, but a remodeling of an old one.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I did not mean to mislead the gentleman from Minnesota, but that is the renovation of an old hospital, making it practically a new hospital.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Civil establishment, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts: Navy-yard, Portsmouth, N. H.: In general storehouses: Two bookkeepers, at $1,200 each; one assistant bookkeeper, at $720; one bill clerk, at $1,000; one assistant clerk, at $720; one shipping and receiving clerk, at $1,000; in all, $5,840.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish the chairman of the committee would tell me, for my information, what changes are made in these changes in the rations? What is the object of all these sections? What modifications do they make in the system as it now exists?

Mr. FOSS. The new ration provided for differs from the present one in very few things. Fresh fish and fresh fruit are added, and also fresh instead of condensed milk. Otherwise, the ration is just the same.

Mr. PERKINS. The changes are very slight.

Mr. FOSS. Very slight.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, civil establishment, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, $103,932.28; and no other fund appropriated by this act shall be used in payment for such service.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs if he would not accept a separate paragraph here turning into the Treasury the balance of the fund appropriated for the dry dock at Guantanamo? We have not carried an appropriation for two years now.

Mr. FOSS. I will say to the gentleman I am very sorry, but I do not feel I could accept the proposition, and we have passed that item anyway.

Mr. RIXEY. I propose to offer a separate amendment.

Mr. FOSS. Well, it would not be proper here. This relates to the civil establishment.

Mr. RIXEY. Well, I will withdraw the amendment for the present.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR.

Construction and repair of vessels: For preservation and completion of vessels on the stocks and in ordinary; purchase of materials and stores of all kinds; steam steerers, pneumatic steerers, steam capstans, steam windlasses, and all other auxiliaries; labor in navy-yards and on foreign stations; purchase of machinery and tools for use in shops; carrying on work of experimental model tank; designing naval vessels; construction and repair of yard craft, lighters, and barges; wear, tear, and repair of vessels afloat; general care, increase, and protection of the Navy in the line of construction and repair; incidental expenses for vessels and navy-yards, inspectors' offices, and bureau, such as advertising, foreign postage, telegrams, telephone service, photographing, books, professional magazines, plans, stationery, and instruments for drafting room, $7,600,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repair of any wooden ship, when the estimated cost of such repairs, to be appraised by a competent board of naval officers, shall exceed 10 per cent of the estimated cost, appraised in like manner, of a new ship of the same size and like material: Provided, however, That of the above sum $100,000, or such portion thereof as may be necessary, shall be used to repair, equip, and restore the frigate Constitution, as far as may be practicable, to her original condition, but not for active service: And provided further, That the sum of $300,000 from the unexpended balance under appropriations "Construction and repair of vessels" for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, is hereby reappropriated for "Construction and repair of vessels" for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the paragraph just read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 50, in line 14, strike out all after the word "dollars," down to and including the word "material," in line 19, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repair of any ship when the estimated cost of such repairs, to be appraised by a competent board of naval officers, shall exceed 5 per cent of the estimated cost, appraised in like manner, of a new ship of the same size and like material unless estimates for such repairs shall have been submitted to and approved by Congress: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall deprive the Secretary of the Navy of the authority to order repairs of ships damaged in foreign waters or on the high seas, so far as may be necessary to bring them home."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph and amendments thereon be passed without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] asks unanimous consent that the paragraph just read and amendments pending thereto be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF STEAM ENGINEERING.

Steam machinery: For completion, repairing, and preservation of machinery and boilers of naval vessels, including cost of new boilers; distilling, refrigerating, and auxiliary machinery; preservation of and small repairs to machinery and boilers in vessels in ordinary, receiving, and training vessels; repair and care of machinery of yard tugs and launches; $3,500,000.

[Mr. RIXEY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. RIXEY. I merely wanted to ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs if there was additional evidence on this point.

Mr. FOSS. There is, and it appears in hearing No. 113.

Mr. RIXEY. Will the chairman of the committee state what the hearing shows in that respect?

Mr. FOSS. We had before our committee, I will say, the Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, and we went into a rather exhaustive hearing with regard to this whole matter. And while the chief did not present any itemized statement of all of this appropriation, yet in general terms he furnished a statement showing where the money went to, as appears on page 1049 of his hearing.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that he may continue his remarks for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I was very sure that I had heard no explanation by the bureau chiefs in regard to this item. Admiral Rae requested an increase from $2,500,000, carried in the last bill, to $3,500,000. I was one of the members of the committee who was opposed to granting this increase until we had an accounting of how the last appropriation had been spent, and, so far as I know, this information has not been furnished in the detail asked for. I will look at the statement referred to by the chairman, but I have seen no satisfactory explanation. Admiral Rae stated that it had to be furnished by the Paymaster-General, and when the Paymaster-General was called upon he said his accounts were not kept in such a way that he could show how the $2,500,000 had been spent.

Mr. FOSS. The Bureau of Supplies and Accounts sent the letter, which the gentleman will see on page 1046, containing a statement of expenditures under this appropriation.

Mr. RIXEY. Was that subsequent to the hearing?

Mr. FOSS. That was subsequent to the hearing.

Mr. RIXEY. If that is true, Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied. I do not think, however, that the letter and statement referred to gives the information asked for by the committee and not given in the correspondence read by me.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer to this provision which is identically in line with the amendment I offered a moment ago in respect to reconstruction, and both of them can be considered at the same time. I am in doubt as to whether it should be offered at the end of this paragraph or at the conclusion of the provisions in the bill in respect to repairs of machinery on the next page, which is page 55, where it reads:

In all, steam machinery, $5,505,000.

I will offer the amendment here at the end of the last line at the bottom of page 54.

Mr. FOSS. I ask that this paragraph and the amendments thereto be passed without prejudice.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be read and then considered and inserted at the proper place. My impression is that it ought to be inserted at the bottom of page 54, but I do not know whether it should be a limitation on the entire appropriation or only on a part of it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. May I ask why it is that the gentleman passes these sections over in this way?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] frankly that the effect of these amendments I have offered is to establish practically a new policy in respect to the reconstruction of the Navy.

At the present time we have a policy of reconstruction and a policy of original construction. The policy of original construction is under the control of Congress; the policy of reconstruction is absolutely within the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, and under the title of repairs to vessels and repairs to machinery, and under the appropriations which are made for these two purposes, the Secretary of the Navy is to-day engaged in the reconstruction of vessels to an extent that involves the expenditure of as much as $800,000 on each vessel. This was never intended and should be stopped. It is for the purpose of limiting this discretion of the Secretary of the Navy that I offer both amendments, and the gentleman in charge of the bill has asked that both of them be passed for the present, so that the committee can proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is anybody trying to find out how many of these boats have been run aground?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know whether anybody is trying to do that or not, but I think the information Congress has at present is quite full and complete on that subject.

Mr. MUDD. Is there a request for unanimous consent to pass this now?

The CHAIRMAN. The first thing in order is for the Clerk to report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 54, after the word "dollars," in line 25, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of said sum shall be applied to the repair of engines, boilers, and machinery of ships where the estimated cost of such repairs shall exceed 5 per cent of the estimated cost of new engines and machinery of the same character and power unless estimates for such repairs shall have been submitted to and approved by Congress: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall deprive the Secretary of the Navy of the authority to order repairs of the engine, boilers, and machinery of ships damaged in foreign waters or on the high seas so far as may be necessary to bring them home.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the paragraph just read, with the amendment, be passed without prejudice.

Mr. MUDD. Reserving the right to object, I do not know whether the paragraph is subject to the point of order, but I do not want the amendment to be considered as pending and as waiving the point of order. I reserve the point of order and reserve the right to object further.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman reserve the point of order against the amendment?

Mr. MUDD. I will not object if we can have the understanding that these two paragraphs be recurred to and disposed of before the increase of the Navy is considered.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of order reserved against the amendment or against the paragraph?

Mr. MUDD. Against the amendment. I do not know whether it will lie or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved.

Mr. TAWNEY. The point of order is not reserved on the former amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota that the paragraph be passed without prejudice, with the point of order reserved thereto?

Mr. MUDD. I reserve the right to object, and will object if it is not disposed of before the increase of the Navy is taken up. I do not want to wait until we shall have finished everything else in the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is entirely within the discretion of the committee. The gentleman in charge of the bill can call it up whenever he sees fit. He is the chairman of your own committee.

Mr. MUDD. With that understanding, I shall not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

One sword master, at $1,500; one assistant, at $1,200, and two assistants, at $1,000 each; one instructor in gymnastics, at $1,200; one assistant librarian, at $1,800; one assistant librarian, at $1,000; one secretary of the Naval Academy, at $1,800; two clerks to the superintendent, at $1,200 each; one clerk to the superintendent, at $1,000; one clerk to the commandant of midshipmen, at $1,200; one writer to the commandant of midshipmen, at $720; one clerk to the paymaster, at $1,200; one clerk to the paymaster, at $1,000; one dentist, at $1,600; one baker, at $600; one mechanic in department of physics, at $730; one mechanic in the department of ordnance, at $951.52; one cook, at $325.50; one messenger to the superintendent, at $600; one armorer, at $649.50; one chief gunner's mate, at $529.50; one quarter gunner, at $469.50; one coxswain, at $469.50; one seaman in the department of seamanship, at $397.50; one attendant in the department of navigation and one in the department of physics, at $300 each; sixteen attendants at recitation rooms, library, store, chapel, armory, gymnasium, and offices, at $300 each; one bandmaster, at $1,200; twenty-one first-class musicians, at $420 each; seven second-class musicians, at $360 each; services of organist at chapel, $300; one assistant instructor in gymnastics, $1,000; one clerk to the superintendent, $900; one assistant baker, $540; one mechanic in department of physics, $720; one cook, $600; two instructors in physical training, at $1,500 each; one clerk to the commandant of midshipmen, $1,000; one electrical machinist in department of physics, $1,000; two seamen in the department of seamanship, at $397.50 each; one chief cook, $1,200; two cooks, at $600 each, $1,200; one steward, $1,200; one assistant steward, $600; one head waiter, $720; two assistant head waiters, at $480 each, $960; two pantry men, at $420 each, $840; one assistant baker, $420; necessary waiters, at $16 per month each, $13,440; in all, $125,820.02.

Mr. TAWNEY. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 60, after line 24, insert:

"No person shall be admitted for instruction at the Naval Academy at Annapolis from any foreign country except upon authority of law hereafter enacted."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I accept that amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, Naval Academy, $388,663.08.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 63, after line 7, add:

"Provided, That no part of the appropriations herein made for the support of the Naval Academy or for buildings and grounds of the Naval Academy shall be expended for compensation of clerks or clerical service of any nature except as herein provided for, unless the clerks and clerical service are specifically authorized and appropriations therefor specifically made."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I do not care to discuss it. It is merely a limitation of the appropriation.

Mr. FOSS. Reserving the point of order, I want an explanation of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not concede that it is subject to a point of order. It is a limitation upon this appropriation, and I do not care to discuss it.

Mr. FOSS. Then, I ask the Chair to decide the point of order.

Mr. MUDD. One word upon that, Mr. Chairman. In that connection I desire to read from the original act authorizing the construction of buildings and improvement of grounds at the Naval Academy. I heard the amendment so indistinctly I scarcely know just what is its purpose. But, as I understand it, no part of this appropriation shall be used for anything except just what, I will ask the gentleman?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, have the amendment read again.

Mr. MUDD. Will the Chair have the amendment reported again?

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on that briefly. It is likely that the provision does no harm, but it isn't quite clear that it does not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman talking on the point of order or on the amendment?

Mr. MUDD. On the point of order. You can not impose by a limitation anything that operates as a repeal of a permanent provision of law. Now, in that connection, I want to read what you might term to be the organic act providing for the buildings at the Naval Academy, which will be found in the act approved June 7, 1900, Fifty-sixth Congress. I will read it:

Buildings and grounds, Naval Academy: Toward the construction of buildings, and for other necessary improvements, at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., $350,000: Provided, That before any part of this sum is expended, complete plans shall be prepared and approved by the Secretary of the Navy covering all contemplated new buildings and improvements at the Naval Academy and for each and every purpose connected therewith.

Now, in connection with some of these buildings it may be necessary to employ a slight clerical force; it may be necessary to employ an inspector, timekeeper, accountant, and others who may act as clerks, and they would properly come under the description involved in this language—"for each and every purpose connected herewith." This was the language of this provision provided in an amendment to an appropriation bill by the present Speaker of this House, who was then chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

The money we are appropriating now in this bill for buildings and improvements at the academy is in pursuance of and subject to the provisions of that act that contemplates "each and every purpose connected therewith." It may be that serious harm might be done if we were not allowed to employ and pay inspectors, accountants, timekeepers, and others out of that fund, and if that was the effect of the amendment we would, under the guise of a limitation, repeal a permanent provision of law. The decisions are uniform to the effect that you can not under the form of a limitation repeal a permanent provision of law. That is why I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is clearly a limitation upon the appropriation contained in the paragraph to which it refers. It does not repeal any provision of law and does not purport to. It is within the power of the House to so amend appropriation bills as to limit appropriations to one particular line of objects and exclude another particular line of objects, even though they be authorized by law, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is to prevent the use of funds for the payment of clerks not contemplated in this appropriation act. I have no desire to accomplish what the gentleman from Maryland fears would be accomplished by this amendment, and I do not think it would be. I have information which I consider reliable that there is a clerk in the Naval Academy being paid out of the contingent fund, a clerk who was appointed as a laborer first, and then promoted to a clerkship, and his compensation paid out of this contingent fund for the Naval Academy. The desire of Congress has always been to prevent such practice. The Naval Committee has and does authorize all the clerical service that is required in the Naval Academy and for the civil establishment under the control of the Navy Department. Nobody should by subterfuge use funds appropriated for a certain specific purpose, for a purpose not authorized by Congress, and not in contemplation by the members of the committee or by Congress, when the appropriation is made. It is to stop that practice that I offer the amendment.

Mr. RIXEY. Does the gentleman's amendment apply to the contingent fund alone?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; to all the appropriations. It exempts all appropriations that are specifically made and exempts clerks that are authorized; clerks necessary to the building no doubt would be construed as within the authority.

Mr. RIXEY. I will ask the gentleman if under the contingent Naval Academy fund he does not think the Superintendent would have the right to employ a clerical force, if he needed it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not, except a clerical force for the board of visitors.

Mr. RIXEY. "Contingent, Navy." Does not that give broad discretion to the party at whose discretion the fund is placed?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not state that the contingent fund is for expenses alone. It enumerates with great particularity all things that would be included, and they could not spend the money except for purposes specifically mentioned.

Mr. RIXEY. It does particularize a great deal, but the paragraph does not limit it to the particular items.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury have been such that unless the particular expenditure has been mentioned in these itemized matters the expenditure could not be made.

Mr. RIXEY. My understanding of the funds carried under the head of "contingent" has been very different. Almost every bureau in the Navy Department has a large contingent fund at its disposal. My understanding was that he had absolute discretion over that and could expend it and did expend it as he chose. I tried on several occasions when the naval bill was up to reduce those amounts or to place the whole contingent fund under the authority of the Secretary of the Navy, but I was always unsuccessful in accomplishing that end. It does seem to me that when we place a fund under the head "contingent" it gives the superintendent or the bureau chief authority to spend that sum as he may think proper.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I think not. In some places in this bill—I can not put my hand on them——

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman a moment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MUDD. Does not the gentleman think if his amendment is agreed to it would prevent the payment out of the general fund of ten millions which we have provided for this work for necessary accountants, clerks, and others that may be needed in connection with it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman thinks that, I suggest the words "buildings and grounds at the Naval Academy" should be stricken from the amendment.

Mr. MUDD. You had better pay the money out of that fund than appropriate extra for it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let the gentleman move to strike out "buildings and grounds at Naval Academy," and I shall not object.

Mr. MUDD. Well, Mr. Chairman, I think we better vote on the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That would except that particular fund from the operation of this amendment. But I say I have information which is reliable that a clerk is being paid out of the contingent fund of the Naval Academy, and if the gentleman in charge of the bill desires that practice continued, he will oppose the amendment, but if he desires to have the civil establishment at the Naval Academy just what his committee authorizes it to be, he will be in favor of some such amendment as this.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 21, noes 41.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent, Marine Corps: For freight, tolls, cartage, advertising, washing of bed sacks, mattress covers, pillowcases, towels, and sheets, funeral expenses of marines, including the transportation of bodies from the place of demise to the homes of the deceased in the United States, stationery and other paper, telegraphing, rent of telephones, purchase and repair of typewriters, apprehension of stragglers and deserters, per diem of enlisted men employed on constant labor for a period of not less than ten days, employment of civilian labor, repair of gas and water fixtures, office and barracks furniture, camp and garrison equipage and implements, mess utensils for enlisted men, such as bowls, plates, spoons, knives and forks, tin cups, pans, pots, etc.; packing boxes, wrapping paper, oilcloth, crash, rope, twine, quarantine fees, camphor and carbolized paper, carpenters' tools, tools for police purposes, iron safes, purchase and repair of public wagons, purchase and repair of public harness, purchase of public horses, services of veterinary surgeons, and medicines for public horses; purchase and repair of hose, purchase and repair of fire extinguishers, purchase of fire hand grenades; purchase and repair of carts, wheelbarrows, and lawn mowers; purchase and repair of cooking stoves, ranges, stoves, and furnaces where there are no grates; purchase of ice, towels, soap, combs, and brushes for offices; postage stamps for foreign postage; purchase of books, newspapers, and periodicals; improving parade grounds, repair of pumps and wharves; laying drain, water, and gas pipes; water, introducing gas, and for gas, gas oil, and introduction and maintenance of electric lights; straw for bedding, mattresses, mattress covers, pillows, sheets; wire bunk bottoms for enlisted men at various posts; furniture for Government quarters and repair of same, and for all emergencies and extraordinary expenses arising at home and abroad, but impossible to anticipate or classify, $255,800.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 71, line 14, after the word "dollars," insert as follows: "Erection of marine barracks and officers' quarters, $15,000, which sum shall be in addition to $15,000 appropriated for this object in the naval appropriation act approved March 3, 1901, and $6,500 provided in the naval appropriation act approved April 27, 1904, for the naval station at New Orleans, La., $15,000."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that pending an explanation from the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think that provision is subject to the point of order, as it is simply an addition for an establishment heretofore authorized in two appropriation acts. It provides that it shall be in addition to $15,000 appropriated for this object in the naval appropriation act approved March 3, 1901, and $6,500 provided in the naval appropriation act approved April 27, 1904, for the naval station at New Orleans, La.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Has the gentleman these original appropriations? Was there a limit?

Mr. MEYER. It was specified.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Take the 1901 appropriation; was it a limit?

Mr. MEYER. It was simply $15,000. It was supposed at that time that such sum would be adequate for the construction of those marine barracks.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. And it was a limit, was it not?

Mr. MEYER. Yes; undoubtedly. It developed subsequently, however, that it was inadequate, so that the $6,500 additional was appropriated in the naval appropriation act approved April 27, 1904.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That was to complete it.

Mr. MEYER. Yes; it was supposed that would complete it, but it was ascertained, by reason of the increased cost of material, that that was inadequate; hence the Department could not make any contract, under the law, and now we want $15,000, making the total cost $36,500.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. But the gentleman does not say in his amendment that this shall be the final cost.

Mr. MEYER. I have no objection to having that stated.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Louisiana a question. This appropriation is in addition to previous appropriations made for the marine barracks at New Orleans?

Mr. MEYER. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. When was the construction of the barracks authorized?

Mr. MEYER. The first authorization was in the naval appropriation act of March 3, 1901.

Mr. TAWNEY. On the 3d of March, 1901, there was an appropriation for the construction of a naval barracks at New Orleans, and the amount appropriated was how much?

Mr. MEYER. Fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. TAWNEY. Was that the limit of cost?

Mr. MEYER. There was no specification as to the maximum cost. We simply appropriated $15,000, and the inference was that that amount should be the limit, although it was not so specified.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. MEYER. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. And I understand that since this first $15,000 was appropriated Congress has appropriated $6,500 more, making $21,500 total appropriation for the construction of these barracks.

Mr. MEYER. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I would like to ask the gentleman why it is, if this is necessary, the amount was not carried in the naval appropriation bill if it was reported from the committee to the House?

Mr. MEYER. It was not reported from the Naval Committee to the House. The Naval Committee, desiring to limit the aggregate amount of the bill, concluded not to recommend any of the buildings proposed for marine barracks at any place. Now, I was quite content with that, but it seems——

Mr. TAWNEY. The committee did not include this item because it did not want to increase the aggregate of appropriations carried in the bill?

Mr. MEYER. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. And left the gentleman to submit the question to the House of whether or not that aggregate should be increased?

Mr. MEYER. Permit me to explain.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is that a good reason why the House should increase the amount?

Mr. MEYER. Permit me to state that since that time an investigation has been made, and the Assistant Secretary of the Navy visited the New Orleans Naval Station. Upon his return he insisted that we should provide for these barracks by reason of the fact that the marines at that station are quartered in unsuitable farmhouses, the construction of these barracks not having been begun yet, and the quarters were insanitary and unwholesome.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do I understand the construction of the barracks has not yet begun?

Mr. MEYER. They are not yet begun.

Mr. TAWNEY. Although the first appropriation was made years ago?

Mr. MEYER. Yes, sir; because it was found—in fact, the quartermaster of the corps concluded that it was contrary to law, in his judgment, to make a contract for more than the amount specified in the appropriation. Another reason why the appropriation was not originally made larger was because of an error in the computation on the part of the officials of the Marine Corps. It was their desire to make the expenditure as moderate as possible.

Mr. TAWNEY. What assurance has the House that if this $15,000 is allowed that it will enable the Department to go on and construct barracks of sufficient capacity to accommodate the marines who are stationed there?

Mr. MEYER. Well, we have the positive statement as appears in the hearings of Colonel Denny, quartermaster of the Marine Corps, whom I questioned on the subject. He stated positively that this will be adequate.

Mr. TAWNEY. Was this estimated for by the Department?

Mr. MEYER. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. Was it sent in the annual estimates or sent in the supplemental estimates?

Mr. MEYER. It was sent in in the regular annual estimates.

Mr. TAWNEY. Was it in the regular annual estimates?

Mr. MEYER. Yes, sir. Now, permit me for a moment to read the report of Colonel Lauchheimer, colonel, adjutant, and inspector of the Marine Corps, in which he says, dated April 16, 1906:

Before submitting the usual report of my recent inspection of the marine barracks, naval station, Algiers, La., I deem it my duty, owing to the urgency of the situation, to submit to you this special report, in which attention is invited to the condition of said barracks, which barracks, in the opinion of the undersigned, are in all respects uninhabitable and unsanitary.

2. The command is living in two farmhouses which were upon the reservation at the time of its purchase. These houses are very old, have no modern or sanitary arrangements, are in a dilapidated condition, and are in thoroughly bad repair and incapable of being placed in either a habitable or sanitary condition. They are in all respects improper for the housing of men, especially so in a climate such as that of Algiers.

Mr. TAWNEY. Are those two farmhouses situated on the Government reservation?

Mr. MEYER. Yes, sir; they are.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do you think it is a greater hardship to the marines to house them in farmhouses than for the farmers of this country to house themselves in farmhouses?

Mr. MEYER. By no means; but these farmhouses are in an insanitary condition. They are very old and dilapidated and are only occupied now as a temporary measure.

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order that it is not in order. There seems to have been no authorization for the construction of barracks. An appropriation was made for the construction of barracks, $15,000, and then subsequently an appropriation of six thousand and some odd dollars in addition for that purpose, and now they come back here with the information that they erroneously estimated the cost of constructing the barracks and with no authorization for the construction of any barracks whatever; and until the Department can show the necessity first for the barracks there, and then submit an accurate estimate, I do not think Congress should be called upon to appropriate any more money for the purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman think that has anything to do with the point of order? Is it not a public work or object already in progress?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; it is not already in progress. It has not proceeded to the extent of being in progress, because the Department has not had the money to commence it. It can not be in progress until they have commenced the construction or until it has been authorized. It has not been authorized.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, in opposition to the amendment, that if this is a meritorious proposition the appropriation would have been carried in this bill. We all know the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER], and we know him to be one of the most estimable gentlemen in this House. I feel that when his colleagues on the Naval Committee refuse to insert an item of this kind in the bill which he himself has assisted in preparing it is absolutely impossible for the House to justify itself in incorporating a provision of that kind merely upon his recommendation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to call his attention to the fact that there were estimates submitted for marine barracks at the different naval establishments throughout the country, aggregating $575,400; that the Naval Committee refused to insert any one of the recommendations in the bill, and the Department has estimated for every place it is possible to put a barracks. The gentleman can see this from the list of estimates, and I doubt very much whether this is anywhere near the most meritorious recommendation contained in these estimates.

Mr. MEYER. Well, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TAWNEY. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that we have no evidence before the committee that would justify us in appropriating the additional $15,000 for this purpose, and, in my judgment, if the Committee on Naval Affairs was justified, with all the knowledge they had, with all the facts they had before them, in declining to incorporate this provision in the bill, it is a very good reason why the Committee of the Whole should not include it.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, I concede that the Naval Committee is quite ready to yield at times to proper arguments of the "gentleman from Louisiana" and I was quite content, that this appropriation should be omitted at the time the naval bill was before us in committee inasmuch as other meritorious similar projects were excluded. But, sir, since that time the information received renders it, in my judgment, imperative that these barracks should be constructed. If not, according to the statement of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, who made a personal inspection, the marines will have to be withdrawn from that station from want of proper accommodations. It seems impossible, in view of the insanitary condition, for them to remain there. I have no desire to press any appropriation on this committee, and do so only in instances when I know such to be justified and entirely proper.

Mr. TAWNEY. How many marines are stationed there?

Mr. MEYER. There are now about fifty.

Mr. TAWNEY. And it is proposed to erect a building costing $35,000 in which to house fifty marines?

Mr. MEYER. It is the purpose of the commandant of the Marine Corps to secure quarters for at least 200 men there. It affords a very good place for recuperation of marines who may return from service in Panama or the Philippines, and who may be suffering from the effects of those enervating climes, and, of course, for the healthy ones as well. The barren station at Guantanamo is now used mainly with this view, and I have it from the lips of men who have been there that they sicken from ennui and total absence of any means of amusement to vary the monotony.

Mr. TAWNEY. You say this is a good place for the marines to recuperate?

Mr. MEYER. It is a good place. The proximity of the city affords means for diversion and recreation so healthful to soldiers when not on duty.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it especially healthy?

Mr. MEYER. It is especially healthy. I would say to the gentleman that last summer during the prevalence of the yellow fever in New Orleans there was not a single death or case of that disease amongst the marines there stationed. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would submit that if we have soldiers in the Army or in the Navy we should most certainly give them proper accommodations and proper quarters. If we can not afford to protect our defenders in that way, we ought to abolish our military establishments altogether and rely upon that policy of peace among the nations which has been so eloquently depicted in recent speeches on this floor—a vain reliance, I fear.

Mr. Chairman, that I may not appear as proposing this amendment without proper warrant, I beg to submit extracts from the hearings before the Naval Committee, pages 744–745:

The CHAIRMAN. "Erection of marine barracks and officers' quarters, $15,000, which sum shall be in addition to $15,000 appropriated for this object in the naval appropriation act approved March 3, 1901, and $6,500 provided in the naval appropriation act approved April 27, 1904, naval station, New Orleans, La., $15,000."

How many $15,000 have you got in there?

Mr. RIXEY. That makes $36,000, does it not?

Colonel DENNY. Thirty-six thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. RIXEY. How many quarters does that give you?

Colonel DENNY. A barracks and one set of officers' quarters. They will be so constructed that they will be convenient for two—that is, probably a place for a man and his wife, and upstairs junior officers' quarters.

Mr. RIXEY. How many men have you got there?

General ELLIOTT. We are going to have more men as soon as we have a place to put them.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not need many men there, do you?

Colonel DENNY. That is on the way to the Panama Canal, where there ought to be accommodations for men and officers. They are living in two little huts now—old plantation houses.

The CHAIRMAN. They are the most delightful places in the world.

Colonel DENNY. No; they are not sanitary. The doctors have condemned them. They told us not to keep our men there.

The CHAIRMAN. I wish you would furnish a statement of the barracks we have built for the Marine Corps in the last few years.

Colonel DENNY. I can give you that now. Philadelphia, Annapolis, and Norfolk, in about thirty-eight years.

The CHAIRMAN. How much was Philadelphia?

Colonel DENNY. One hundred thousand dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. How much was the Naval Academy?

Colonel DENNY. One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, and three officers' quarters.

The CHAIRMAN. How much was Norfolk?

Colonel DENNY. One hundred thousand dollars. About $350,000 in about twenty years on new barracks and officers' quarters.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course your Marine Corps has been trebled during the last few years?

Colonel DENNY. That is why we are urging better accommodations, or at least more accommodations.

(Informal discussion followed.)

Colonel DENNY (continuing). The policy of the Marine Corps for twelve years certainly has been to ask Congress for not exceeding one barracks a year. We have got from Congress three barracks in twelve years.

Mr. MEYER. I notice the first appropriation for the marine barracks at New Orleans was made five years ago, in 1901?

Colonel DENNY. Yes.

Mr. MEYER. Why were not those barracks started? If I remember correctly it was contemplated then that the plan would be so drawn as to admit of an extension in case a larger number of men would be placed there?

Colonel DENNY. We did not have enough money. We could not build anything with that sum.

Mr. MEYER. But didn't we give you what you asked for?

General ELLIOTT. Yes; but we didn't ask for enough.
Mr. MEYER. And you got the second appropriation?
Colonel DENNY. Six thousand five hundred dollars.
Mr. MEYER. And that proved inadequate?
Colonel DENNY. Yes; we advertised again and received no bids whatever. The bidders of course knowing—or at least the contractors knowing—what the appropriation was, they concluded they could not possibly build the barracks, even the smallest frame structure that could be designed that would accommodate 100 men, for that money; and then the architect endeavored to get contractors in New Orleans by personally going to them and trying to get them interested, but they positively refused to have anything to do with it, and would not bid on the building, and the effect is that we have stood still. Now we are asking for an increase which we know will be sufficient to build a simple, substantial, small frame building to accommodate 100 men.
Mr. MEYER. You are satisfied that this additional appropriation will enable you to finish the building?
Colonel DENNY. Yes; I know it. We could do it by day labor if necessary.

The following extract from report of Brig. Gen. George F. Elliott, commanding, United States Marine Corps, summarizes the situation as to the New Orleans Station:

Under the acts of Congress approved March 3, 1901, and April 27, 1904, $15,000 and $6,500 were respectively appropriated for marine barracks and officers' quarters. Three unsuccessful efforts have been made to construct said barracks and quarters with the appropriation now available, and it is estimated that at least $15,000 additional will be required to construct a frame structure as modest in design as is consistent with strength for the comfort of the enlisted men. It is believed that with the additional $15,000 asked for a bid can be obtained to build said barracks and quarters, which are urgently needed, as the command is now temporarily in several old plantation buildings assigned by the Navy, which not only constantly require extensive repairs, but must soon be torn down to permit of the building programme of the Navy being carried out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER], which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Erection and equipment of laundry for enlisted men, marine barracks, navy-yard, New York, $6,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this is one of the recommendations made in the Book of Estimates, contained in this $575,400 worth of buildings asked by the Department from Congress.

Now, it seems to me that where there are ample accommodations for marines, and where the buildings are habitable and fit for the marines to occupy them, it is much more important, if anything is going to be done, to provide for the proper laundry accommodations rather than to provide buildings for the marines themselves.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, did I understand the gentleman from New York offered an amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I offered that as a substitute.

Mr. FOSS. I want to reserve a point of order on it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is too late, Mr. Chairman. I have been debating this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment was read from the desk a little time ago, and debate had begun.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not see why the gentleman should object to providing a laundry there. In the vicinity of New York, where ships are coming in continually and where marines are laid up and ships laid up for repairs, it is necessary that the marines be encouraged in cleanly habits. This can be done at a saving of $9,000.

Mr. FOSS. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. I did not catch the reading of it from the Clerk. I would like to ask him what his amendment is?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is to provide for the erection and equipment of a laundry for enlisted men at the marine barracks at the navy-yard at New York.

Mr. FOSS. I was under the impression that it provided for the construction of barracks at New York. You say it is for a laundry?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is for a laundry for these marines, and I call the attention of the committee to the fact that it is the fifth in the list of recommendations submitted by the Department, while the appropriation asked by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER] is the thirteenth. So that evidently a laundry for the marines at New York is considered much more necessary than the barracks at New Orleans. Now, if anything at all is to be appropriated under this heading out of these recommendations, I submit that at a place where they have several thousand marines continually that it would be much better to give them proper laundry facilities than it would be to erect a barracks where they may station marines if a ship ever happens to go there. I called the attention of the House the other day to the fact that they had employed at this place at New Orleans, during the year, an average of thirty-nine men, and it was my great misfortune that I was unable to point out to the committee how many of these men were employed as watchmen.

Now, under all the circumstances, I submit to the good sense of the committee that if any of these recommendations are to be allowed in this bill, that the amendment that I have submitted is entitled to more consideration than the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana, so I hope that this committee, if it thinks it can afford to do anything more in this bill, will not fail to provide proper laundry accommodations for the great number of marines stationed in the vicinity of New York.

Mr. MEYER. May I ask the gentleman from New York whether or not his proposition is in the nature of a substitute?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MEYER. And not in the nature of a further amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I imagine that perhaps the committee would only accept one amendment, and that mine was so much more meritorious and $9,000 less the committee will be more inclined to take that.

Mr. MEYER. I am inclined to believe, Mr. Chairman, that an appropriation for a laundry at the naval station at New York would be a proper one, and for my part I should not hesitate to vote for it. I took occasion the other day, referring to the gentleman's remarks, to explain to the committee why so few men have been employed at the New Orleans Naval Station during the past year. It is scarcely necessary to repeat this. It will be remedied in the near future upon completion of the buildings in course of construction and the installation of the necessary machinery for work.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The question was taken; and the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total Marine Corps, $4,705,353.48.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment changing the total. The total for the Marine Corps should be $4,705,283.48.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that we may go back to two amendments offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], one relating to the Bureau of Construction and Repair and the other to the Bureau of Machinery and Steam Engineering. The amendments are the same in effect, and therefore can be discussed together; and I call for the reading of both the amendments for the information of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 50, in line 14, strike out all after the word "dollars" down to and including the word "material," in line 19, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repair of any ship when the estimated cost of such repairs, to be appraised by a competent board of naval officers, shall exceed 10 per cent of the estimated cost, appraised in like manner, of a new ship of the same size and like material unless estimates for such repairs shall have been submitted to and approved by Congress: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall deprive the Secretary of the Navy of the authority to order repairs of ships damaged in foreign waters or on the high seas, so far as may be necessary to bring them home."

Mr. CALDER. I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order that the point of order comes too late. The amendment has been offered and the proposition passed without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, the point of order comes too late. The paragraph was read, the amendment was proposed, and unanimous consent was given to pass the paragraph without prejudice. The Chair thinks that such action has been taken by the committee as would make the point of order too late.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, in order to explain the purpose of this amendment, I want to call attention to a provision of the bill now before the committee which has for its purpose the same object which the amendment I have offered is intended to accomplish:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repair of any wooden ship when the estimated cost of such repairs, to be appraised by a competent board of naval officers, shall exceed 10 per cent of the estimated cost, appraised in like manner, of a new ship of the same size and like material.

Mr. Chairman, this bill carries appropriations for the repair of naval vessels. All of them have been constructed of steel and iron, commonly known as "steel construction." The bill limits the expenditures for repairs on wooden ships, which we are no longer constructing, and places no limitation on the amount that may be expended for repairs of steel ships. Nobody believes for a moment that there is a wooden ship to be constructed under the authority of this act. Every man on this floor knows that we have not for many years constructed wooden vessels, and yet we have been carrying from year to year this provision limiting the amount that may be expended for the repairs of wooden ships.

Mr. Chairman, when the urgent deficiency bill was before the House at the beginning of this session we were asked to appropriate for a deficiency in the item of steam engineering and machinery of about $2,000,000. What was the reason for this deficiency? Because of the number of vessels which during this fiscal year had been ordered out of commission for "reconstruction," the cost of which in some cases amounted to as much as $750,000. This fact, Mr. Chairman, shows that the Department has without authority of Congress embarked upon the policy of reconstructing our Navy, which policy is to-day being carried on solely within the discretion of the Department and regardless of the amount appropriated for the repair of naval vessels. The amendment I have offered simply presents to the House the question, Shall the House control the reconstruction of the Navy as it controls the original construction, or shall we turn the Treasury of the United States over to the Navy Department with unlimited discretion as to the amount that shall be expended in the reconstruction of the Navy?

If it was important in the past to adopt a policy that would control the reconstruction of the Navy when naval vessels were constructed entirely of wood, how much greater is the necessity for this policy now when we are constructing steel vessels costing four and five million dollars. If in the judgment of Congress it was necessary to limit the amount to be expended in the repair of wooden ships, how much greater is the necessity for some limitation in the expenditure for this purpose when the cost of our present ships is ten times greater than the cost of wooden ships. Why, Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of the Navy is to-day spending in his discretion more out of these two appropriations, and without any accounting whatever to Congress, than Congress appropriated for the original construction of vessels in the Forty-seventh Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask that my time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. In the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress, which was in 1883, Congress authorized the construction of a naval vessel, the Atlanta, at a cost of $617,000. At the same session the Boston was authorized, at a cost of $619,000. In the same Congress the Chicago was authorized, at a cost of $889,000, and the Dolphin, at a cost of $315,000. That was the beginning of our modern Navy, and yet to-day the Secretary of the Navy is expending more money in the construction of naval vessels, the original construction of which was authorized subsequent to the Forty-seventh Congress, than Congress itself appropriated for the construction of the vessels that I have just named.

I appeal to this committee, as a matter of good business sense, whether we should allow this unlimited discretion in respect to the reconstruction of the Navy to continue, or whether we should not place a limitation upon the exercise of that discretion. If the reconstruction of naval vessels is necessary beyond this limit, the Secretary can come to Congress and submit his estimates and give Congress an opportunity to review the estimates thus submitted, and thus determine whether or not they are necessary or extravagant, or whether or not they should be allowed to the extent to which he recommends.

It is a mere business proposition. We are responsible to the people for the appropriation and expenditure of the public money, and when the proposition involves the expenditure of a million or eight hundred thousand dollars it is our duty to place such limitations upon the discretion of the officer authorized to make the expenditure as will insure its wise, honest, and economical expenditure.

Why, Mr. Chairman, suppose under an appropriation carried in the sundry civil bill for the repairs and maintenance of public buildings the Secretary of the Treasury should propose to dismantle a public building, rip out the inside, and reconstruct the building, at an expense of five or six hundred thousand dollars, without authority from Congress. I venture to say, if that were attempted, the Secretary of the Treasury would not only be criticised but some gentlemen now contending for unlimited discretion in the Secretary of the Navy in this matter would propose and urge the impeachment of the Secretary of the Treasury on the ground that he had diverted an appropriation and had violated his oath of office, and yet you propose to continue to allow the Secretary of the Navy to divert these appropriations. If you want to leave to his discretion the matter of reconstructing the Navy, why don't you say so, and make a specific appropriation for that purpose? In that case the country will know not alone what original construction and the repairs of the Navy are costing the people, but we will also know what additional cost is necessary on account of the reconstruction of the Navy. Don't try to conceal the cost of reconstruction by combining it with the ordinary repairs of wood vessels.

In my amendment I make an exception of repairs required on a vessel in a foreign port or in foreign waters; if such repairs exceed the limitation, then the Secretary of the Navy can, without limit, repair that vessel for the purpose of bringing her home to have permanent repairs made. So that it will not operate in any event to injure the service or to cripple the Navy in the least. The only effect would be that when the repairs estimated by the board exceed the limit the Secretary of the Navy will have to submit to Congress the estimates or the necessity for the overhaul or reconstruction of the vessel, and then Congress will have the opportunity to pass upon it as we to-day pass upon the question whether or not a new vessel shall be constructed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do so for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] a question. I am prompted to ask this question by the remarks of several gentlemen about me. I would like to know if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] will in any way affect the provision for the repairs to the Constitution.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not at all.

Mr. ROBERTS. And it is not the intention of the gentleman from Minnesota to so affect that provision?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I have no purpose of that kind whatever. I am in favor of that expenditure.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In fixing this limitation does not the gentleman think that as the matter has not been considered by the Naval Committee or the Department, at least the limitation should be the same as on the wooden vessels?

Mr. TAWNEY. The limitation is the same as on the wooden vessels. But I divide it and put 5 per cent in each Bureau—5 per cent under the Bureau of Construction and Repair and 5 per cent for machinery, making a total of 10 per cent. I do this because they are the only parts of the vessel that need repairs, except in case of accident to the hull. The hull and the armor of the vessel are never repaired, and the limitation is segregated, making it 5 per cent in one and 5 per cent in the other—a total of 10 per cent for repairs on such parts of the vessel that ordinarily need repairs.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that frequently the hull is injured. When vessels have gone aground they have had to take out big sections of the bottom and straighten out the plates, and if the gentleman's amendment allows altogether 10 per cent, I think that would be equivalent to the old provision.

Mr. TAWNEY. That would be equivalent to the present limitation. There is no question about that, and, in fact, I make the limitation greater than in my judgment it ought to be, for the reason that the increased expense of the machinery in a vessel to-day, as compared to what it used to be, would justify a reduction in the limitation. Five per cent of the present cost of machinery in a vessel would build anew many parts of that machinery, and this appropriation is not contemplated to be expended for anything except ordinary repairs. It is not contemplated that this money should be expended for new construction. It is intended that it shall be expended for repairing, and that does not mean renewing. It means the ordinary repairs that are necessary in respect to machinery, and the term "repairs" should be given the ordinary construction, and should not be construed as being to mean to renew.

Mr. VREELAND. It does mean new machinery, does it not?

Mr. TAWNEY. It may mean replacing the new parts of machinery. It does not mean the purchase and installation of a new engine or a new dynamo. That would not be repairing; that would be renewing.

Mr. VREELAND. Why not, if the old one is worn out? Suppose the boilers of a ship are worn out?

Mr. TAWNEY. The boilers may need repairing; but if the crown sheet of a boiler needs to be replaced, that is repairing the boiler, whereas if the boiler is worn out and you have to replace it with a new one, that is not repairing that boiler, but throwing the old one away and buying a new one. If a ship becomes so deteriorated as to require renewal, you do not repair it by renewing it or buying another ship. You throw it away and replace it by coming to Congress and getting authority for the construction of a new vessel.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose this amendment. If this committee were a board of naval experts, and knew enough about the subject of repairs of naval vessels to say when repairs should be made and when they should not be made, then I think this amendment would be a very sensible proposition; but unless we are going to constitute ourselves a board of naval experts to pass on the repairs of ships every year when they come up, and to hold up those repairs until the estimates are sent in to Congress, then I think we had better not adopt this proposition. There was, as the gentleman says, a limit placed upon the repairing of wooden ships back in 1883, and it was done for a definite purpose. At that time and before that time there had been an evolution—yes, a revolution—in the construction of ships from the old wooden ship to the steel ship, and that provision limiting the cost of repairs was put there by reason of this evolution of reconstruction of ships.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman admit that that limitation was proper when it was first placed in the appropriation bill as a limitation upon the repairs of wooden ships?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; I think it was.

Mr. TAWNEY. Inasmuch as we are not constructing wooden ships any longer and we are to-day constructing steel vessels, why should there not be a like limitation upon the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy in respect to the repair of steel vessels?

Mr. FOSS. Well, let me read the gentleman what the constructor says.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, but I am asking the gentleman the question as the chairman of the committee, and I think his judgment is just as good as that of the naval constructor. We have passed from the wooden ship to the steel ship. We have done away with the wooden ship in the Navy. We have already done away with them. Why do you carry a limitation upon the repair of wooden ships when there is not a scintilla of evidence here that you propose to construct a wooden ship and admit that the construction of wooden ships has ceased entirely?

Mr. FOSS. Well, they have practically ceased except as to——

Mr. ROBERTS. The gentleman will pardon me if I say we are now constructing wooden ships in the Navy and have increased the limit of cost of them in this very bill.

Mr. FOSS. You refer to the two training ships?

Mr. ROBERTS. Yes; they are wooden ships.

Mr. FOSS. I want to tell you frankly when we first considered this in the committee I was of the opinion that it might be proper to limit the cost, and after careful consideration of it I came to an entirely different conclusion. The chief constructor, Admiral Capps, speaking of the limitation to be placed upon these vessels, says:

> The desirability of such a limitation was fully recognized at the time of its first application, since the deterioration of the hulls of wooden vessels is far more serious than that of the hulls of steel vessels which have received suitable attention. In fact, prior to the enactment of the proviso above noted instances had arisen where a practically new vessel had been built under the guise of repairs. Such a contingency with respect to steel vessels is wholly impossible, since it is rare that any portion of the outer hull of steel vessels are renewed except as a result of damage due to stranding, collision, or other accident. Certain interior portions of the hull are subject to serious deterioration, notably the inner bottom under boilers and the lower plates of coal-bunker bulkheads. The care and attention bestowed upon naval vessels is such, however, that the major portion of the hull does not seriously deteriorate. It is, however, necessary to make changes in battery emplacements, arrangements of magazines, ammunition supply, and structural changes or repairs necessitated by the removal of boilers for repairs or renewal, renewal of wooden decks, overhauling or renewal of auxiliary machinery, etc.
> When a steel vessel of the Navy is surveyed for a general overhauling with a view to putting it in efficient condition for service, such changes as may be necessary to bring the vessel up to date, as far as practicable, from the military point of view, are undertaken along with the items of general repair necessitated by deterioration in service. It is possible under these conditions that the total cost of alterations, repairs, etc., may, in unusual cases, approach 25 or 30 per cent of the original cost of the vessel. But it should be borne in mind that the vessel when fully overhauled under such conditions is really a better vessel from a military point of view than when originally built, and it would hardly be justifiable to impose a limit on the cost of such repairs and alterations, which really improve the military efficiency of the vessel, unless such limitation was a very liberal percentage of the total first cost of the vessel.

Then I would state, Mr. Chairman, when the constructor came before the committee we asked him what vessels he proposed to repair during the present year and also the cost of those repairs upon each vessel, and it is here in the hearings of the committee.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Is he bound to follow that suggestion before the committee? Is there anything to hold him down to it?

Mr. FOSS. Hold him down to what?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. To what he suggested what he would do.

Mr. FOSS. He is bound by the amount of appropriation, but that would not set a limit to repairs on each particular vessel.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is just the objection the chairman of the Appropriation Committee is urging, that you have got no limit on the repairs of vessels.

Mr. FOSS. But he is the proper man to say what should be the amount of repairs and what should not be. Is it the gentleman from Alabama or the gentleman from Minnesota? No; if we have not any confidence in our naval constructors and in our bureaus down here we had better disband, but the idea that Congress should pass upon the question of repairs as to whether a particular naval vessel ought to be overhauled or whether it ought not to be overhauled is a ridiculous proposition from beginning to end. Not only that, but it has the whole effect of holding up the work in our navy-yards until Congress can pass upon a particular proposition of repairs to this vessel or that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. FOSS. Just one moment.

Mr. TAWNEY. You have just stated that the Navy Department has already advised the committee what repairs they intend to make on different ships this year and what those repairs would cost.

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Would it be any more difficult or embarrass the Department any more to require it to give that information in a detailed statement than to come before the committee voluntarily and give it? Would it embarrass or delay the work any more, if they can give that information now, for them to give detailed estimates next year in accordance with a provision of law?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; and your provision provides they shall not use any of this money for repairs on a ship where the cost is more than 5 per cent, and that is the trouble with the provision.

The gentleman speaks of overhauling. Yes; we do overhaul a naval vessel now and then a good deal as you overhaul a machine shop, for after all a naval vessel is nothing more than a great machine shop. Every ten or fifteen years you will find the machine plants are overhauled, modern machinery is put in, and that is what we do with our naval vessels sometimes. And, as Admiral Capps says, the cost of overhauling amounts to 25 per cent, but that only comes in about ten or a dozen years. The hull, that was first constructed, is just as good as it ever was. There is no limit of age to a hull. But as to the interior arrangement, as to the electrical apparatus, as to the ammunition hoist, as to guns and armaments, and all these things, improvement has been going on year after year, and so it becomes important to have an overhauling of the interior, just as you would overhaul the interior of a machine shop and put in new machines. And that, as I have said, comes only once in ten years. That is what the gentleman complains of.

Now, suppose we should insist in putting a limitation here upon these repairs or overhauling. What will be the result of it all? And after we had gotten all of the information here, what would we do? Should we say that the Wyoming shall not be repaired and that the Minnesota shall be repaired? Do we know anything about it? Are we experts in machinery? The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] may be, but are the rest of us experts in machinery, with sufficient knowledge to pass upon this question? Are we going to transform ourselves into a board of experts? We would turn back to the Department and say, "Go and do as you please. We have hired you to do this job; now, go ahead and do it." That would be the position of this House. Why, gentlemen, it is a ridiculous proposition, in my judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, just one moment more. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] in a moment will show you how carefully and how systematically this whole subject of repairs is gone into by the Department, and how it is passed upon by board after board, how it comes before each bureau chief, and how the Assistant Secretary of the Navy has to go and make a personal inspection of every vessel before repairs are made.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that such a proposition here would delay the repairs of our ships and do a great deal to decrease the efficiency of our Navy. To put the responsibility here upon Congress and say when repairs shall be made and when they shall not be made would have a tendency to destroy or to close up our work in the different navy-yards, because such work is dependent entirely upon repairs. And the whole proposition to limit the cost of repairs would be demoralizing to the whole efficiency of the naval service.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that it would be better for Congress to keep its hands always upon the appropriations that it has to make. I have always advocated that appropriations should be made by item; that they should be carefully made, and should be so limited that those who may have the duty of spending them will not increase them, waste them, or divert them to other purposes.

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, what I would do if the advisability of repairing a ship were submitted to me by the authorities of the Navy Department. What would I know about it? I necessarily would have to take the advice of the officer. Suppose that he would estimate the repairs would cost 25 per cent. Say that the ship is worth, after we expend the 25 per cent in the repairs, as much as a new ship, how would I know whether she would be or not? I would have to be informed by him who had the information and in whom I had confidence.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to read a statement which will show to the membership of the committee the care with which these estimates are made and the care observed by the officers of the Department before a ship can be repaired.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Brief statement of routine required by law or regulations for repairs of United States naval vessels in navy-yards.

When a ship is in commission the captain of the vessel is required to report to the Department when the condition of the ship under his command is such as to require repairs or alterations in one or more departments beyond the capacity of the enlisted force available, and such report must be submitted without delay when there is a probability that the vessel under his command is to be sent to a navy-yard. Such report much show, on one or more separate sheets for each bureau, the vessel from which it came and the bureau under whose cognizance the work falls, with the items of work classified under the following headings: (1) Immediate repairs necessary for cruising efficiency, for the prevention of deterioration, or for sanitary considerations; (2) further repairs which it is desirable to have made whenever the services of the ship can be spared for a sufficient length of time; (3) necessary alterations, and (4) alterations desirable but not necessary. In each case the reason for asking for the work must be stated. Such reports are forwarded through official channels to the Department, which decides upon the time when the vessel shall be sent to a navy-yard for examination and estimate of cost of the items in the report. The bureaus under whose cognizance the work falls are informed of the Department's decision as to the time when the vessel will be sent to the navy-yard for examination, and the bureaus issue the necessary instructions for the examination and report on the items in question by the heads of departments at the navy-yard.

Upon arrival of the ship at the navy-yard. the heads of the departments and their foremen make detailed examination of the vessel with reference to the items of work contained in the commanding officer's report and with reference to any further items which their examinations disclose to be necessary for putting the vessel in an efficient condition. Detailed estimates are made for each item, with plans, if necessary, and are embodied in reports by the heads of departments concerned, together with a statement of conditions and the recommendations of the heads of departments on each item.

These reports and estimates are forwarded to the Department through the commandant of the navy-yard, who makes such observations and recommendations as he deems proper. The reports are then referred by the Department to the respective bureaus for examination and comment, and after such examination and comment are usually referred to the Board on Construction for coordination and final recommendation to the Department. After such recommendation if any modifications in the work proposed are deemed necessary they are made, and if, as is usual, the expense on the hull and spars exceeds $3,000, and on the sails and rigging $1,000, surveys must be ordered at the navy-yard in accordance with sections 1538 and 1539 of the Revised Statutes. (It may be remarked that these limitations were originally made in 1861 and are still adhered to, though hardly suited to the conditions on modern vessels, which cost from five to ten times as much as those built at the date in which the act was passed.)

The survey is then held, each item proposed or modified is considered, the estimates previously prepared revised by the board of survey, and a detailed statement in the form of a survey is prepared for each yard department having work to do on the vessel. These surveys are returned to the Navy Department for further examination by the bureaus concerned and recommendations made to the Department as to the execution of each item of the survey.

When it is determined what items are to be executed, the commandant of the navy-yard is notified and authorized to direct the repairs to be proceeded with. If the repairs are at all extensive, it is usually necessary to procure greater or less quantities of material for such repairs, and, under the system of purchase prescribed by law, the procurement of such materials as may not be in stock usually requires from two to three months, unless the Department considers an emergency to exist which will permit the materials to be purchased without advertisement. The repairs are undertaken as fast as material is available, and if, after opening up of any work, it is found that further repairs not contemplated in the original survey must be made reports covering such additional work as may be then required are submitted to the Department through the commandant, and must be authorized by the Department and the bureaus concerned before such additional work can be undertaken.

W. L. CAPPS,
Chief Constructor, United States Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that he may have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I want to repeat what I have already said. I would be in no dilemma if I had to decide between my own judgment and that of a man who was competent. I would decide with him. Therefore, while its purpose is right, this amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] having never been considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs, I should dislike very much to see it adopted. I am not sure whether 10 per cent—the figure named in the amendment—would be too high or whether it would be too low. I am not sure that only two bureaus would be interested in the repair of a ship. I have no knowledge upon the subject, and will confess my ignorance. I admit the fairness of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], and I know he wants to do what is right, and is endeavoring in this attempt to do what he thinks is right. Indeed, I think it is right to put a proper restraint upon the Department of the Navy. What is the proper restraint? I suggest to him that we ought not to adopt the amendment at this time, but let the committee take it up and consider it with a view of passing upon it the next time the naval appropriation bill is considered.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

It seems, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment would have a very serious effect upon our Navy. It means that it is absolutely useless to give this appropriation, for the navy-yard has no power to use it. That will be the result. There is one battle ship lying now at one of the navy-yards, and there are four or five others that will need repairs much in excess of the amount mentioned in this amendment; and if this amendment is passed by the committee the appropriation will be useless, and these battle ships will have to lie in the yards for another year. Therefore I think that at this time the amendment ought not to pass. It is clearly subject to a point of order, I suppose, if the point of order had been made, and the gentleman ought not to press it at this time, because it is clearly new legislation of such a nature that it will upset all the affairs of the Navy. If there is anything of that kind to be passed, it ought to be passed in a bill, where people can know what is to be done and preparation can be made by the Navy Department to meet it.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the gentleman from Minnesota what is the effect of his amendment? I assume that there are sometimes actual necessities for making repairs costing more than 10 per cent of the original cost of the vessel. Now, assuming such an accident, and assuming that the repairs needed will equal 15 per cent of the cost of the vessel, under this amendment, what would the Navy Department be required to do?

Mr. TAWNEY. The Navy Department will be required to have the ship surveyed, report the repairs necessary to be made and an estimate of the cost of those repairs, and submit that to Congress for its approval, and then the Secretary can go on and make these repairs if Congress approves of the expenditure for that purpose.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Now, then, assuming a state of affairs that would require the service of this injured vessel as speedily as possible, would not such a course of proceeding tend to keep the vessel out of service for a much longer time than if the Navy Department had authority to make a 15 per cent repair?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, it might keep the vessel out of commission longer than if the Secretary had the authority and the money to proceed with the repairs at once, but it might not keep the vessel out of commission any longer than we could dispense with the services of the vessel, especially in a time of peace. I have no doubt, excepting in times of war, that we could wait, and the Navy Department could well wait, for six months or three months or nine months or a year for the repairs needed on a given vessel. In making such repairs it would have to wait until Congress made the appropriation. Therefore there would be no injury done to the service. It would simply be taking one vessel out of commission because of its being out of repair, or because of its being in need of reconstruction, and putting one of the other and, possibly, newer vessels into commission that is now out of commission, because we have not the men to man her. The Secretary of the Navy, in a report to Congress at the beginning of this session, said that more than one-half of the tonnage of the Navy to-day is out of commission.

Mr. ROBERTS. Including the tinclads.

Mr. TAWNEY. He said that more than one-half of the tonnage of the Navy is out of commission to-day.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Now, then, whatever our ideas may be as to a large or small Navy, I think we all must agree that the Navy should always be in a state of preparedness. Now, the gentleman's amendment would fit in nicely in time of peace, but in the case of a sudden conflict and the resulting necessity for war vessels, would it not be dangerous to have a vessel out of commission until the ponderous machinery of Congress could be exercised to make the necessary repairs where they are over 10 per cent of the cost of the vessel? Unless the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations can solve that problem for me, I shall be obliged to vote against his amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that this is not a new policy. We have had a navy for a great many years. We have had wooden vessels which cost the Government of the United States $360,000, $434,000, and $480,000. But notwithstanding the fact that we have always maintained a navy of larger or smaller size, we have always likewise had a policy in the Navy which was to limit the reconstruction of the Navy and the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy in the matter of reconstructing it to 10 per cent of the cost of these vessels. In other words, take it in 1873 to 1876, we authorized the Nipsic, a wooden vessel, which cost $360,000. Another one, the Essex, cost $434,000, and another one, the Enterprise, cost $480,000. Now, the matter of making repairs for all these ships has been limited to-day to 10 per cent of the cost of these vessels. In other words, on a vessel costing $360,000, $36,000 of repairs can be made by the Department.

Mr. ROBERTS. At one time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I ask for five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. And so on with the others. A vessel costing $434,661, the cost of the repairs of that vessel, within the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy was limited to $43,000, and the other to $48,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is in error. In 1887, in the Forty-ninth Congress, second session, the provision on wooden vessels was 20 per cent, and it was not until steam vessels of the Navy were being built and it was deemed unwise to continue the wooden vessels in commission that a reduction to 10 per cent was made. It is made since 1887, and I will find the exact year.

Mr. TAWNEY. Made since 1887?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the naval appropriation bill approved March 3, 1887, the provision is that—

> No part of said sum shall be applied to the repair of engines and machinery of wooden ships where the estimated cost of such repair shall exceed 20 per cent of the estimated cost of new engines and machinery of the same character and power, but nothing herein contained shall prevent the repair of machinery and boilers for wooden ships the hulls of which can be fully repaired for 20 per cent of the estimated cost of the ship of the same size and material.

Mr. TAWNEY. That has nothing to do with the policy; it only increases the extent of the discretion of the Secretary in the matter of making repairs. What I am contending for here is that there should be some limitation upon the discretion of the Navy Department in the matter of reconstructing the Navy that is to-day costing us more than $100,000,000 annually. I say that it is bad policy, that it is bad administration, to vest in the head of any one Department of this Government a discretionary power that would enable him, or authorize him, to expend a million or two million dollars without any report to Congress as to the necessity for the expenditure, or without any accounting to Congress as to how he has expended the money. If 5 per cent is too small a limitation, increase it to 10 per cent; make it the same as it is to-day on wooden vessels, and then you would have double the amount for making the repairs, as the limitation to-day is fixed upon existing appropriations.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman to suggest that if, in the judgment of the committee, 5 per cent was too low, it should be increased to 10 per cent. Does not my friend think it would be better to consider this well before we change the figure from 5 to 10 per cent?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that I have considered the question of the limitation, and I believe that 5 per cent would enable the Secretary of the Navy to make all of the ordinary repairs that are reasonably necessary to any vessel in the Navy, but this limitation will not be sufficient to enable the Secretary of the Navy to do what he is doing to-day—making eight hundred thousand or a million dollars' worth of repairs on a vessel, and I do not think he should have that authority. It has not been the policy of Congress, Mr. Chairman, to vest that amount of discretion in any administrative officer. Take it in respect to the construction of public buildings or in the administration of public affairs, and it has never been the policy to vest in any one officer the discretionary power of repairing, or replacing that which was originally authorized by Congress, where it involved an expenditure of half that amount.

Mr. WALDO. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the only policy, in the line of which the gentleman speaks, that the Government has had in the limitation of cost of repairs has been in regard to wooden ships since we started to make the steel Navy, and that was to prevent the reconstruction of the old wooden ships, so as to make new ones at a time when the Government had decided that it would only have new steel ships?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know when the policy of limiting the Secretary of the Navy to the reconstruction of vessels began.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I would like to ask him whether, in view of the letter from the Naval Constructor to the effect that sometimes repairs are necessary that will call for 25 or 30 per cent of the original cost of the vessel, his limitation of 5 per cent of the hull and 5 per cent on the machinery is not too low?

Mr. TAWNEY. It may be.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Then why not raise it?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have no objection to increasing it to 10 per cent.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Ten per cent on each?

Mr. TAWNEY. Ten per cent in each case.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Then I will vote with the gentleman if he will do that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, what I contend for is this: We are building up a tremendous navy. In 1910 it will be second to only one in the world, and it is costing the people of the United States a hundred million dollars annually to maintain it. Now, an institution like the Navy that has cost the Government of the United States hundreds of millions of dollars to construct, and that, too, in less than ten years from the date of original construction, will necessarily require reconstruction. I maintain that Congress should not longer delay in adopting the policy of putting some limitation upon the head of the Navy Department in the matter of the reconstruction of such a great institution as our present Navy, and as it will be in 1910 when the ships now authorized are completed. I am simply maintaining that it is bad policy. I admit that there may be occasion for the expenditure of more than 10 per cent or more than 20 per cent of the cost of the vessel, but that is an extraordinary repair, and when it becomes necessary to expend that amount of money I maintain that before the expenditure is made it should be passed upon by the Congress of the United States and not left to the discretion of any single administrative officer who is responsible to nobody for that expenditure and who is not required to report to anybody in regard to that expenditure or its details.

I maintain that it is bad policy, it is bad administration to allow the reconstruction of a navy such as we have to-day, to go on here without any limitation whatever, and if it was wise to adopt this policy in respect to wooden ships, it is of infinitely greater importance and it is far more necessary that we should adopt it in respect to the reconstruction of steel vessels, which we are to-day building at a cost of many million dollars in excess of the cost of wooden ships.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if the gentleman has not conveyed a wrong impression here, and from what I have heard from the Committee on Naval Affairs I think he has, that repairs to the extent of 20 per cent are extraordinary repairs. As I understand, if these steel vessels have been in commission for quite a while repairs to the extent of 20 per cent and 25 per cent and 33 per cent are not extraordinary at all, but are absolutely necessary, and I would like to have that point cleared up.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs himself stated, and the letter which he read corroborates the statement, that the life of the hull and the armor of a vessel are practically without limit. Neither the armor nor the hull of a vessel requires any repair, and there is no depreciation and no deterioration there, and yet the hull and the armor of a vessel are the principal items of the original cost of a vessel.

Now, eliminate that from the cost of the vessel and then limit the cost of repairing the machinery to 10 per cent and limit the cost of repairing the interior construction of the other parts of the vessel to 10 per cent, and you have provided amply for all ordinary repairs to any vessel that is afloat to-day. Gentlemen must bear in mind that this limitation does not apply to the entire cost of the vessel. This proposed limitation applies only to the part of the vessel that is to be repaired. In the one case it would eliminate the machinery and in the other case it would eliminate the interior construction as distinguished from the machinery. But, Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit this to the Members as fair-minded men: Here is a bill that carries $11,705,000 which can be expended within the discretion of one single administrative officer without any limitation—without the necessity for making any report or any accounting to Congress. We propose to allow him to go into the Treasury of the United States and take out over $11,000,000 for the repair of naval vessels without any investigation as to the necessity for the expenditure and without requiring him to render any account to Congress, from which he must get the appropriation, and I submit that it ought to be stopped; that there ought to be a limitation.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to amend the amendment I offered by increasing the amount from 5 to 10 per cent in each case.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to insert the word "ten" instead of the word "five" in the particulars he has suggested. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have listened very carefully to the argument of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and while we may sympathize with his main proposition and agree that there ought to be some limitation, it must be quite apparent to the other Members, as it is to me, that his limitation in the beginning, of 5 per cent was altogether too small, if a limitation was to be placed on the bill at all. I submit that he reasons from wrong premises when he takes the limitation on wooden vessels as a standard, because it is apparent to my mind that that limitation was placed there for the purpose of preventing the reconstruction of wooden vessels, practically putting them out of commission in order to make way for the new steel Navy. Now, while there may be reason behind the idea of having a limitation, it seems to me it ought not to come here or be sprung in the form of an amendment to this bill, but ought to be very carefully considered and the facts carefully gone into by the Naval Committee, in conference with the Navy Department officials, so that if a limitation is to be placed on it at all, it should be a fair, reasonable, and judicious limitation. I do not thnk we have quite reached that point yet. My mind is not clear on the subject that a limitation ought to be placed at 10 per cent on one form, such as machinery, and 10 per cent on another, such as the hull, as it seems to me that it might reasonably go to 25 per cent, and in some cases to 35 per cent total repairs. I would be quite willing to vote for some limitation of the power of the Secretary, but I am not willing to vote on a snap judgment, placing the limitation at some figure simply because the gentleman has in view the limitation on the wooden ships and has confounded the two. If this thing is to be done at all, it ought to be done after a careful consideration and report by the Naval Committee, and up to the time it has been so considered the House ought not to vote for any limitation at all.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment now reported as it has been amended by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported, as amended by the gentleman from Minnesota, through unanimous consent.

There was no objection, and the amendment as amended was reported by the Clerk.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just one word. It may be, as the gentleman from Minnesota said, bad policy to allow the Navy Department to have unlimited discretion, but it will be a much worse policy to now start on a new policy, in violation of Rule XXI of this House, and make a new rule for the Navy Department that will practically tie up a large portion of our Navy so it will be useless, for that is what will be the result.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just one word more. The gentleman from New York and the gentlemen who are contending against this amendment I realize are fearful that it may interfere with the employment of men in the several navy-yards which they represent on this floor, and that that is the principal reason that they are opposing this proposition; but I submit, Mr. Chairman, that there is not a single one of them who has given any reason why we should not apply the same policy in respect to the reconstruction of our steel vessels that has obtained for more than a quarter of a century in the reconstruction of the wooden ships. Now, we are going on at a tremendous rate with the expenditure of public money, and I candidly think that if gentlemen will not allow themselves to be influenced by those who are located in the vicinity of navy-yards and those who are afraid that this limitation may operate somewhat to check the power of the Navy Department, that we will as a matter of good administration and good policy place this 10 per cent limitation upon the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy in the expenditure of more than $11,000,000.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Minnesota that neither of the gentlemen from Massachusetts who have opposed the limitation represent a navy-yard district, and——

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Massachusetts must know I did not refer to him, because he said if I would increase the limit to 10 per cent he would support the motion.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I am inclined to do so. Nevertheless I am somewhat in doubt about it after listening to the argument of my colleague from Massachusetts against it, and it is quite possible I may oppose it yet. [Laughter.] It seems to me that it is quite possible that a Member of this House, even if he lives in a navy-yard district, may take a broad and philosophic view of the needs of the entire country. I do not intend to argue upon that point, because I think perhaps it will require more time to demonstrate that proposition to the gentleman from Minnesota than there is available to me now; but it struck me in the beginning that there is a marked difference between the need of repairing a public building, for example, and a battle ship. Personally I would like to see the size of the Navy reduced one-half, but I think all must agree that whatever the size of the Navy is, that Navy ought always to be in a state of preparedness. It is constructed for fighting, and unless it is in a condition to fight effectively, it is absolutely useless. Therefore, whenever repairs are necessary to a battle ship or any other vessel of the Navy, it is necessary that they be made promptly. I can conceive of no repairs that need to be made more promptly than the repairs to a fighting vessel. Now, it seems to me that the ordinary reason for placing a limitation upon the discretion of an executive officer of this Government does not apply so strongly in the case of repairs to naval vessels as it does to other cases.

If we reduce the discretion of the naval officer who has charge of these repairs and vest that discretion in Congress, it will transfer power to a body that is not informed—from the officer who is informed both as to the needs of the Navy generally and the necessity of the repairs in the particular instance. I do not think that is good policy. I think the other suggestion of the gentleman from Minnesota concerning the scrutiny of expenditures would be better, and that great care should be exercised in the selection of the naval officer who is to possess this large discretion. It seems to me a large discretion must be reposed in him, and it is for Congress to exercise supervisory power upon the manner in which he exercises that discretion. If the Committee on Naval Affairs does not scrutinize the expenditures made by the naval constructor each year, that committee is derelict in its duty. The committee knows whether it has been negligent or not in that matter. If it has been, it ought at once to begin to scrutinize those expenditures with extreme care.

I do not think that any officer of this Government ought to be permitted to expend $7,600,000 without being accountable to some one, and there is a provision in the law which requires an accounting. If that provision is not enforced, the way to remedy it is not, it seems to me, to take away the discretion of the officer, who has the necessary information at hand and is presumably capable of exercising that discretion wisely, and invest that power in a committee of Congress or in Congress itself, which, from the very nature of its composition, is not fitted to deal with the highly technical subject of the extent of repairs necessary for vessels of the Navy.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I will.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN] on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. McNARY. I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I would not reply to the gentleman were it not for the fact that he has referred to the gentlemen from Massachusetts as representing navy-yard districts. If it were correct that we represented navy-yard districts, his remarks would have made a palpable hit; but neither my colleague nor myself represent a navy-yard district, but, on the contrary, I represent a district which is a shipbuilding district, and I can easily conceive if repairs were limited to 5 per cent, the money which would be saved, according to the gentleman's argument, on repairs, would not be turned back into the Treasury, but would be put into new ships, and therefore I may be arguing against the interests of my own district in that particular respect.

I do not believe that even if the limitation of 5 per cent advocated by the gentleman were adopted, there would be any decrease in the amount appropriated for the Navy Department, and the people would not be taxed 1 cent less than they are at the present time. I do think it is a fair statement, as made by my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN], that if repairs are to be made at all they should be sufficiently and properly and completely made, and under the jurisdiction of a proper officer. I maintain, which, I think, will be agreed to by every man in this body, that a committee of Congress, or a committee of any legislative body, is not a proper body to supervise repairs of naval work or any other work. The gentleman undoubtedly has a good point for the foundation of his argument, but he has not carefully considered this subject, and has not placed a fair and proper limitation upon the power of the Secretary of the Navy, and in view of that fact I am not willing to vote for his proposition.

For my own part I believe in building a good navy, one sufficient for our needs, not an extraordinarily large one, but if we are to have a navy at all we ought to have a good one, ready to do its duty at all times, and in good and complete repair. We ought to have our navy-yards so equipped that they are ready to make repairs, and have the proper kind of a mechanical force trained in all departments to make these repairs quickly, in order to keep our ships in proper condition to meet the enemy, if we are ever unfortunately called upon to do so.

I think the gentleman's amendment ought to be voted down. If he wants this matter to be limited, he ought to have introduced it in the way of which he is aware, and have it before the committee properly.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that it is properly before the committee.

Mr. McNARY. It is properly before this Committee of the Whole House, but not the Naval Committee, where it ought to have been specially considered and reported upon.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will pardon me, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs said that it had been properly considered, and this word "wooden" had been stricken out, and on further consideration they had concluded to put it back again. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to delay the committee any longer in relation to this matter, but I do not want to have the impression go forth here that the Navy Department is very loose in the matter of repairs, and that repairs are not properly considered when the ship goes into the yards. Upon the arrival of a ship at the navy-yard the heads of the departments and every foreman make detailed examination of the vessel with reference to the items of the work and repairs; then detailed estimates are made on each item and are sent to the heads of the departments, and then they are referred to the board of construction, and after the board of construction passes upon it, a survey is ordered, and after the survey they come back to the Department and get the word to go ahead with the repairs. I do not want the impression to go out here to-day that the Navy Department does not exercise care and consideration in the matter of repairs.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will pardon me just a moment, I am not contending that there is any carelessness in the matter of making repairs, nor is this limitation intended to restrict the Department in making ordinary repairs. What I am trying to do is to prevent the Department from diverting the appropriation made for repairs to the reconstruction of vessels.

Mr. FOSS. There is no diversion whatever of the appropriation, and never has been. It is simply a question of the amount of repairs.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What I want to know is, are all repairs made in the Government navy-yards, or are there any repairs made under contract?

Mr. FOSS. A very few, sometimes in foreign waters, which are made by a private contractor.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But when a vessel gets out of repair——

Mr. FOSS. Repairs, generally speaking, are made in our own navy-yards.

Mr. McNARY. I would like to ask the gentleman what would happen if we placed a limitation of this character——

Mr. FOSS. I have already answered that question, I will say. Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 55.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the palpable point of order, I would like to suggest to the gentleman that he move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. FOSS. We have just the same proposition made by the gentleman on another paragraph.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. I will ask the gentleman from Minnesota if he is willing to take the vote now?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I take it, from the vote just had, that it is the sentiment of the committee that the Secretary of the Navy should have unlimited discretion in the expenditure of this $11,000,000 for the repair of vessels, including the reconstruction of a navy that has cost several billion of dollars, and I will therefore withdraw the other amendment.

Mr. FOSS. Now I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks leave to withdraw the amendment to the other paragraph, and it will be so ordered unless there is objection.

Mr. FOSS. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that we have reached the increase of the Navy. I know many Members are interested in this provision, and I will now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRUMPACKER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the naval appropriation bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

STEEL DREDGES FOR THE PANAMA CANAL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith copies of correspondence between the Secretary of War and myself on the subject of the purchase of two steel dredges for the Panama Canal.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS FROM THE FILES.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HAYES asks leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Thomas Cox (H. R. 8895, Fifty-ninth Congress), no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the request be granted.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand this is a request to do some printing and binding. Can not it be done by motion?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business during the Fifty-ninth Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that it can not be done except by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will say that once before I have taken the position that mere clerical matters were not within the line of policy that I denounce. I shall not make objection in this case, regarding it as a matter of procedure only.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Address delivered by Gen. Horace Porter, LL. D., at Annapolis, upon the occasion of the memorial ceremonies in honor of John Paul Jones, April 24, 1906.

This day America reclaims her illustrious dead. We gather here in the presence of the Chief Magistrate of the nation and of this vast concourse of representative citizens of the Old World and the New to pay our homage to the leading historic figure in the early annals of the American Navy, to testify that his name is not a dead memory, but a living reality, to quicken our sense of appreciation and to give assurance that the transfer of his remains to the land upon whose arms he shed so much luster is not lacking in distinction by reason of the long delay.

The history of John Paul Jones reads more like romance than reality. It is more like a fabled tale of ancient days than the story of an American sailor of only a century and a quarter ago. As light and shade produce the most attractive effects in a picture so the singular contrasts, the strange vicissitudes of his eventful life surround him with an interest that attaches to but few of the world's celebrities. His rise from the humble master's apprentice to the command of conquering squadrons; his transition from the low-born peasant boy to the favorite of imperial courts; crouching at times within the shadow of obscurity, at other times standing on the highest pinnacle of fame—these are some of the features of his marvelous career that appeal to the imagination, excite men's wonder, and fascinate the minds of all who make a study of his life.

The two distinct natures he possessed lend a peculiar interest to his personality. He displayed the fierce temerity of the ancient sea kings combined with the knightly courtesy of mediæval chivalry. At one time we find him aboard the Bonhomme Richard, the frail merchant ship he had hurriedly converted into a man-of-war, equipped with condemned guns, whose explosion early decimated his crew, attacking the Serapis, a superior British ship just off her own shores, his vessel soon a wreck and sinking, most of his guns disabled, half of his motley crew of Americans and French lying about him dead or dying, the scuppers running with human blood, his ship a charnel house, over 200 prisoners confined in the hold rushing up from their prison and attacking the remnant of his exhausted crew, his own consort even, with her treacherous captain, raking his vessel with her fire, flame and smoke issuing from the lower deck filled with splinters, the mad carnage raging till it seemed that hell itself had usurped the place of earth, the undaunted commander in the very thickest of the combat, hatless and begrimed with powder, the very incarnation of battle, preparing to lead a boarding party and try this one desperate chance of success, and when asked by his antagonist who saw his desperate condition, whether he had struck his flag replying, "I've just begun to fight!" Then, by the inspiration of his example, forging weaklings into giants, capturing his opponent, snatching victory from defeat and transferring his crew to his prize just in time to see his own ship sink beneath the waves with the flag still floating defiantly from the mast.

At another time we see him arrayed in the height of fashion, displaying an easy manner and marked elegance in the brilliant salons of the most polite courts of Europe, replying gracefully to the compliments of kings and princes in fluent English, French, and Spanish, showing that he could tread the polished floor of a royal palace as becomingly as the blood-stained deck of a man-of-war.

He was a many-sided man. On the water he was the wizard of the sea; on the land he showed himself an adept in the realms of diplomacy. While his exploits as a sailor eclipsed by their brilliancy his triumphs as a diplomat, he often proved himself a master both of the science of statecraft and the subtleties of diplomacy. He early urged upon the Government the policy of weakening the blockade so disastrous to the colonies, which were essentially commercial, by sending war ships into Great Britain's home waters, attacking her vast commerce on the sea, compelling her to keep fleets at home to protect it, raiding her coasts, and bringing to her people an awakening sense of the realities of war in order that they might tire of it. He aimed to save his prizes, so that he could exhibit captured British war ships in French ports, show the people the hopefulness of the cause of the colonies, stimulate the Government of that power, and encourage it to send armies and fleets to our relief.

His chief diplomatic triumph was when he took the captured Serapis and Countess of Scarborough into the principal harbor of Holland for the express purpose of raising irritating questions regarding the rights of belligerent vessels in neutral ports and embroiling England in a war with Holland. He undertook this mission of his own initiative and against the advice of such experienced diplomatists as De Vauguyon, the French ambassador to Holland, and Dumas, the eminent international lawyer, and by his tact, his ingenuity, and the signal ability of his correspondence he succeeded perfectly in his undertaking, and England soon had another foe arrayed against her. By a rare tact he escaped giving offense to Holland and at the same time avoided wounding the susceptibilities of France.

So much was our Government impressed by this and other exhibitions of his rare diplomatic skill that it intrusted him with the delicate and difficult mission of collecting international claims.

Washington said of him, in a letter addressed to Congressman Hewes:

Mr. Jones is clearly not only a master mariner within the scope of the art of navigation, but he also holds a strong and profound sense of the political and military weight of command at sea.

Jefferson, by direction of Washington, intrusted him with a diplomatic mission to Holland to see whether that State could be induced to join us in an expedition against the pirates of the Barbary coast, and made known that it was the President's desire to give him command of a squadron for such a purpose. But his death intervened before the necessary ships could be furnished.

Paul Jones had written in French an exceedingly able pamphlet entitled "Treatise on the Existing State of the French Navy," which produced a profound impression. Napoleon, when first consul, was so struck by it that he had it reprinted, and the title page bore the inscription "Written by the great American and Russian Admiral."

When Paul Jones took his prizes into the ports of Holland the English minister there distinguished himself by constantly alluding in official correspondence to the conqueror of the Serapis as "a certain Paul Jones, a pirate." Next to the Admiral's able and complete refutation of this unfounded characterization, made to the Dutch States-General and accepted by them, perhaps his best answer was the explanation he wittily gave some time afterwards in a conversation.

Having been alluded to as a pirate—

Said he—

I looked up the authoritative definitions of that epithet, and found among them "Pirate—one who is at war with mankind." I am holding a regular commission as a naval officer in an honorable service and making war only upon the armed enemies of my country. England is at war with America, France, Holland, and Spain, and engaged in provoking war in several colonies, and it seems to me that she is the pirate, not I.

When he landed a force in England and his sailors carried off a quantity of silver plate from Lord Selkirk's estate, Paul Jones purchased it from the crew, who then owned it and counted its value as prize money, paying for it over $700 out of his own pocket, a large sum in those days, and as soon as he could procure the means of communicating returned it and received a handsome acknowledgment from Lord Selkirk. Lord Dunmore, on the contrary, heading a party of British and Tories, completely ravaged the plantation on which Paul Jones had established himself in Virginia, burned to the ground his houses and mill, destroyed his wharf, killed his cattle, and carried off his able-bodied slaves of both sexes to be sold in Jamaica. If piracy there was, the record stamps not Paul Jones, but Lord Dunmore as the pirate.

One of the most conspicuous traits in the character of our illustrious sailor was his pronounced and enthusiastic loyalty to America. In a letter to Jefferson in 1788 he said:

I can never renounce the glorious title of a citizen of the United States.

At another time he wrote:

I do not wish to engage in privateering. My object is not that of private gain, but to serve the public in a way that may reflect credit on our infant Navy and give prestige to our country on the sea.

And yet this is the man whom calumny has called a privateersman.

At the outbreak of the Revolution, after he had presented to Congress, by request, his celebrated suggestions for the organization of an efficient navy—a plan as applicable fundamentally to the service to-day as then—he wrote:

As this is to be the foundation, or, I may say, the first keel timber of a new navy, which all patriots must hope shall become the foremost of the world * * *.

And, again:

If by exceedingly desperate fighting one of our ships shall conquer one of theirs of markedly superior force, we shall be hailed as the pioneers of a new power on the sea with untold prospects of development.

Prophetic words from the man who was destined to fight just such a battle.

Paul Jones never sailed in a man-of-war whose quarter-deck was worthy of being trodden by his feet. His battles were won not by his ships, but by his genius. Employing the feeble vessels given him or which he himself procured he sailed forth boldly to strike the enemies of his country's liberty wherever he could find them and paused not till he dipped the fringes of his banners in the home waters of the mistress of the seas. He captured some thirty vessels from the foremost of naval powers, made four bold descents upon the land, seized large quantities of arms and military stores, destroyed more than a million dollars' worth of property on the sea, and took hundreds of prisoners whose capture was used to force an exchange and release our men, who were being slowly tortured to death in the loathsome, pestilential prison hulks in Brooklyn. Congress afterwards thanked him by resolution for "his bold and successful enterprises to redeem from captivity the citizens of these States who had fallen under the power of the enemy."

He was the very personification of valor. He ranked courage as the manliest of human attributes. He loved brave men; he loathed cowards. He believed that there was scarcely a sin for which courage could not atone. He showed this trait in all the aphorisms he uttered, such as: "Boldness, not caution, wins;" "Men mean more than guns in the rating of ships;" "I am not calculating risks, but estimating the chances of success;" "The sources of success are quick resolve and swift stroke;" "Bravery is that cheerful kind of spirit that makes a man unable to believe that there is any such word as 'danger' in the dictionary, or, if so, not able to see why it should be there."

As long as manly courage is talked of or heroic deeds are honored there will remain green in the hearts of brave men the talismanic name of Paul Jones.

The admiral had that tenderness of heart which is usually coupled with true courage. While he could resort to stern measures in enforcing discipline and suppressing mutiny, he governed his crew more by attaching them to him by kind acts and just treatment than by administering corporal punishment. Referring to his command of the Providence, he wrote:

There was no cat-o'-nine tails aboard, because I threw the only one we had in the sea the first day out.

Again, he said:

I wish all my men to be contented and happy.

He was as generous as the sun itself. For a long time he bore all his personal expenses and abstained from presenting demands for pay to our poverty-stricken Government. When in foreign seas he found that the Government regulations did not authorize the pay the handbills of overzealous recruiting officers had promised to his sailors, he paid the difference out of his own pocket so that his gallant crew should not feel that they were victims of a deception.

For one who lived in an age of loose morals and spent his youthful years amidst the temptations which then beset a seafaring man in the merchant service, he was singularly free from every form of dissipation. He had no fondness for revelry, jolly coffee-house dinners, or drinking bouts, which formed the principal amusements in foreign ports. While others were carousing ashore he was studying in his cabin, perfecting himself in history and languages, pondering upon the maneuvering of ships and the grand strategy of naval warfare, and paving the way for his future victories, which were won first with the brain, then with the sword.

Among his closest friends and most ardent admirers were Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, Lafayette, Hamilton, Wayne, Livingston, the two Morrises, and other eminent Americans. Not bad companionship for a "pirate."

Notwithstanding the gravity of his nature, he at times displayed a wit that could cut the sting from the keenest criticism and gild disappointment with a pleasantry.

He fashioned epigrams in prose and poetry.

Mrs. Livingston, in speaking of him in her diary as a conversationalist, said:

He by turns delighted, amazed, and mystified us.

The Duchess de Chartres wrote:

Not Bayard or Charles le Téméraire could have laid his helmet at a lady's feet with such knightly dignity.

The Marquis de Vaudreuil, the French admiral with whom Paul Jones once made a voyage, said:

His talents are so wonderful and of such diversity that each day he brings forth some new proof of cleverness.

Franklin spoke of the "strange magnetism of his presence, the undescribable charm of his manner."

His criticisms and retorts were at times so caustic that they made him enemies. When Mr. Adams, at a reception in Philadelphia, attempted to relate an anecdote of Fontenelle in French, Paul Jones, upon being asked by some friends what he thought of Mr. Adams's French, replied, without reflecting that the remark might be repeated: "If the political sentiments of Mr. Adams were as English as his French, he would be easily the greatest Tory in the land." This came to the ears of Mr. Adams, and it was long before he forgave the Admiral for the criticism.

But his heart was not often attuned to mirth; its chords were frequently set to strains of sadness. For years he was engaged in a struggle against insubordination, treachery, jealousy, neglect at home, and abuse abroad. The people against whom he fought opened their floodgates of calumny. No misrepresentation of his acts was too gross, no distortion of history too monstrous. These well-concerted attacks of the pen were intended to set him before the Old World in an aspect that was a vicious caricature of his true nature, and they even gave so erroneous an impression of him in this country that it has required a century of time to correct it.

He was too actively engaged in making current history to devote much time to reading it, but he was once moved to write of his enemies:

One may often correctly gauge one's merits by the virulence of their abuse.

He had to learn that "reproach is a concomitant to greatness, as satire and invective were an essential part of a Roman triumph;" that in public life all hours wound, the last one kills. He lived to realize that success is like sunshine, it brings out the vipers, and that the laurel is a narcotic that prevents others from sleeping.

Worn out with the fatigues of arduous service, at the untimely age of 45, alone in a foreign land, he surrendered to death, the only foe to whom he ever lowered his colors. By some strange and unaccountable fatality he was covered immediately with the mantle of forgetfulness. In all the annals of history there is not another case in which death has caused the memory of so conspicuous a man to drop at once from the height of prominence to the depth of oblivion.

He had been counted as one of the rarest contributions to "earth's contingent of master spirits." He enjoyed the unique distinction of being the first to hoist the present form of our flag upon an American man-of-war, the first to receive a salute to it from a foreign power, the first to raise it upon a hostile war ship of superior strength captured in battle, and under his command that banner was never once dethroned from its proud supremacy. He is the only commander in history who ever landed an American force upon a European coast.

Congress complimented him by resolution, voted him a medal to commemorate his greatest victory, and awarded him the privilege of the floor of both Houses; he received a similar favor from the Constitutional Convention; the people of this and other lands organized public demonstrations in his honor, France knighted him, Louis XVI presented him with a gold-mounted sword, Denmark pensioned him, Catharine of Russia created him an admiral, conferred upon him imperial decorations, and loaded him with marks of distinction. If he had lived a little longer he would in all probability have been named admiral of France. The rugged sailor had compelled the recognition of genius; the Scottish peasant boy had broken down the barriers of caste.

In life he was perhaps the most conspicuous personage on two continents, and yet the moment he was placed beneath the ground some strange fate seemed to decree that he was to be snatched from history and relegated to fiction. No inscription was engraved upon his coffin, no statue was erected in his honor, no ship was given his name, no public building was called after him. It required six years of research to find the apartment in which he had lived in Paris and held his brilliant salons, which were attended by the foremost celebrities of the period, and as long a time to discover his unmarked and forgotten grave.

When finally his exact place of burial had been definitely located by authentic documents and other positive evidence, the ground exhibited so repulsive an appearance that the aspect was painful beyond expression. There was presented the spectacle of a hero who had once been the idol of the American people lying for more than a century, like an obscure outcast, in an abandoned cemetery which had been covered later by a dump pile to a height of fifteen feet, where dogs and horses had been buried and the soil was soaked with polluted waters from undrained laundries. As busy feet tramped over the ground the spirit of the hero who lay beneath might well have been moved to cry, in the words of the motto on his first flag, not in defiance, but in supplication then, "Don't tread on me." No American citizen upon contemplating on the spot these painful circumstances could have shrunk from an attempt to secure for his remains a more deserving sepulture.

When the body was exhumed it was fortunately found perfectly preserved, with all the flesh intact, in consequence of having been buried in a leaden coffin filled with alcohol—the usual method of embalming in those days. There were only five leaden coffins in the entire cemetery, four of which were identified as those of strangers. While the features of the body in the fifth coffin were easily recognizable when compared with the accurate busts and medals of Paul Jones, while his initials were found upon the linen and the identity was convincing from the first, yet it was deemed prudent, on account of the importance of the subject, to submit the body to a thorough scientific examination by the most competent experts in the profession of anthropology, in order that the proofs might be authoritatively established and officially placed on record. The most eminent scientists of France, to whom we owe a lasting debt of gratitude, contributed their efforts to this task in the presence of the members of the American embassy and the consulate and the highest officials of the municipality of Paris.

The identification was rendered easy and was established with absolute certainty by reason of the authentic busts and medals obtainable for making the comparative measurements, the abundance of accurate information in existence descriptive of the dead, and the excellent state of preservation of the body, due to the alcohol, which enabled the scientists to perform an autopsy that verified in every particular the disease of which it was known the subject had died.

Twelve American or French persons took part in the identification, and after six days passed in the application of every conceivable test, their affirmative verdict was positive and unanimous and was formally certified to under the official seals of their respective departments, as may be seen from their reports filed with the Government, both in Washington and in Paris.

All that is mortal of the conqueror of the Serapis lies in yonder coffin. He bore the standard of his country for the first time to France; he returned with it draped upon his bier. That generous land, our traditional friend and former ally, now sends a squadron of her noble warships to unite in doing honor to the memory of an illustrious brother sailor.

When Congress adopted the present form of the American flag, it embodied in the same resolution the appointment of Capt. John Paul Jones to command the ship Ranger. When he received the news, history attributes to him this remark: "The flag and I are twins; born the same hour from the same womb of destiny, we can not be parted in life or in death." Alas! they were parted during a hundred and thirteen years, but, happily, they are now reunited.

It was deemed well to bring back his body, in the belief that it would bring back his memory. Time has shed a clearer light upon his acts; distance has brought him into the proper focus to be viewed. A tree is best measured when it is down. His honored remains will be laid to rest on this historic spot in a mausoleum befitting his fame, but his true sepulcher will be the hearts of his countrymen. Generations yet to come will pause to read the inscription on his tomb, and its mute eloquence will plead for equal sacrifice should war again threaten the nation's life.

He was a lesson to his contemporaries; he will ever be an inspiration to his successors; for example teaches more than precept and patterns are better followed than rules.

He was taken all too soon from the living here to join the other living, commonly called the dead. When he passed the portals of eternity, earth mourned one hero less. We shall not meet him till he stands forth to answer to his name at roll call, when the great of earth are summoned on the morning of the last great reveille. Till then, farewell, noblest of all spirits, bravest of all hearts. The simplicity of the rugged sailor was mingled with the heroic grandeur of your nature. Wherever blows fell thickest, your crest was in their midst. The story of your life rises to the sublimity of an epic. Untitled knight of the blue waters, "Wrathful Achilles of the Ocean," conqueror of the conquerors of the sea, the recollection of your deeds will never cease to thrill men with the splendor of events and inspire them with the majesty of achievement. You honored the generation in which you lived, and future ages will be illumined by the brightness of your glory.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 16, 1906.

Prayer by Rev. THOMAS VAN NESS, of Boston, Mass.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

H. R. 17133. An act to amend section 558 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 18666. An act to provide for the reassessment of benefits in the matter of the extension and widening of Sherman avenue, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

JOHN PAUL JONES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from Gen. Horace Porter, inclosing copy of his address at Annapolis, Md., April 24, 1906, upon the occasion of the ceremonies in memory of John Paul Jones; which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table.

ESTIMATES OF APPROPRIATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Director of the Mint recommending that the appropriation for wages of workmen at San Francisco, Cal., contained in the legislative, etc., appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1907, now pending, be amended and increased in amount from $150,000 to $175,000; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior recommending that the appropriation for contingent expenses, Territory of Alaska, contained in the legislative, etc., appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1907, now pending, be amended and increased in amount from $2,000 to $5,000; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House insists upon its amendment to the bill (S. 267) to prohibit aliens from fishing in the waters of Alaska, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. POWERS, Mr. HIGGINS, and Mr. STANLEY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 18442) to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the board of education of the District of Columbia; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

S. 394. An act granting an increase of pension to Amanda Lucas; intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $13,663.51 to pay certain postmasters in Colorado for their services, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

PRACTICE OF OSTEOPATHY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. FORAKER. I present a paper from the Osteopathic Association of the District of Columbia, relative to the practice of osteopathy in the District. I move that the paper be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM WILSON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without approval, Senate bill No. 3454, entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to William Wilson," as the Secretary of the Interior informs me that the records of the Pension Bureau show that the beneficiary died on April 1, 1906, prior to the passage of the bill, which would therefore be inoperative should it become a law.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 16, 1906.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 18442. An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the board of education of the District of Columbia, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The SECRETARY. On page 4 of the bill, line 9, strike out the amendment beginning with that line and ending in line 18 and insert——

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to know whether the amendment is open to an amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not, it being an amendment to an amendment. An amendment to it would be in the third degree.

Mr. McCUMBER. This is an amendment to the amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 4 of the last reprint of the bill, beginning in line 9 and ending in line 18, in lieu of the matter there inserted, insert:

That no carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall hereafter directly or indirectly issue or give any interstate free ticket, free pass, or free transportation for passengers except to its officers, agents, and employees and members of their immediate families, to its actual and bona fide attorneys, to ministers of religion, and inmates of hospitals and eleemosynary and charitable institutions, and to indigent, destitute, and homeless persons. Any carrier violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall for each offense pay to the United States a penalty of not less than one hundred nor more than two thousand dollars: Provided, That this provision shall not be construed to prohibit the interchange of passes for officers, agents, and employees and members of their immediate families, nor to owners and care takers of live stock when traveling with such stock or when going to point of shipment or returning from point of delivery, nor shall anything in this provision be deemed to prohibit any carrier from carrying passengers free on account of charity from and to places visited by general epidemic or pestilence or wholly or largely destroyed by fire, water, earthquakes, or other calamitous visitations, with the object of providing succor, relief, and other assistance to the inhabitants. Jurisdiction of offenses under this provision shall be the same as that provided for offenses in an act entitled "An act to further regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States," approved February 19, 1903, and any amendment thereof.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas if he regards that this amendment of his would provide for the return of postal clerks when they have finished their week's run? For instance, if they should be left in Cincinnati, and their homes are in Huntington, would it provide for their return to their homes or not? And would it provide for surgeons and physicians going to a wreck in case passengers and other people were hurt? Would the railroad be allowed to carry its surgeons and physicians to that wreck and return them to their homes? I think this is a very important amendment, and it should be properly considered before it is adopted. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas if he thinks his amendment covers those two points?

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from West Virginia, I will state that the amendment seeks to deal entirely and wholly with free passes, and it covers only the cases which are specifically mentioned.

So far as commutation tickets are concerned, so far as reduced rates are concerned, both for passengers and for freight, that is still covered by the provisions of section 22 of the original act, as amended finally February 8, 1895.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Texas whether he will not perfect his amendment by adding the words "and physicians and surgeons" after the word "attorneys," in line 6, so that his amendment may include the company's physicians as well as attorneys?

Mr. CULBERSON. I think probably it is already included in the word "employees."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course it is not; but if the Senator does not care to accept that amendment I have no suggestion to make to the Senator in the way of perfecting the substitute.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the public ever had any reason to doubt that the Senate of the United States responded quickly to any wave of public sentiment, that doubt certainly would have been dispelled had the public been able to look upon this Chamber the other day after a few telegrams had come to individual Senators relative to the pending rate bill. On one day the Senate acted with great solemnity, with a desire to do equal and impartial justice, and with a determination that no preferences should be given to any person under the sun in the matter of railway transportation, and having sealed that by an almost unanimous vote of the Senate, the very next day, after a few telegrams came in, we found Senators literally tumbling over each other in order to get in the first amendment to undo what they had done the day previous.

Mr. President, that but demonstrates rather clearly some of the dangers I suggested in the very beginning of the discussion upon this railway rate business. In an address on March 27, referring to this very same subject, I stated:

Mr. President, there are about one and one-fourth million voters employed by the railroads of the United States. At present each one of this great army must deal separately with the organization that controls the particular railroad in which he is employed. Some of those railroads, which are operating upon their own systems, upon their own theories, contemplate improvements in one direction, some of them in another direction; and all these matters of expenses and improvements are considered in determining what they can pay their employees; but, now, when you substitute and project this political body into the management of the railways of the country, even to a slight degree, does anyone for a single moment believe that this immense political influence will not make itself felt, first, in demands before this Commission for higher wages; second, for shorter hours, and, third, for smaller train loads, etc.? If they appeal there in vain, does anybody for a single moment believe that they will not make stupendous power felt in the only body that is back of this great political power—the Congress of the United States?

Mr. President, I hardly thought that this prophecy would come true during the very discussion of the pending bill. It demonstrates very clearly the dangers I pointed out, that in taking one step we are irretrievably forced into another step further and further into the realm of paternalism, or Government ownership of the railways of the country.

Mr. President, I speak of this simply to indicate a danger that is certain to follow, unless we seek to do exact justice and nothing further. We either ought to limit transportation to the lines in which the company is using its own employees or we ought to leave it to a great extent to those companies themselves. What reason is there for us to say, as an exception to the rule, that any agent or employee of a company may secure transportation not only over the lines of the company in which he is operating, but he may secure that transportation for himself and also for any member of his family over any other line in the United States, and except him from the general rule? Can any Senator give a good, honest, just reason for making that exception?

Mr. President, I do agree with the principle that anyone in the employ of the railway company should have the right to take any member of his family to his place of business. His place of business is on the line of the railway where he is laboring. But, for instance, in the case of a teacher in our public schools, who has given ten month of strenuous labor to educate the children of this city, it would be a crime to allow that person to have free transportation 10 miles to any place where she might regain her health, and yet at the same time the road will take free the aunt or cousin or sister of an employee of the railroad company.

We simply determine by law that they not only shall have the right to travel over the same line, but they may have transportation over any line in the United States, and I think some of the amendments would insure also free transportation to Europe, if they could. Now, it all hinges around this keen desire to make exceptions to the rule, and it seems to me it ought not to go any further than that rule requires.

There is another thing in this amendment; and I especially call the attention of the Senator from Texas, who introduced the amendment, to this matter. Mr. President, I want the attention of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am listening.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will wait until the Senator gets through with his little conversation, because I wish to amend his amendment, or, rather, to make a suggestion and ask him if he will not accept it.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well; I will listen to the suggestion.

Mr. McCUMBER. In the first instance, I wish to give a little condition which exists in my part of the country, which I gave the other day. It is almost impossible for the agriculturists in the Dakotas to secure a sufficient number of laborers during the harvest season. It would be impossible to secure a sufficient number unless the railways were allowed to give reduced fare to induce such laborers to go to the farmers' fields.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. McCUMBER. I certainly do.

Mr. CULBERSON. After the statement the Senator made to this effect the other day I called his attention, and I call attention again, to the fact that this amendment does not undertake to deal with reduced fares or commutation tickets, but it is confined exclusively to the question of free transportation.

Mr. McCUMBER. The bill as it now stands and as it will be amended by this amendment would prohibit even reduced fare for employees, and the proper place for an amendment of this kind is to the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Texas. This being necessary, I shall not vote for the pending amendment unless it is understood that we can include these laborers to such an extent that we may secure the necessary labor in the fields of the Dakotas during the proper season of the year. I can not see that the Senator should have any serious objection to that amendment going in.

I wish to call the Senator's attention to another matter, which I consider a defect in the amendment which he has proposed. On page 1 it provides:

> That no carrier, etc., shall give, etc., transportation for passengers except to its officers, agents, and employees and members of their immediate families, to its actual and bona fide attorneys, to ministers of religion, and inmates of hospitals and eleemosynary and charitable institutions, and to indigent, destitute, and homeless persons.

It is probably true that hundreds of thousands of lives of sick persons are saved by reason of the charitable action of the railway companies in taking consumptives or other persons to a different section of the country, where by reason of their poverty they could not go except for this assistance of the railway companies.

The Senator's amendment allows them to take a person from one of these institutions—that is, granting free transportation to the inmates of these institutions. Will the Senator say that that would include free transportation to a crippled child whom somebody desired to send to one of these institutions? I do not think it would. On the contrary they could take them from some of these institutions, but could not send them to those institutions. I would suggest to the Senator to strike out after the word "religion," in line 6, down to "persons," in line 8, so that without mentioning those institutions it would read:

> Or to any destitute or indigent sick or injured or crippled or homeless persons.

That would give them the right to take them to a charitable or eleemosynary institution, and it would give them the right to take them from those institutions without particularly mentioning them. It seems to me, Mr. President, that that would be a proper amendment. If the Senator will not accept it, I would move——

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest to the Senator that there is no reason why every sick person should be permitted to be carried free, and that the words "indigent, homeless, and destitute" would include the passage of persons sick and in a position demanding charity.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator undoubtedly did not understand my amendment. It reads:

> Or to any destitute or indigent sick or injured or crippled or homeless persons."

That is, they will have to be destitute or indigent sick or injured or crippled or homeless persons.

Mr. CULBERSON. Under the present amendment if indigent, whether sick or well, they may be carried, and consequently that includes the suggestion of the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. CULBERSON. I say the amendment proposed includes indigent persons, whether they are sick or well.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; the Senator will observe the word "or" between "destitute and indigent" without the word "or" between the others. That shows that destitute and indigent are conditions that modify sick, injured, crippled, or homeless; that they must be both destitute and indigent in addition.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to ask the Senator from Texas——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the time of the Senator from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. BACON obtained the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to me just one moment, simply for information?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to ask the Senator from Texas whether he holds that if the amendment is adopted section 22 of the existing law is repealed or not. That is all. I ask simply for information.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is repealed to that extent.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is to that extent?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator repeats some of the phraseology of the existing law. I should hardly think that ought to be done.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I understand that the measure pending is a substitute offered by the Senator from Texas, and that as a substitute it is now open to amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that it is not open to amendment.

Mr. BACON. If the Chair will permit me to make a suggestion, I understand that there is offered by the Senator from Texas a substitute for a provision in the pending bill. Am I correct?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The provision in the bill is an amendment itself, and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas is an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. BACON. Will the Chair pardon an inquiry? The provision in the bill is not an amendment offered by anyone else. It is a provision of the bill, and this is a substitute for that provision, and under the well-recognized rule of parliamentary law——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make a parliamentary inquiry?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BACON. Certainly, if it relates to this matter.

Mr. TILLMAN. It relates to this matter.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

Mr. TILLMAN. As I understand it, the Senate last night reconsidered the amendment that was incorporated in the bill at the instance of the Senator from Texas.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. TILLMAN. And that amendment is now pending?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the pending amendment, and to that amendment another amendment has been proposed by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. TILLMAN. Therefore there are two amendments pending, and we are at the end of our row on amendments?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of that opinion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire will state his question of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make the point of order that the provision now in the bill, being an amendment placed there in Committee of the Whole, is not amendable until the bill gets to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the vote by which that amendment was placed in the bill has been reconsidered in the Committee of the Whole, and it leaves the amendment as though still pending.

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg pardon; I was not aware of the fact that it had been formally reconsidered.

Mr. BACON. If I understand the provision which is now pending, it is found on page 4 of the bill, beginning at line 9 and ending at line 18. Am I correct in that?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. BACON. Very well. The Senator from Texas offers a substitute for that provision, and those are the two measures now before the Senate. According to a well-established and recognized rule of parliamentary practice, where there are two independent propositions pending, one in the nature of a substitute for the other, it is within the province of the parliamentary body to amend each proposition, so that the Senate may choose between the two when thus perfected.

Otherwise, Mr. President, it will be seen that the Senate would be limited in its consideration to a choice between the two measures as they now are, without any opportunity on the part of the Senate to perfect them. If it is not in order to amend the proposition of the Senator from Texas, then it must be voted on in its entirety as it stands, which, I submit to the Chair, would be manifestly of great inconvenience if there were any such rule of parliamentary practice as that. To avoid that, to enable the body to perfect a measure, it is a well-recognized rule that where there are two pending propositions, one in the nature of a substitute for the other, the parliamentary body has the undoubted right to perfect each, so that the Senate may choose between the perfected measures and not be limited to a choice between two measures neither of which may have been put in the position that they desire.

Of course I yield with all deference, but there is no question in my mind that that is the parliamentary rule. It is the same subject of debate, the Chair will remember, that was brought to the attention of the Senate some weeks ago, when a similar question was before us.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands this is not a motion to strike out and insert. The Chair would further state that if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas to the amendment which appears in the bill is not satisfactory to the Senate it can vote it down, and the amendment pending would then be open to amendment.

Mr. BACON. The Chair, then, holds that the proposition of the Senator from Texas must either be voted upon affirmatively or negatively and that it can not be amended?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair holds that to be the case.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I should like again to call the particular attention of the Senator from Texas to the suggestion that he insert, after the word "attorneys," the words "and physicians and surgeons."

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia will state his point of order.

Mr. BACON. It is not a point of order; but, with the permission of the Senator from Indiana, I would suggest that the Chair has just ruled that there can be no amendment——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I am not proposing an amendment.

Mr. BACON. I beg pardon.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am asking the Senator from Texas, and in my own time, whether he will not consent to perfect his amendment by the insertion of the words "and physicians and surgeons." I hope to be able to vote for the Senator's amendment if he will permit us to do so, and whether he will or not——

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CULBERSON. As I stated to the Senator from Indiana a moment ago, I think, under the term "employees," physicians are included, but while I am of that opinion I have no objection to the insertion of the words "surgeons or physicians of the company" to make it certain.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then let that amendment to the amendment be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas modify his proposed amendment to the amendment?

Mr. CULBERSON. I will change it to add, after "attorneys," the words "and physicians and surgeons."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the proposed modification.

The SECRETARY. After the word "attorneys" insert "and physicians and surgeons."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Texas whether he will not also accept the two obviously needed amendments suggested by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]?

Mr. CULBERSON. I think the amendment covers the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota, and I decline to accept it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I yield.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to make an independent suggestion. I thought the Senator from Indiana had concluded.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I very much, indeed, desire to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Texas, but I am convinced that the amendments suggested by the Senator from North Dakota are both wise and necessary, and, further, that they are not covered by the provisions of the amendment.

I call the attention of the Senator from Texas to the fact that probably it would not be unbecoming to be a little more generous to the suggestions of Senators. This original amendment was drafted by me before or at the same time the Senator from Texas drafted it, and I offered it to the Senate before the Senator from Texas offered it. But the President of the Senate called attention to the fact that the Senator from Texas had asked to be recognized for that purpose, and so I immediately withdrew my substitute, not having any pride of opinion about it, not caring for credit for it, in order that the Senator from Texas might move his amendment, which was accordingly done.

Thereupon it became clear to several Senators that the amendment was defective in the exact particulars the Senator has since perfected his amendment. I suggested certain words to be used instead of the phraseology employed, but the Senator did not see fit to accept them. On two or three occasions Senators have suggested, solely for the purpose of perfecting the amendment, and for no other reason, amendments which no Senator has been able to oppose on the ground of reason or fact. The Senator has accepted the suggestion to insert the words "and physicians and surgeons," but the amendments that were suggested by the Senator from North Dakota, which are merely in the nature of perfecting the amendment of the Senator from Texas, and which can certainly do no harm, and which, while we are on the subject, we ought to dispose of, instead of taking them up independently in the Senate and discussing this whole subject over again, are not considered as necessary by the Senator from Texas.

I sincerely trust that he will enable all of us who desire heartily to vote for his amendment to do so, by accepting the amendments which were offered by the Senator from North Dakota, and which all Senators admit could not injure his amendment and which will certainly perfect it.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. I am in sympathy with the object of the Senator from Indiana, to express clearly in the bill what he desires to express respecting the surgeons, and I suggest that there are two ways in which we may get this subject unincumbered of its present awkward parliamentary position.

First, the Senator from Texas offered an amendment, which was adopted, and it has been reconsidered. The Senate evidently does not intend to adopt that amendment. It might, therefore, give him unanimous consent to withdraw it and let the present amendment offered in the bill be considered, instead of as an amendment to an amendment. Or the Senator from Texas might withdraw his amendment and let all amendments be withdrawn and vote down the Culberson amendment as an original proposition.

I suggest that if the Senator from Texas will ask that his original and reconsidered amendment may, by unanimous consent, be withdrawn, it will disencumber us of this awkward situation, in which we may be compelled to vote for a matter before it is perfected.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is precisely the situation.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, as it is not in order for me to offer an amendment at this time, I desire, in a word, to state why I do not favor the amendment of the Senator from Texas and to suggest that the proposition which I have offered is the proper one for the Senate to favor.

The numerous suggestions made by Senators of independent cases where the application of the rule proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Texas will result in hardship indicates the very great difficulty of laying down a general rule where all cases of hardship will be relieved simply in the way of exceptions. For that reason, it seems to me it is very much wiser to designate the particular persons to whom passes shall not be issued rather than to make a general prohibition and then endeavor to specify who shall be the excepted classes.

I therefore want to have read for information, as I can not offer it, the proposition which I will ask the Senate to pass upon. I ask that the Secretary will read to the Senate the amendment which will be proposed by me in case the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas should not be adopted. I ask the attention of Senators to the reading of the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read, as requested.

Mr. BACON. Before the reading, I desire to again state to the Senate, if I can get its attention, that the theory of this amendment is to designate the parties to whom the issuance of passes shall be prohibited, rather than to proceed upon the other plan of making a general prohibition, and then endeavoring to cure the trouble by exceptions. Now, I ask that the amendment may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment of Mr. CULBERSON it is proposed to insert the following:

That no carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall hereafter directly or indirectly issue or give any interstate free ticket, free pass, or free transportation or passage to any Senator of the United States or Representative in Congress, or to any justice or judge of the courts of the United States, or to any officer of either of the Executive Departments of the United States. Any such carrier violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall for each offense pay to the United States a penalty of not less than $100 nor more than $2,000.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CLAY. I understood the Chair to rule that the amendment which was adopted by the Senate and reconsidered was still pending, that amendment being the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. That amendment being still pending before the Senate, the Senator from Texas offers a substitute for it, and the only question which Senators can vote upon is either the adoption or the rejection of that amendment. I desire to ask the Chair this question: If that amendment should be adopted in lieu of the original amendment, would it be still subject to amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It would not at the present stage of the bill.

Mr. CLAY. If the present situation continues, then Senators are compelled to vote for that amendment or no amendment on this subject?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so holds at this stage of the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. That amendment would be subject to amendment after the bill gets out of the Committee of the Whole. We could then amend the amendment which had been heretofore adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, just a few words further. There are two other amendments yet pending in the Senate. Neither of them can be acted upon at this time. I am anxious to vote for a prohibition of passes to executive, legislative, and judicial officers, but what Congress has to do with preventing railroads from giving passes to private citizens who hold no relation to the Government I am unable to understand. I can understand why a judge ought not to ride on a free pass; I can understand why a Member of Congress ought not to ride on a pass; I can understand why judicial officers ought to be deprived of that privilege, both from a Federal and a State standpoint; but when it comes to a private citizen, who holds no office, it presents an entirely different question. For that reason I prefer either the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. BACON] or the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN].

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Georgia how he differentiates the giving of a free transportation to an individual for himself over a railroad from the giving of reduced rates to an individual for his freight? If one is wrong, if the railroad does wrong in discriminating between individuals in granting reduced freight rates, how does the Senator reconcile himself to saying that the giving of a reduced rate for the transportation of a passenger is not also in violation of the law?

A railroad corporation is created for the benefit of the public, and it has no right to discriminate in favor of one person, whether he be a public officer or a private individual, as against another. I should like to hear from the Senator in reference to such a discrimination.

Mr. CLAY. The Government official and the private citizen sustain different relations to the public. Members of Congress are called upon to legislate for the American people and to pass upon questions as between the railroads and the people. The same may be said in regard to Federal judges. They are called upon to pass upon judicial questions between the railroads and the people. The same may also be said to some extent in regard to executive officers.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I will not pursue the discussion. I simply say that I must be very obtuse not to be able to see the distinction, which is present to the mind of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY]. The public carrier, the railroad corporation, created primarily and essentially for the public benefit, has no right, under our theory at least, to discriminate in favor of one individual as against another. There is no distinction that I can see, and I do not think there is any distinction which can be pointed out between a discrimination in a freight rate and a discrimination in a passenger rate. In the case of a free pass, it is an absolute gift; an absolute denial to one individual of a privilege which is granted by the public carrier to another individual. In the case of a discrimination in matters of freight, it is generally only in a minor degree, where one individual is charged less than another, and not a free pass for his freight over the railroad. So, Mr. President, I do not see why——

Mr. CLAY. I will ask the Senator why make any distinction, then? Why not provide that passes shall not be given to anyone, either to a private citizen or to the public official? If you are going to provide exact equality, then, why give a pass to anyone? I prefer an amendment which makes it unlawful for the carrier to give any pass or free ticket to any officer of the United States, including executive, legislative, and judicial officers. Such an amendment clearly embraces Members of Congress. The private citizen who holds no office stands in a different light; so does the employee.

Mr. MALLORY. I concede that the carrier has a right to give a pass to its own employees. I think that is necessarily a concomitant of the condition of the public carrier. He is obliged to allow his employees to go from point to point, and I see no objection to giving passes to the employees of the railroads; but beyond that I do say the issuance of passes ought not to be allowed.

I do not know that I entirely indorse the substitute as offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], but the amendment he has offered I should vote for largely in preference to such an amendment as that proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Texas to his proposed amendment. The proviso beginning in line 1, page 2, permits "the interchange of passes for officers, agents," etc., and likewise "to owners and care takers of live stock."

The amendment, in so far as the phraseology is concerned relating to the owners and care takers of stock, is, I think, very satisfactorily framed; but this courtesy or right should not be confined to the matter of interchange of passes. I think the railroads should be permitted to issue free transportation direct to the care taker or the person in charge of the stock. I apprehend that under the proviso the privilege would be confined to a mere interchange of passes; and to the end that this difficulty may be eliminated, I suggest to the Senator the propriety of accepting an amendment by inserting after the word "the," where it first appears in line 2, on page 2, the words "issue or;" so that the proviso would read:

That this provision shall not be construed to prohibit the issue or interchange of passes, etc.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Montana, in calling particular attention to this language, raises an issue as to which I should like to ask the Senator. I had not observed it before. The amendment provides for the interchange of passes; and undoubtedly the object to be accomplished is that passes shall be issued to these employees and to also provide for their transportation over other lines.

Mr. CARTER. That is true.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But I am asking the Senator whether or not the language here used would not permit the interchange of a pass held by an employee to another employee?

Mr. CARTER. I presume that even if the language were susceptible of that construction, in administration it would not be permitted.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will ask the Senator if he does not think that it is certainly susceptible of that construction?

Mr. CARTER. While that is possible, it is scarcely probable that it would be tolerated by the railroads, I imagine.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, in reference to the suggestion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], I will state that by transposition the paragraph beginning on line 3, page 2, reading "to owners and care takers of live stock when traveling with such stock or when going to point of shipment or returning from point of delivery," having been placed after the words with reference to the interchange of passes by an inadvertence in writing it out, or stenographically, it is, I think, susceptible to the objection suggested by the Senator from Montana. I have no objection, Mr. President, to inserting the words suggested by the Senator from Montana "issue or," after the word "the," at the beginning of line 2, on page 2, so that the amendment will speak the purpose of the drafter.

Mr. President, I want to say in reference to this matter——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him at that point whether he has modified his amendment in any other respect? I was for a time out of the Chamber, and I understand that there have been some other modifications.

Mr. CULBERSON. At the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] the words "physicians and surgeons" were added after the word "attorneys."

Mr. President, I desire to say that I have no special desire to introduce or to pass any particular amendment on the subject of free passes. I have said once or twice in the Senate that my purpose in introducing the amendment several days ago was to avoid a very disagreeable and a very vexatious subject in the Southern States. That was my particular object, though incidentally I am opposed to the issuance of passes, and would, if I could, make it as general as it is possible to do under the circumstances. With that view and in that spirit, Mr. President, I have consented to the modification of my amendment, wherever the suggestions of Senators have met my approval, and without reference to whom or by whom such suggestions were made.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] a few moments ago, as I understand—though I did not hear him—suggested or intimated a lack of courtesy on my part to him with reference to certain amendments which he had suggested, notwithstanding the fact that I had already accepted a suggestion made by himself with respect to the insertion of the words "physicians and surgeons" of railway companies. I do not understand what the Senator meant by that language if he uttered it, although, as I say, I did not hear it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator wish me to make a statement here?

Mr. CULBERSON. I wish to know what the Senator meant.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well. Mr. President, I simply said that I thought, in view of the history of this particular amendment, the Senator could afford to be a little more generous than he had been up to that particular moment in listening to the suggestions of other Senators, which suggestions were made solely for the purpose of perfecting his amendment. I called attention to two or three instances where suggestions had been made and which, without much consideration, had been summarily rejected by the Senator from Texas. I said, in view of the history of this whole proceeding, when Senators were merely intending to aid the Senator, as we are all attempting to aid each other, I thought he might be a little more receptive.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that this discussion is out of order, as each of the Senators have heretofore spoken.

Mr. CULBERSON. Then if I may not refer further to this matter, I will rise for another purpose. Appreciating the suggestions made in several parts of the Chamber with reference to the attitude in which Senators may be themselves placed by a vote on this matter, although I do not yet understand logically the so-called "parliamentary situation," I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment which is printed in italics on page 4 of the bill, and to offer in lieu of it the printed amendment proposed by myself, which is on the desks of Senators this morning; so that the amendment which is now pending may be amendable by the Senate, if it sees proper.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Before the Senator takes his seat, I want to ask him a question merely for the purpose of expediting this matter. Does the Senator in making this request for unanimous consent to substitute another amendment for the one pending include in the substitute amendment the words "physicians and surgeons" which the Senator included in his amendment a moment ago?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. DANIEL. This is disposed of, is it?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas rises to a question of personal privilege. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I send to the Secretary's desk——

Mr. DANIEL. Had I been recognized?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator had been recognized, but the Senator from Texas rose to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. DANIEL. Of course I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask the Secretary to read from the Chicago Tribune of May 15 the matter between the pen marks in the article which I send to the desk, beginning at the lower part of the first column.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune, Tuesday, May 15, 1906.]

BAILEY A STUMBLING BLOCK.

It is a fact, however, and there is documentary proof of this which has not yet been produced, but which is none the less in existence, as I know, that Senator TILLMAN could not control his own party, because he could not control the real party leader in the Senate, JOE BAILEY, of Texas. It was Senator BAILEY who stood in the way of an agreement, and Senator TILLMAN was suspicious of him and said so in so many words to former Senator Chandler. It was Mr. Chandler who brought to the White House the statement that Senator BAILEY had devised his extraordinary amendment prohibiting the lower courts of the United States exercising the right to issue interlocutory orders for the sole purpose of defeating the railroad bill. It was Mr. Chandler who vouched for the statement that Senator TILLMAN was suspicious of Senator BAILEY, that he believed Senator BAILEY was treacherous and did not want a rate bill passed at all, or, if passed, hoped to have inserted in it some amendment which would be fatal to its constitutionality and which would destroy its effectiveness.

The story was told as coming from Senator TILLMAN that Senator BAILEY was not honestly in favor of the rate bill, and that he would have opposed it openly if he were not afraid it would cost him his seat in the Senate, as the Texas people are not fond of statesmen who defend railroads or any other of the octopus class.

HAVE CHANDLER IN WRITING.

I think I am safe in saying that former Senator Chandler wrote to a distinguished member of the Administration that he and Senator TILLMAN were both suspicious of Senator BAILEY and that this letter undoubtedly was shown to President Roosevelt himself. In personal conversations the word was carried from the TILLMAN camp that Senator BAILEY was suspected of holding secret conferences with Mr. ALDRICH himself, and by skillful support of his anti-injunction amendment Senator BAILEY intentionally had split up the Democratic caucus and had managed things so that Mr. TILLMAN could not deliver anything like the unanimous Democratic vote for anything at all, no matter whether approved by the Administration or not.

That Senator BAILEY was under suspicion by Senator TILLMAN and other prominent Democrats is positively known. That there was ground to believe that he or other Democrats were in conference with Senator ALDRICH almost all the time, and that they were being tempted to unite with the ALDRICH crowd to "down the President" is susceptible of proof, if the distinguished people interested shall see fit to produce the documents.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I had taken no part in the question of veracity which had been raised by the President between him and ex-Senator Chandler; I had not even given any public expression of my opinion as to the question of good faith which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] raised with the President, because personally I knew nothing about either transaction. I had never conferred with the President directly, nor had I conferred with him through ex-Senator Chandler. It was, therefore, a matter of great surprise this morning when a Senator called my attention to the communication in the Chicago Tribune of yesterday.

That communication, it is understood, was sent by a correspondent who is close to the White House, and who is presumed to speak with some degree of authority concerning matters there. I do not know this to be true, and therefore decline to charge that it is true. But, sir, I denounce that statement as an unqualified, a deliberate, and a malicious lie; I denounce that correspondent as an unqualified, deliberate, and malicious liar; I denounce the man who furnished him the information on which it was based or who inspired its publication as an unqualified, deliberate, and a malicious liar, whoever he may be, and however high the office which he holds.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. DANIEL and Mr. McCUMBER addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina will state it.

Mr. TILLMAN. My name having been mentioned in the article which has been read as the one who had conveyed to Mr. Chandler the information that I suspected the good faith of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], I feel called upon to say something. I have read the whole of that article, and I am sorry that the Senator from Texas did not allow it all to go in, because while it is not——

Mr. BAILEY. I want to say that I did not feel at liberty to have any part of it printed except that which related to me.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then, perhaps, Mr. President, the Senate would like to hear it all now, and I ask that it be all read, so that my own comments on it may be better understood.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from South Carolina? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the Secretary read the portion which has not been read.

The Secretary read as follows:

BAILEY A TRAITOR ON THE RATE BILL—CHARGED BY CHANDLER THAT TEXAN SOUGHT ALLIANCE WITH ALDRICH TO BLOCK TILLMAN'S EFFORTS—ROOSEVELT QUICK TO ACT—PRESIDENT'S PROMPT WORK IN EMERGENCY UNITES REPUBLICANS AND DEPRIVES DEMOCRATS OF CREDIT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 14, 1906.

Behind the letter of President Roosevelt to Senator Allison and the report of Attorney-General Moody to the President, made public to-night, and also back of the sensational statements of Senators BAILEY and TILLMAN in the Senate on Saturday, is still another story which I am now permitted to make public for the first time.

President Roosevelt did conduct negotiations with the Democrats through Senator TILLMAN. As he himself said, the conferences did not originate with him, but the suggestion came from Senator TILLMAN himself through former Senator William E. Chandler, a Republican, but a strong personal friend of Senator TILLMAN.

Mr. TILLMAN and Mr. Chandler have visited each other during vacation times, and in spite of the difference in their politics have been extremely close friends since they first became acquainted. They used to fight in the Senate just for the fun of the thing and then go out to lunch together. Mr. TILLMAN visited Mr. Chandler at his New Hampshire home, and the visit was returned.

TILLMAN'S LOVE FOR CHANDLER.

When Mr. Chandler was beaten for reelection through the influence of the Boston and Maine Railroad, which he had persistently fought, Senator TILLMAN was one of those who helped the New Hampshire Senator secure the soft job he now holds at the head of the Spanish Claims Commission. This curious tribunal possesses a large patronage, pays large salaries, does no work, and is in itself the ideal Government sinecure, the like of which does not really exist in Washington.

Senator TILLMAN was not on good terms with President Roosevelt. A dinner invitation to the White House had been withdrawn and a public snub administered by the President because of his unseemly conduct on the floor of the Senate which resulted in his suspension.

Senator TILLMAN, by force of circumstances, had been made the leader of the Democrats, and also to a certain extent the representative of the Administration element in the Senate on which the President could depend. It was quite natural, therefore, for the South Carolina Senator to talk over the situation with his boon companion and constant chum, Mr. Chandler. It was Mr. Chandler who went first to the White House, and not the White House which went to Mr. Chandler.

This part of the story is not new, although it is revived by the President's statement and the report of Attorney-General Moody. It is necessary to repeat it, however, because it explains the circumstances which followed, which the President thus far has kindly suppressed, doubtless out of regard both for Mr. Chandler and Senator TILLMAN, who have been honestly in favor of rate regulation.

TILLMAN'S POLITICAL ENDS.

There was a twofold reason apparently which influenced Mr. TILLMAN to open negotiations with the President. By the action of Senator ALDRICH and the Republican majority on the committee Senator TILLMAN was put in charge of the bill. He would be sure to make a sorry figure of it unless he had some assurance of support by the Administration Republicans. Senator TILLMAN is a violent man in his language, but he has honest convictions. He believed in rate regulation and wanted to see it put on the statute books. He was entirely in sympathy with the President on the matter of principle, and owing to the honesty of his purpose he was willing to forget the old snub and send Mr. Chandler to the White House to see if some sort of a thoroughfare could not be devised on which both the President and the Democrats could travel, leaving ALDRICH and his crowd out in the cold.

There was one natural political trick to be turned, which was to secure before the country the credit of passing the rate bill. Senator TILLMAN was smart enough to see that if Senator ALDRICH could command the larger portion of the Republican vote, and if the Administration should openly have to depend upon the solid Democratic vote, the Democrats would be the gainers. For political reasons, therefore, as well as from his honest devotion to principle and his personal desire to steer the bill successfully through the Senate, Mr. TILLMAN was more than ready to negotiate with the President, and while he would not go to the White House he was willing to go and did go repeatedly to see the Attorney-General, who was the President's personal representative.

DEMOCRATS BADLY SPLIT.

This brings the situation down to about the time of the Democratic caucus, when there was developed such a great split in that party as to make the President and those nearest him extremely doubtful whether the Democrats could deliver solid support even if the Administration should agree upon a compromise amendment satisfactory to them. President Roosevelt, as Senator TILLMAN'S own negotiations show, and as the report of Attorney-General Moody proves conclusively, was entirely willing to work in harmony with anyone who would aid in the passage of a satisfactory rate bill.

The measure had been passed through the House unanimously and with the total obliteration of political lines. It was not a party measure in any sense of the word. It had been reported out to the Senate against the vote of a majority of the Republican members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and it was actually dependent upon the initiative, day by day, of a Democrat as the floor leader. It was entirely proper, therefore, that the President should confer with Senator TILLMAN, and if that had been all there was to the affair the two men would still be in entire harmony.

[At this point in the article appears the matter heretofore read at the request of Mr. BAILEY.]

The Secretary resumed the reading of the article, as follows:

NEW TASK FOR ROOSEVELT.

It was, therefore, when it was discovered that the Democrats were hopelessly split up, and when it was found that Senator TILLMAN himself was openly out of touch with and suspicious of Senator BAILEY, the acknowledged leader of the minority in the Senate, that it became necessary for the Administration to make a final effort to get the Republicans together on some sort of a rate bill which would be satisfactory to the country. To have notified Senators TILLMAN and BAILEY would have defeated this purpose entirely. Senator ALDRICH and his associates could not get at Senator TILLMAN, and Senator BAILEY could not help them openly. They were ready, therefore, to compromise, and, after all, the most they wanted was "to save their face."

It was a complicated situation, as anyone readily can see, and it is remarkable, to say the least, that it was solved so quickly. Just how it was done is told in a paragraph in Attorney-General Moody's report, in which he says, after detailing the conferences with Senator TILLMAN just after the Democratic caucus:

"I then said that in my opinion any amendment drawn by anyone representing the executive branch of the Government, even though it were inspired from heaven, would not be accepted without change by the Senate; that that attitude was natural and proper, and that if the exact language of an amendment which could be adopted should be agreed upon it ought to be drawn by the Senators themselves. I suggested Senator ALLISON as a proper person for further conferences, and the matter, so far as I was concerned, ended there."

ALLISON AMENDMENT COMES IN.

As the President said, the now celebrated Allison amendment was brought to him by Senators ALLISON and CULLOM. It had been circulated in the Senate for some little time, and had been talked over before it was shown to the President at all. He accepted it almost as soon as it was brought to him, on his own motion, and possibly without as much consideration as might have been desired.

The remarkable thing is that the President did not consult Attorney-General Moody at all before agreeing to the Allison amendment. That compromise was not submitted to Mr. Moody in any way, and he never saw it until he read it in the newspapers after the President had given it his public approval. Attorney-General Moody was ignored in the matter, but he had, in effect, advised that he should be ignored when he suggested that the compromise should come from the Senate and not from the Administration. Mr. Moody—

[At this point the article sent to the desk ends.]

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, the points to which I wish to address myself in this remarkable article are only two. Coleridge tells us:

> In Cologne, a town of monks and bones
> And pavements fanged with murderous stones,
> I counted two-and-seventy stenches,
> All well defined, and several stinks.

This correspondent is undoubtedly a muck rake. Into what house the handle goes or what hand holds that handle I shall not say. But in the brief time I have had to examine the article I counted eight distinct and absolute falsehoods in regard to myself. But the one more particularly necessary to mention is that I ever lost faith in the integrity and honor and fair dealing and purpose of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. There never has been the slightest disagreement between us from the beginning of the railroad rate debate in the Senate, and I have never at any time or anywhere indicated a suspicion. I have said that there were suggestions by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] to the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], and to myself also, urging an agreement between the Democrats and his friends on the other side, which we declined to consider. But there has never been the slightest suspicion on my part of the good faith of the Senator from Texas in this business. Therefore this story, which is concocted now and is being sent abroad by the cuckoos and hirelings of the Republican machine to endeavor to muddy the waters and becloud the situation, is only indicative of the desperate straits to which some people have brought themselves.

The observation of the Attorney-General that he felt that nothing that might be drawn in the way of an amendment would ever be accepted by the Senate unless a Senator drew it is an adroit effort to give color to the President's retreat behind the Allison amendment as embodying his wishes and his purpose, notwithstanding the repeated declarations in his message and in his conversation with Senators and in his conversation with newspaper men that he would never consent to any such proposal.

I do not care to pursue the question further. The country is fully acquainted with the situation. But, as I am on my feet and the Senate is undoubtedly tired of this controversy, I desire to put in one more exhibit, so that the RECORD shall be full when future historians come to sift the question who did the lying in this important transaction—they may have all the evidence that I have. I therefore send to the desk and ask to have read a personal letter addressed to me by the Hon. William E. Chandler, of this date.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 16, 1906.

MY DEAR MR. TILLMAN: As the telephonic denial by President Roosevelt sent to the Senate through Senator LODGE remains in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 12, it seems to me that I should take some notice of it, which I do by now reaffirming the essential truth of the statement I made to you and which you repeated in the Senate. Much as I regret that the hasty action of Senator LODGE and the President has forced an issue between the President and myself, the extreme language he used makes such an issue unavoidable, and I can not shrink from or evade it, although I can not use toward the Chief Executive of the nation language like his own. Upon our respective statements I submit the controversy, with confidence to the judgment of those who know me.

For those who do not know me there is fortunately circumstantial evidence of a high order which shows that the President could not have omitted to make in substance the statement which he denies. Nor could he have then made the whole statement which he now substitutes. His impulsiveness has led him into serious error upon a point of no importance in itself, but only as affecting his attack upon me. I give to you a further statement as follows:

Prior to March 31 I had not seen the President for a long time. I did not go to the White House as a representative of Senator TILLMAN, but solely because the President summoned me there by the letter from Mr. Loeb, and I waited for him to express his object. It was unmistakably stated to be communication with Mr. TILLMAN, who had the rate bill in charge, and other Democrats of the Senate, for the purpose of securing the adoption in the railroad rate bill of a court-review clause limiting the inquiry to the question whether the Commission had exceeded its authority or had violated the constitutional rights of the carrier. I knew and he knew that it was impossible for him to open conferences with Mr. TILLMAN, unless he was fully satisfied that the President had absolutely given up all intention of coming to an agreement with the Senators who had been making the contest for an unlimited court review, and, in stating his object, he said that he had parted from them finally, naming Senators KNOX, FORAKER, and SPOONER as the Senators who had made the arguments in the Senate to sustain that view, and he used, as nearly as I can recollect, the language given in my statement repeated by Mr. TILLMAN. The conversation included the understanding which he had that day reached with Senators LONG and ALLISON, the fact that not over one-third the Republican Senators could be relied on to vote for the limited court review, and that it was vital that the support of nearly all the Democrats should be obtained.

When an hour later I visited Mr. TILLMAN and told him my mission from the President, I found him distrustful and suspicious. He questioned me closely as to what the President had said, and I related to him as accurately as I could the statement made by the President to me, and I convinced him that the President had ceased to hope for compromise with the Senators named and the other advocates of an unlimited court review. When satisfied that this was the case, he readily consented to cooperate with the President, and said that he would see Senator BAILEY and report to me the result, which he did, saying there would be perfect accord upon the limitation of the right of review if carried forward in connection with a limitation of the right to issue ex parte injunctions.

The conferences thus begun were, on the 15th, at my suggestion, transferred to Attorney-General Moody, and at once resulted in an understanding that the effort should be made to limit the right of court review, as stated in the Long amendment and in the paper drawn up on April 16 by Mr. Moody and later perfected by Messrs. Moody, TILLMAN and BAILEY. Was it not natural and essential that the President should have satisfied me that he had finally separated upon the question of the court review from the Senators who were the principal opponents of any limitation of that review, which they believed would be unconstitutional, and that I should have repeated his statements to Mr. TILLMAN? Is it possible that I went directly that night to Senator TILLMAN at the Colonial Hotel and poured into his ears a deliberate and unqualified falsehood?

Consider next the statement which the President says he thinks he made instead of the one narrated by me. Senator FORAKER, he says, was not mentioned. I am quite sure he is mistaken. Senators KNOX and SPOONER, he says, were mentioned, but that all that was said about them was, as to Senator KNOX, that the President did not agree with a portion of his proposed amendment, but that he thought he had made a strong argument for asserting affirmatively the jurisdiction or authority of the court, and as to Senator SPOONER, that his name was only mentioned by him to express a cordial approval of Senator SPOONER'S amendment.

This Spooner amendment was not offered in the Senate until May 10, but I learn that it had been in existence and shown to the President—whether as early as March 31 does not appear. But this is certain, that if the President had on that night told me that he cordially approved of it, and I had so reported to Mr. TILLMAN, there would have ensued no conferences looking to cooperation; therefore, the President, as to that amendment, had in mind a conversation at some other time or with some other person.

It should also be borne in mind that the report I made to Mr. TILLMAN of the President's conversation is comparatively harmless and inoffensive. Here it is:

"He said that he had been much troubled by the advocacy of an unlimited court review by some of the lawyers of the Senate, naming Senators KNOX, SPOONER, and FORAKER as trying to injure or defeat the bill by ingenious constitutional arguments, but that he had come to a complete disagreement with them."

What is there in the above words that is untrue or should give grave offense to the Senators named? They were the great constitutional lawyers of the Senate making ingenious arguments against any limitation of court review, and they were troublesome and likely to be troublesome in any attempt to carry the Long-Moody limitation through the Senate by the votes of 25 or more Democrats and 20 or less Republican Senators. What harm was there in the President's saying that he had come to a final disagreement with them on the day when he had held a White House conference with a view to uniting Democratic and Republican forces in carrying a limitation of court review then and there agreed upon? He could say it in or out of their presence without giving offense to them. Nor was it a very strong expression to say that they were trying to injure or defeat the bill by ingenious constitutional arguments. It did not mean that they were trying to defeat the bill if it could be amended to meet their views. Mr. KNOX had declared it to be unconstitutional unless amended, and that was the general position of the opponents of limited court review which led the President on that day to conclude it would be best to expressly grant the jurisdiction to review, but to rigidly limit it to the two objects named. The only harm that I can see that has come in the whole business was the abandonment of any attempt to carry that limitation of the review without any previous notice to Senators TILLMAN and BAILEY.

On the whole, perhaps I ought to consider myself fortunate. If the old imperialist days had been fully revived at the White House, one whom I considered the best of friends—Senator LODGE—upon demand would have cut off my head and taken it to President Roosevelt on a charger, and I should have spoken no more. Now, at least, I have left to me the power of speech. But I shall never use it again as a missionary from President Roosevelt to the Democratic party.

Sincerely, yours,

WM. E. CHANDLER.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, since I had the article from the Chicago Tribune of yesterday read from the clerk's desk my attention has been called to substantially the same kind of a slander in the New York Tribune of to-day. I suppose it was deemed proper to send it to Chicago a day in advance, so that the calumnies would reach Washington on the same day. I will say, and I say it upon the statement of more than one reputable newspaper correspondent in the gallery—and, as a rule, they are as honorable as are the Senators on this floor—that the two chief cuckoos among the correspondents are those of the Chicago Tribune and the New York Tribune. Therefore it seems to me conclusive that this slander proceeded from the White House. I hope, for the honor of my country, that it did not proceed from the President himself. But if he be a man of a high sense of honor he will see to it that Senators are not slandered by his subordinates.

The miserable wretch who communicated to these newspapers and who sought through them to communicate to the country this slander upon me, in order that the public may discuss it rather than the other issues which have been raised—if the President is fit for his high office—will pay for it with his position; and if the man who did it holds his place, evidently he did it with the approval of his chief.

Mr. NELSON. What is the question pending before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] obtained the floor before the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] rose to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. DANIEL. After the words "except to its," in line 4, page 1, of the Culberson amendment, I move to insert the following words:

Actual and bona fide officers, directors, attorneys.

If those words are there inserted, a consequential amendment will be necessary in lines 5 and 6, to strike out the words "to its actual and bona fide attorneys." The effect of this amendment is simply to treat the attorneys of a railroad company like their other agents and employees, and to permit the company to accord to them and to their immediate families free passes in identically the same manner that they will be permitted to accord them to their other agents and employees.

I thought at the time the original Culberson amendment was adopted that it was erroneous in qualifying the term "attorneys" with the word "exclusive," first, because the word "exclusive" would require an interpretation about which there might be difference of opinion, and, second, because it was in itself without a sufficient substantial basis. Like others who had similar views, I sustained the Culberson amendment, informing its author of my objection, and relying on the assured opportunity later to seek the change now asked.

In the great cities of the country—Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York, for instance—the attorneys of great corporations are somewhat like the attorney-general of a State or of the country. They are so occupied in their offices that they have neither the opportunity nor the motive to desire private employment. But in the towns and villages of my own State, and south of us, west of us, and in many of the towns and villages of the more populous States, the attorney of a railroad company has to associate with railroad employments a general practice, and it would be unwise to say that the railroad company could not grant to him a free pass because, in order to eke out his salary and to make a respectable living, he is taking cases in the courts for the people.

I hope that this amendment will be satisfactory, and will say, as other Senators have already said, that I am in receipt of a voluminous correspondence, by letter and telegram, on this subject and its connate topics of free passes to be accorded to employees. I will not read any of these communications, but they come from all directions. They are accredited by the most respectable names. They represent interests which ought to be regarded, for what is asked is right in itself.

In restraining railroad companies from the general system of free passes to men in the public service and others there is no rationale in requiring them not to use their own property in ways that enable them to get better service and perhaps a moderated or cheaper service from the attorneys and agents whom they employ.

Mr. President, especially is this applicable to the families of railroad employees. There are in the State of Virginia, which is doubtless like other States in this respect, railroad shops at various points to which workingmen are called from time to time. Very often, too, other artisans have to move from one city to another. If the railroad company were to pay their expenses it would be proper, but as they can accord them free transportation it is proper. Sometimes the family is living in one city and the artisan in another. It tends to the respectability and to the decency of life and to all good ends of society to facilitate these communications between the artisan and his household.

I do not think, sir, that we should be prudish in dealing with this subject. There are substantial equities and sound public policies and many individual accommodations about it which commend themselves, in my humble opinion, to reasonable and just minds.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to know the parliamentary status, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Did the Senator from Virginia propose an amendment?

Mr. DANIEL. The clerks took down the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment which the Senator from Virginia proposes to the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. DANIEL. Strike out the word "officers" in the fourth line and insert "actual and bona fide officers, directors, attorneys."

The SECRETARY. Before the word "officers" insert the words "actual and bona fide."

Mr. DANIEL. That is correct.

The SECRETARY. After the word "officers" insert the words "directors, attorneys."

Mr. DANIEL. That is correct.

Mr. TILLMAN. Let the Secretary again read it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Before the word "officers," in line 4 of the amendment, insert the words "actual and bona fide," and after the word "officers" insert the words "directors, attorneys;" so that it will read:

Actual and bona fide officers, directors, attorneys, agents, and employees, and members of their immediate families.

And after "families" strike out "to its actual and bona fide attorneys" and insert in lieu "and physicians and surgeons."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I suppose it will be in order now to dispose of the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is first in order.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. And then another amendment will be in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to hear the amendment read as it will read when amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. As amended the amendment would read:

That no carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall hereafter, directly or indirectly, issue or give any interstate free ticket, free pass, or free transportation for passengers except to its actual and bona fide officers, directors, attorneys, agents, and employees and members of their immediate families and physicians and surgeons, to ministers of religion, and inmates of hospitals and eleemosynary and charitable institutions, and to indigent and destitute persons, etc.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will not be adopted. It is too broad, and practically covers almost everything and everybody that can be drummed up. For instance, the word "agents" would embrace a lobbyist, while if you would put the word "station" in front of it to describe it you could then limit it to those who are employed by the railroad to look after its business at the depot. The word "officers" is broad enough, and I do not see any use in the world to put "bona fide" there any more than I do to put the words "bona fide" in the amendment before "attorneys." The Senate has already adopted once in regard to attorneys the words "exclusively employed," so as to limit the issuance of passes to the regular attorneys, those who are employed and who do no other work except for the railroad. One of the curses of this free-pass system is that it is taken advantage of, and every lawyer anywhere within the purview of the railroad business or in its territory who is willing to accept a pass, if you will give him one, that allows him to go where he chooses and when he pleases, and when he may have no other connection with the road than to act as its intermediary in the town in which he lives, or to become a lobbyist, if necessary, at the State capital when the legislature meets, may come under this provision.

Therefore I hope if the Senate is going to do anything really honest in this business, and not a mere pretense, it will adopt an amendment which will limit the attorneys to those exclusively in the employ of the railroad, as we have already done once, and will put the word "station" before the word "agents," so as to keep out the designation, in writing, of Mr. John Smith as the agent of the Pennsylvania Railway, for instance, and let him go anywhere he pleases or wherever he is sent to do the dirty work of the road. We want to give the railroad men actually in the employ of the road every convenience and facility for going about the country that they may need or require, and their families also, but we ought not to make this provision so broad that it will actually be a laughingstock and a farce in the eyes of the country.

Then if we will incorporate a provision which was offered the other day by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] making it a penalty or a crime or a misdemeanor—I do not know what was the exact word—"unlawful," I believe—for any officer of the United States to accept these passes we will have gone as far as legislation can go to stop this abuse.

Mr. DANIEL. That is already in the amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. When did it get there?

Mr. DANIEL. "Any carrier violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor."

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not talking about the carrier. We do not want to punish the poor carrier. We want to punish the man who goes to the carrier and gets a pass and rides on the pass when it is sent to him.

Mr. DANIEL. We want to put that in.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope it will be put in.

We are already tangled up here, and I hope the Senator from Virginia will withdraw the amendment and let the Senator from Texas accept an amendment and then try to get through with this matter and go on. We have got to vote down something in order to vote in anything, and I ask that the amendment of the Senator from Virginia be laid on the table.

Mr. DANIEL. I think that is a very unjust way——

Mr. TILLMAN. Or let us vote on it, then.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not intend that you shall misrepresent it in my opinion and sit still.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator has already spoken and can not speak any more.

Mr. DANIEL. I can not allow a passionate denunciation of it to be made without making a reply to it. The Senator always wants people to sit down when he wants to make a speech.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will retain the floor and will retain my temper, which the Senator from Virginia seems not to be able to do just now.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not wish to be treated in this rough fashion by you or anybody else.

Mr. TILLMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon, if I have done anything that really needs it. I am not conscious of any purpose of that sort.

Mr. DANIEL. Your manner is very rough and insulting to gentlemen debating an amendment with you.

Mr. TILLMAN. As I said, it was not my purpose. I know I am a rude man, but it was unintentional. I will retain the floor so that the Senator may speak, because he can not speak otherwise, under the rules.

Mr. DANIEL. I wish to make a brief answer to the extravagant statement of the Senator from South Carolina. He says my insertion of the word "attorneys" here makes this a laughingstock.

Mr. TILLMAN. The word "attorneys" was already in.

Mr. DANIEL. I know the word "attorneys" was already in, but I transpose it so as to include their families, and I consider that the attorneys of this country are just as reputable a class of men as other railroad employees. It is so in my State. The Senator can speak for his own.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have not said anything against attorneys.

Mr. DANIEL. You say it will make a laughingstock to permit their families to accept free tickets. I do not think so, and consider it an absurd notion.

Mr. TILLMAN. If you put it so that it will apply to attorneys who are engaged exclusively in the employ of the road by actual employment and no others, I will agree to it. But if you are going to make it apply to every lawyer in the State of Virginia, or any other State, who is given a pass and is entitled to travel free on the road and get no other compensation for his work or pretense of work except his pass, I object to it.

Mr. DANIEL. Is the Senator objecting to putting in there "bona fide attorneys?"

Mr. TILLMAN. Bona fide means nothing.

Mr. DANIEL. I think it does mean something. That is just the difference between the Senator and myself. It does not mean a disguise, but a thing done specifically for an honest reason. That is what it means in my comprehension, whatever the Senator may conceive about it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I know a little Latin, and I know it means in good faith.

Mr. DANIEL. That is what it means.

Mr. TILLMAN. An attorney who is employed by the railroad in good faith will act in perfect good faith, but when the railroad company says I will give you a pass for what you do, and with no other compensation involved except a pass, he is not an attorney bona fide.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I wish to explain what was my motive in offering the amendment. At the court-houses and in the small towns where railroads have to have attorneys those attorneys can not afford to abandon their other practice. Where a railroad employs an attorney, I think it generally tries to get about the best man that it can. That has been my observation in my own part of the country, but these gentlemen can not get large pay, because the railroad practice is not large enough. They are obliged to pursue their profession in the courts.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Can not the railroad pay in money whenever a lawyer is needed at a given place, and then when the lawyer wants to ride around can he not pay for his transportation the same as anybody else?

Mr. DANIEL. Of course he can.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then why give him a pass?

Mr. DANIEL. Because the pass will be regarded as part of the compensation, and it is cheaper to both parties. That is the reason. Why do you not say the same about the other railroad men?

Mr. TILLMAN. The other railroad men are running the railroad and this man is running something else.

Mr. DANIEL. The other man very often represents the railroad in the business of the carrier, going to and fro from station to station. I do not consider that every lawyer railroad attorney of this kind, whether exclusively in its service or not, is a suspicious character.

Mr. TILLMAN. I did not say so.

Mr. DANIEL. I know you did not. I think there is no reason for making so much to do about a small thing. It is an accommodation to them, and it is one where there is no public policy to be subserved in attempting to sit upon them and discriminate between them and other railroad employees.

I consider the legal profession an honorable and a noble one, and the men who follow it just as honest in the mass as any other large body of men, and I do not like to see it discriminated against. It is not just. Most of the young lawyers in our State are young gentlemen who have been educated at schools and colleges. Many of them have had to borrow money to get an education. If one of them is selected as the attorney of a railroad in a small town, I do not see that he or his family should be specially pointed at by Congress and told, "You shall not have a free pass on this railroad, but the detectives and all the other agents of the railroad, and their families, may have free passes."

I am simply speaking against a piece of invidiousness. It is not called for nor demanded by any sound and reasonable public policy. There are some people who raise a great hue and cry by denouncing lawyers and politicians. There are honest lawyers and honest politicians; and the mass of both are honest, according to my best judgment and experience in life, although sorry characters are found in all callings, trades, and professions. I do not like to see the profession of the bar invidiously characterized and discriminated against.

Mr. FORAKER. May I ask the Senator from Virginia what——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. FORAKER. The inquiry I make is as to the modification of the amendment by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. DANIEL. It is a very slight modification, and one that only affects partially the attorneys, and permits their families to be treated as the families of others in the service of the railroad company.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand they are already in the bill.

Mr. DANIEL. The term "attorney" is already in the bill; and while the officers, agents, and employees of a railroad company, other than attorneys, are permitted to have the courtesy of a railroad pass from the company, the attorney's family is excluded.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand that.

Mr. DANIEL. That is all.

Mr. FORAKER. But I want to know in what way the Senator seeks to accomplish his purpose by inserting the word "attorneys" at some point.

Mr. DANIEL. To strike out the words in the fifth line "to its actual and bona fide attorneys," those words being already in the amendment, and insert after the words "except to its," in line 4, the words "actual and bona fide officers, directors, attorneys," so as to read:

Actual and bona fide officers, directors, attorneys, agents, and employees and members of their immediate families.

Then, after that comes the other changes. This is an amendment which I offered to the Culberson amendment. I will send that amendment to the Senator, that he may read it.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Virginia wishes to put in the word "directors" there, as though a director was not an officer of the road, and I see no use for it in the world. The Senate has already, in two instances, I think, certainly in one, incorporated in this free-pass paragraph the words "exclusively in its employ" after the word "attorney." As I said, I can not offer the changes which I suggest as a substitute for the proposed change of the Senator from Virginia. I wanted to put in, after the word "officers," the word "station," so that it will read, "its officers and station agents;" and then after the word "attorneys," in line 5, put in the words "exclusively in its employ" and strike out "its actual and bona fide."

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the fact that the term "station agent" would prevent the companies from granting passes to their traveling agents and other passenger agents——

Mr. TILLMAN. They are officers.

Mr. CULBERSON. Freight agents and claim agents, and a good many others.

Mr. TILLMAN. I said a while ago that the word "agent" embraces all creation, because all you have got to do is to write and say "I hereby appoint John Smith agent of the Southern Railway," for instance, and he will become eligible to a pass under this amendment, but you can not hedge them off everywhere, and I shall cease trying. I am endeavoring to stop this granting of passes to attorneys who may be appointed bona fide, and who will take nothing else as their compensation except the riding on a road free and giving their families passes.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do.

Mr. MALLORY. I suggest it will meet the Senator's suggestion if he strikes out the word "agent" entirely. An employee is an agent really, and the term "employee" is broad enough.

Mr. TILLMAN. "Employee" is broad enough. It is so broad it would almost cover John Smith being appointed to do something.

Mr. MALLORY. If you say "station agent," you are going to make it entirely too limited, but strike out "agent" entirely——

Mr. TILLMAN. Can we agree to strike out "agent" then, and leave "employee," so that it reads "officers and employees?"

Mr. CULBERSON. The amendment of the Senator from Virginia is pending.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was trying to get an agreement with the Senator from Virginia so that something would be done in order to expedite the business and get an end some time to agree upon something that we would agree on, and go along with the bill.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TILLMAN. I yield the floor entirely.

Mr. FRYE. I do not wish the Senator to yield it. I think the Senator from South Carolina is generally right and has lots of common sense, but I think he is entirely mistaken when he wishes to add there the words "exclusively employed." The attorneys who are exclusively employed by railroad corporations receive enormous salaries and can afford to pay their fare without the slightest pecuniary loss, and they have no necessity to travel on the road.

The local attorneys are the attorneys who are compelled to travel over the road to do the business of the road. It is when a disaster occurs that immediately the local attorneys nearest the place of the disaster are ordered to go and examine into the matter, to examine witnesses, and all that sort of thing. They are the men who are really compelled to travel on the road, while the exclusively employed are not compelled to travel on the road at all.

Mr. TILLMAN. Would it not be an easy matter for such an attorney as that to keep his accounts? Let him, in his contract with the railroad, have it understood, "I will buy my transportation the same as any other man whenever I am on your busines, but when I go to settle I will just send you in the memorandum showing how much I paid." He could get the money back every month if he would ask the railroad every month. It is the promiscuous and general use of passes by lawyers who do not do anything else that I am trying to stop.

Mr. FRYE. I never heard of a local attorney yet who was employed as an attorney simply for a pass. I never heard of such a thing in New England. I do not know how it is elsewhere.

Mr. TILLMAN. Your lawyers are richer than some of ours.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the act of 1887 contained a prohibition against the issue of passes. That is, I understand, still the law. It is true it has been a dead letter. I never have known a railroad company that entirely refrained from issuing passes. Yet the law is sufficiently explicit, I believe, if it was enforced.

There is some complaint about railroads issuing passes, and the principal complaint is that they issue passes to men in public life, to members of the National Legislature and of State legislatures, to judges, and officials who have to do with the administration of State affairs. I think if we will adopt the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], which I understand is not before the Senate just yet——

Mr. BACON. No; I propose to offer it as soon as the present amendment is disposed of.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Georgia has given notice of it. I want to read it:

That no carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall hereafter, directly or indirectly, issue or give any interstate free ticket, free pass, or free transportation or passage to any Senator of the United States or Representative in Congress or to any justice or judge of the courts of the United States or to any officer of either of the Executive Departments of the United States. Any such carrier violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall for each offense pay to the United States a penalty of not less than $100 nor more than $2,000.

Mr. President, that is a good amendment, provided you follow it with a penalty that any man who accepts or receives from the railroad a pass shall also be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to say to the Senator from Colorado that when this debate was opened on the question of free passes I introduced such an amendment as the Senator has in his mind, and it was voted down. I intend, however, at the proper time to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Texas so that a penalty may be imposed upon such person accepting free transportation.

Mr. TELLER. That is the only way you will prohibit the use of passes, if it is desirable to prohibit them. I do not myself believe that the evil is as great as is complained of, but I am quite willing to adopt such a provision, because I have believed that the act of 1887 prohibited Senators and Members from receiving passes from railroads; and that certainly is the law, although there is no penalty attached, of course, for so doing.

I do not believe it is worth while for us to waste time here to determine whether a railroad company shall give to one of its employees a pass, or whether the company will transport the employee's wife or son or daughter if they see fit; nor do I believe it is necessary to say they shall not give a free pass to anybody unless a pauper or an invalid, or unless an earthquake or something of that kind has happened. I think you can best deal with this subject simply by saying that men in public life shall not accept these favors from the railroads, and stop right there. I do not know by what authority you propose to say that a railroad company shall not give to an officer of another railroad company free transportation, which has been the custom and usage ever since railroads were built in this country.

Mr. President, I do not think this will be any more effective than the law now on the statute books—not a particle. You have here in some way to make your law effective, either by the prosecution of the railroad companies when they violate it, or by imposing a penalty upon parties who receive passes and assist the railroads in this violation. We have wasted a good deal of time over it; and when you get through with a specific declaration such as is made by the Senator from Texas you will find that there are some cases that are just as desirable where passes should be issued, whether it is a matter of charity or whatever it may be.

It does seem to me rather a small business for us to meet a complaint which is very general, that we are the people who ought not to have passes, when we do not include ourselves in that category specifically and directly say it, so that the people may know we are prohibited actually from receiving passes.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say a word about these lawyers. I know something upon that question. I have never heard of anyone in my part of the country who had agreed to act for a railroad company for the sake of a pass, or any lawyer that the railroad company would for a moment have in their employment on such terms. You propose to use the word "exclusively." I know a case where a gentleman in the practice of the law had an annual salary of $10,000 from the railroad company and did perhaps $40,000 of railroad business outside, so that his income ran up to at least $50,000 for many years. He would not have accepted that position, of course, if he had been exclusively confined to the business of the company. He was at the same time the director of a railroad, the president of a railroad, and the general counsel for that section of the country. It was one of the transcontinental roads.

I think it is a mistake to suppose that the railroad companies are employing young men in this way and just simply paying them by giving them passes and by nothing else. They may pay them, say, $2,500 or $1,500 or $2,000. I speak with some knowledge, for I have myself employed such men, but I never did employ any attorney on behalf of any railroad I was connected with for a pass. I think the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] is right when he says that that is not the method.

I should like to see some efficient provision here. I do not believe it is necessary to specify just what the railroad company shall do and shall not do to the extent that is done in all these amendments, unless it is the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, if it were not for the fact that the railroad men of my State have asked me to oppose this amendment I would not take up the time of the Senate now, after this question has been worn out, to say even a word with respect to it. I have received, in common with other Senators, numerous telegrams on this subject. This morning I received the following telegram:

EVERETT, WASH., May 15, 1906.

Hon. S. H. PILES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

All railroad men in State of Washington wish you to oppose antipass amendment railway rate bill.

GEO. DOLPH,
Secretary Division 456, O. R. C.

I take it, therefore, that those who are engaged in operating the railroads in that State oppose this amendment absolutely. I have understood that there are a number of railroad men who are not engaged in the railroad service who will be affected by this proposed law. There are men, I understand, who represent the Order of Railway Conductors and the Order of Railway Trainmen, who travel all over the country in the interest of their order and in the betterment, as they take it, of the railway service of the country. Those men not being in the employ of the railroad companies would not, of course, under this bill be entitled to the free transportation which they have enjoyed for a great many years, and which they think they are entitled to receive, as their work is in aid of and in betterment of the railway service of the country.

So far as I am personally concerned, Mr. President, I am one of those who believe that the public official should not ride upon free transportation; but that is a matter solely for every man to determine for himself. If the people whom he represents are opposed to his riding upon free transportation, I think he should bow to the will of the people of his State; but, on the other hand, I can see no harm that can result from these railroad men, who travel over the country and who are not in the employ of the railway companies, receiving free transportation.

I can readily understand how no great harm could be done to the public by a young man turning his face westward to carve out a fortune in that great country for himself receiving, at the hand of some officer of the railroad company who is a friend of his, free transportation to the West, or of a young man or an old man, so far as that is concerned. who may have been unfortunate receiving free transportation from the West to his old home in the East.

These are questions, it seems to me, Mr. President, which are already regulated by law. If this bill shall be enacted into law, it will, in my judgment, vest in the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to regulate any abuses that may arise by reason of railway companies issuing free transportation. Section 4 of this bill provides:

That section 15 of said act be amended so as to read as follows:
"SEC. 15. That the Commission is authorized and empowered, and it shall be its duty, whenever, after full hearing upon a complaint made as provided in section 13 of this act, or upon complaint of any common carrier, it shall be of the opinion that any of the rates, or charges whatsoever, demanded, charged, or collected by any common carrier or carriers, subject to the provisions of this act, for the transportation of persons or property as defined in the first section of this act, or that any regulations or practices whatsoever of such carrier or carriers affecting such rates, are unjust or unreasonable, or unjustly discriminatory, or unduly preferential or prejudicial, or otherwise in violation of any of the provisions of this act, to determine and prescribe what will, in its judgment, be the just and reasonable rate or rates, charge or charges, to be thereafter observed in such case as the maximum to be charged; and what regulation or practice in respect to such transportation is just, fair, and reasonable to be thereafter followed; and to make an order that the carrier shall cease and desist from such violation, to the extent to which the Commission find the same to exist, and shall not thereafter publish, demand, or collect any rate or charge for such transportation in excess of the maximum rate or charge so prescribed, and shall conform to the regulation or practice so prescribed.

Therefore, Mr. President, if the Interstate Commerce Commission shall find under this proposed law that the railway companies of the country are abusing this pass privilege or extending it beyond their officers, agents, and employees and their families and those who are justly entitled to receive this transportation, it will be within the power of that Commission, if it proposes to perform its duty, to compel the railway company to desist from the practice which it has been in the habit of employing in the promiscuous issuance of passes. It seems to me, therefore, sir, that this bill as it now stands, if it be enacted into law and shall be honestly enforced, will give to the railroad commission of this country the power to see that the people of this country are not injured by the free and indiscriminate issuance of free transportation by the railroad companies of the country.

Mr. President, I do not like to read in any law that the railroad people of this country may have the right to issue transportation to the poor and unfortunate. I take it for granted, Mr. President, that humanity would dictate to the railroads of this country, and should dictate to this Senate, the right of any man or of any set of men or of any transportation company to give the poor and the unfortunate free transportation to any section of this country. I do not think it is becoming in this legislative body to hold that class of people up to public contempt or public ridicule, as the case may be, in a law of this character.

I have confidence in the courts of my country; I have confidence in the Commission which the President will appoint to enforce and carry out the provisions of this law, and, Mr. President, if section 4 is honestly complied with the free transportation of this country will be relegated to the past so far as it has been abused, and no man who occupies a position as a public official will have a pass if the railroad commission shall say that the issuance of such passes is a practice which the railroad company should not indulge in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to——

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President——

Mr. FRYE. Can we not have a vote, Mr. President?

Mr. McLAURIN. Not yet, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, it were well for the Senate to keep in mind the extent of the power of Congress to remedy this evil, if it be an evil. I do not believe, and I do not think it is the opinion of any other Senator here, that it is within the power of Congress to prohibit the use of free transportation within the confines of any State in the Union. Congress can only regulate interstate transportation of passengers or freight.

Again, I do not believe it is within the power of Congress to prescribe the contracts that may be made by a railroad with its employees, so that if an attorney of a railroad sees proper to make a contract with the railroad company, and the railroad company agrees to such a contract, it can be provided as one of the terms of his compensation that there shall be free transportation over that railroad, at least, given to the attorney for himself and for his family. So it is with other employees of the railroad company.

The evil which has been suggested by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] can not be avoided or remedied by any enactment of Congress, because if the railroad company sees proper, within any State in the Union, to issue its pass, good only in the State, Congress has no power to prevent travel within a State on free passes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]?

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from South Carolina is perfectly well aware of the legal question which the Senator from Mississippi raises; and the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], as printed, only applies to passes issued in interstate commerce.

Mr. McLAURIN. I understand that; but the Senator from South Carolina made the objection that the railroad company would issue passes to its attorneys and that those attorneys would go about over the State doing the work—I believe he used the words "dirty work," though I am not sure of that—of the railroad company. That can not be prohibited by any legislation of Congress. The only thing that Congress can do, the only power of Congress, is to prevent the railroad company granting permission to a man to ride on its road free from one State or Territory to another State or Territory. It can not say whether they shall issue free passes or not. It can only make it a penal offense to transport passengers from one State or Territory to another State or Territory.

I have prepared an amendment, which has been printed and, I presume, is on the desks of Senators, which I intended to offer yesterday evening; and I think that amendment is as far as we should go. When the time comes that I can offer it—if such a time shall come—as a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas, I shall offer it as such substitute. I think in a few words it covers the entire case. It reads:

That no free interstate pass shall be issued by any interstate common carrier of passengers to any officer of the United States, including executive, legislative, and judicial officers.

When you begin to select those who should be exempted from the operations of a provision prohibiting the granting of free passes or free transportation it is a difficult matter to say who should be exempted from its operation.

It seems to me that all of the evil of the free-pass system can be remedied by preventng officers of the legislative, executive, or judicial departments from riding on free passes. Then, if the railway companies see proper to issue free passes to other people, I do not think they will issue them in sufficient abundance to affect materially or appreciably the transportation of passengers throughout the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. McLAURIN. With pleasure.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have the Senator's amendment before me, and I ask him if he thinks that it would prevent the issuance of passes to Members of Congress?

Mr. McLAURIN. Surely it would, because it expressly states "including executive, legislative, and judicial officers," and Members of Congress are legislative officers of the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But if the Senator will recall, they have been decided not to be officers of the United States.

Mr. McLAURIN. I do not recall anything of that kind. If that has been decided, it has not come to my reading.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It has been so decided. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that, in order to make his amendment effective, I think he should include the words "Members of the Congress of the United States."

Mr. McLAURIN. I am willing to do that, if such a decision has been made; but will the Senator from Wyoming refer me to a decision which has been made by the Supreme Court of the United States that Senators and Representatives are not officers of the United States?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I can not refer the Senator from Mississippi at the moment to the particular decision; but it has been so decided.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that not only has it been so decided by the courts, but it has been solemnly decided by the Senate when articles of impeachment were presented against a Senator, and the Senate decided that he was not amenable to the process of impeachment because he was not an officer of the United States.

Mr. McLAURIN. In the case of a Senator it is provided that he may be removed by a two-thirds vote of the Senate—may be expelled. There is an express provision in the Constitution for that.

Mr. BACON. That is not the point at all, if the Senator will pardon me. The question raised is whether or not a Senator is an officer of the United States. I am calling the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to the fact that, aside from the decision of the courts, the Senate itself has decided in the case of Blount, who was impeached while he was a United States Senator, that he was not impeachable because he was not an officer of the United States.

Mr. McLAURIN. Impeached for what?

Mr. BACON. For the offenses charged—disloyalty and things of that kind. The point in controversy does not relate at all to the question of whether he was punishable by expulsion. I am simply calling the attention of the Senator to the fact that an officer of the United States only is impeachable, and that the Senate of the United States decided that Blount could not be impeached because, however guilty he might have been of the charges, he was not an officer of the United States.

Mr. McLAURIN. There being an express provision, Mr. President, for the Senate dealing with a Senator by expulsion, which requires exactly the same number of votes as it does to impeach an officer, it is very natural that that process should be used in order to get rid of a United States Senator. I do not see that any decision on that subject could be anything further than obiter dictum if the Senate were to decide in a case of impeachment that he was not impeachable because he was a Senator; but will the Senator now refer me to any decision of the Supreme Court of the United States holding that a Senator or Representative is not an officer of the United States?

Mr. BACON. I have not the memorandum here, but I do not think there is any possible doubt about the legal proposition.

Mr. McLAURIN. I must say, if there is such a decision as that, it has never come within my observation.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. McLAURIN. With pleasure.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I did not interrupt the Senator with a view of entering into a discussion, but only to call his attention to what I understand the fact to be—that the courts have decided, not only once but often, that members of the Senate are not officers of the United States. The last time the question rose was in this Chamber at this very session, when, in a bill coming over from the House, it was provided that if certain information were given out and acted upon by officers of the United States they should be subject to a penalty. The Judiciary Committees of the two branches of Congress finding, upon investigation, that that would not reach some officers whom it was intended to reach, to wit, Members of Congress, inserted a provision applying that law to Members of Congress. They did so, after a thorough investigation of the matter, and finding the decision to be, as has been correctly stated by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], that Senators were not officers of the United States.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I can understand how committees of the Senate and committees of the House, and how Congress, out of an abundance of caution, should put in certain words lest they might not embrace all that it was intended and desired by Congress to embrace.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator misunderstands me. I simply say that the committees inserted that provision after they had found from the decisions of the courts that Members of Congress were not officers of the United States.

Mr. McLAURIN. Will the Senator from Wyoming call my attention to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, because there is a great deal of diversity of opinion between the decisions of different courts, and I should like to have the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, for I must admit that up to this time I have never yet seen one, and I have never yet had one referred to me.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will be pleased to furnish one to the Senator. Of course, I can not do it by citation at the present moment.

Mr. McLAURIN. I will state to the Senator from Wyoming, if he desires to make it beyond question, beyond peradventure, that I have no objection to the insertion of the words which he would suggest. What are those words?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say to the Senator that I have no suggestion to make as to what he shall do with his amendment. I only made the suggestion out of deference to himself, because I am opposed to all legislation upon this bill of this character. I have no suggestion to make.

Mr. McLAURIN. Surely, if the Senator from Wyoming is opposed to it, he would like to take the least dose of it possible.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not at all; but if the Senator wants to make the legislation effective, I would be glad to have him make it effective in those quarters where there is the most complaint, and not have an amendment agreed to that would not reach the very people whom he seeks to reach.

Mr. McLAURIN. I surely understand when you speak of "legislative officers" that Senators and Representatives are legislative officers, and I surely desire—and the desire is shown by that—to reach Senators and Representatives, and preclude them from traveling on free passes. Congress is the Congress of the United States, and I can not understand how its members, if officers at all, are not officers of the United States. If officers, they are legislative officers, and surely they are not legislative officers of any State. They can not legislate for any State. They must legislate for the United States.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. If the Senator will turn to his own amendment—there are only three lines of it—it reads:

That no free interstate pass shall be issued by any interstate common carrier of passengers to any officer of the United States, including executive, legislative, and judicial officers.

If he will add after the word "officers," the words "and members of Congress," that will cover it.

Mr. McLAURIN. I am willing to do that.

Mr. CULBERSON. I rise to a point of order, and that is that the pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas is correct, and the Chair was about to call the attention of Senators to that fact.

Mr. McLAURIN. That is all true. That is the amendment to which I addressed myself, but I had the right surely to explain my reasons for objecting to it, and to state that I have an amendment, which I think is a better one, which I read to the Senate. I do not think that I was out of order.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, what I meant by the point of order was to call attention to the fact that the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Mississippi could not be amended now, as suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY].

Mr. McLAURIN. I have not offered it. We were just discussing how I would offer it.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand that; but the Senator from Georgia was suggesting that the Senator's substitute might be amended. I did not know but that in the confusion here it would be believed that the amendment of the Senator from Virginia has been disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] to the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BACON. I move to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas by striking out all after the word "passengers," at the end of the third line, and inserting in lieu thereof the words which I now send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1 of Mr. CULBERSON'S printed amendment, after the word "passengers," at the end of line 3, it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the amendment and insert:

to any Senator of the United States or Representative in Congress, or to any justice or judge of the courts of the United States, or to any officer of either of the Executive Departments of the United States. Any such carrier violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall for each offense pay to the United States a penalty of not less than $100 nor more than $2,000.

Mr. BACON. I ask now, Mr. President, that the amendment of the Senator from Texas may be read in full, as it will read if the amendment I have just proposed to it be adopted.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have been waiting here about two hours to get my little amendment in one way or another. Of course, I am not impatient about it at all, but I am taken off my feet almost every time I rise.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair knew of the Senator's desire and looked in his direction, but the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] rose first.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I appreciate the courtesy of the Chair thoroughly, but I want to suggest——

Mr. BACON. I am perfectly willing that the Senator should offer his amendment as soon as the amendment of the Senator from Texas, as it is proposed to be amended, is read.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have heard that amendment read six or seven times.

Mr. BACON. No; it has not been read as it will be if it is amended.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I know what it is. I simply want to offer a suggestion to the Senator from Georgia, if he will allow me to do so, and that is that he modify his amendment by extending the penalty imposed upon the carrier to the person accepting a pass.

Mr. BACON. I will do so, Mr. President, if the Senator will offer it at the proper time, and that is not until after the amendment of the Senator from Texas as it is proposed to be amended is read.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator from Georgia can accept it now, if there is no objection.

Mr. TILLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina will state his question of order.

Mr. TILLMAN. While I am on the floor, I want to make an appeal to Senators to do something in the way of voting. We are now at a deadlock, because, under the rules, we can not offer substitutes for an amendment to an amendment, and we can not amend an amendment to an amendment. We have got to that stage that if we only vote down something we can then vote in something. I beg Senators, in the interest of progress and to get to a final determination of this question, that we take some action. We have talked and talked, and there are three Senators on their feet now trying to get in and they can not. Why not let us do something?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] as it would stand by the addition of the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

The Secretary read as follows:

That no carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall hereafter directly or indirectly issue or give any interstate free ticket, free pass, or free transportation for passengers to any Senator of the United States or Representative in Congress, or to any justice or judge of the courts of the United States, or to any officer of either of the Executive Departments of the United States. Any such carrier violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall for each offense pay to the United States a penalty of not less than $100 nor more than $2,000.

Mr. BACON. I will accept the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, if he can make it fit in there.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I offer it not as an amendment, but as a modification.

Mr. BACON. No; I will not accept that.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. If it is in order to offer an amendment, I offer it in the following language—perhaps it will be accepted——

Mr. BACON. It is not in order as an amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will offer it as follows:

And any person specified in this provision who uses any such interstate free ticket, free pass, or free transportation shall be subject to a like penalty and fine.

Mr. BACON. I am perfectly willing to accept that, and will do so as an addition.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; as an addition.

Mr. BACON. Not as a modification; as an addition.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. As an addition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. McLAURIN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BACON. Let the amendment be read first.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be read as modified.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment it is proposed to add the following:

And any person specified in this provision who uses any such interstate free ticket, free pass, or free transportation shall be subject to a like penalty and fine.

Mr. BACON. I accept that as a part of my amendment, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], as modified, to the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair the "ayes" prevail, and the amendment, as modified, to the amendment is agreed to. The question now is on the amendment——

Mr. BACON. I did not hear what the Chair ruled.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair ruled that the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, as modified, to the amendment of the Senator from Texas, was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let us have the yeas and nays on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas as it has been amended.

Mr. CULBERSON. What I desire is the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 33, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Bacon	Dillingham	Hansbrough	Perkins
Berry	Dolliver	Hopkins	Piles
Burrows	Dryden	Kittredge	Rayner
Carmack	Elkins	Lodge	Smoot

Burton	Hale	Patterson

So Mr. BACON's amendment to the amendment of Mr. CULBERSON was rejected.

Mr. McCUMBER. As I understand, the substitute of the Senator from Texas is now subject to amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. McCUMBER. I offer an amendment. I move to add, after the word "inhabitants," in line 12, page 2 of the amendment, the following:

Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent such carrier from giving free or reduced transportation to laborers transported to any place for the purpose of supplying any demand for labor at such place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota proposes an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 2 of the printed amendment, after the word "inhabitants," in line 12, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent such carrier from giving free or reduced transportation to laborers transported to any place for the purpose of supplying any demand for labor at such place.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator from Texas object to having those words inserted?

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection to that particular amendment. It may be incorporated in the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas accepts the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move, after the word "persons," in line 8, to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1 of the printed amendment, after the word "persons," in line 8, it is proposed to insert:

Or destitute and homeless persons transported by charitable societies or hospitals, and the necessary agents employed in such transportation; and to inmates of the National Homes or State Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and of Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Homes, including those about to enter and those returning home after discharge, under arrangements with the boards of managers of said Homes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McLAURIN. As a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Texas, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, it is proposed to insert the following:

That no free interstate pass shall be issued by any interstate common carrier of passengers to any officer of the United States, including executive, legislative, and judicial officers, and Senators and Representatives in Congress.

The substitute was rejected.

Mr. BACON. I move to amend the amendment read, after the word "soldiers," by the insertion of the words "including Confederate soldiers." There are a great many of them who are very much in need of the privilege.

Mr. McLAURIN. If the Senator from Georgia will accept it, I would suggest that he put it "ex-Confederate soldiers."

Mr. BACON. There are at present no Confederate soldiers. They are all ex-Confederate soldiers.

Mr. McLAURIN. That is exactly what I know, and the purpose is to make sure of it. I think the Senator had better put it "ex-Confederate soldiers."

Mr. BACON. I have no objection. I modify my amendment to that extent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "soldiers," in line 7, it is proposed to insert "ex-Confederate soldiers."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Is the word "including" there? I am asking for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

And to inmates of the National Homes or State Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, ex-Confederate Soldiers, and Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Homes."

Mr. SPOONER. I will ask the Senator from Georgia, would that bear the construction, if adopted, that all Members of the House of Representatives and Senators who are ex-Confederate soldiers may have passes?

Mr. BACON. I think not; but if so, there are so very few of us left that it would not make any difference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas as amended.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to have the provision about soldiers read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read again by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. After the word "soldiers," in line 7, it is proposed to insert "ex-Confederate soldiers;" so that if amended it will read:

Or destitute and homeless persons transported by charitable societies or hospitals, and the necessary agents employed in such transportation; and to inmates of the National Homes or State Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, ex-Confederate soldiers, and of Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Homes, including those about to enter and those returning home after discharge, under arrangements with the boards of managers of said homes.

Mr. LODGE. As the amendment now stands it limits free or reduced passage to volunteer soldiers in National Homes, whereas it includes all ex-Confederate soldiers. It ought to include all soldiers, and not be confined to those who are going to or from Homes, Confederate or National. I think the law had better stand as it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas as amended.

Mr. MALLORY. I have an amendment I should like to offer. After the word "attorneys," in line 6, page 1, I move to insert "and their immediate families."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, after the word "attorneys," it is proposed to insert "and their immediate families."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Texas as amended.

Mr. SPOONER. Let it be reported. I have some curiosity to hear it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The Secretary read as follows:

That no carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall hereafter directly or indirectly issue or give any interstate free ticket, free pass, or free transportation for passengers except to its officers, agents, and employees and members of their immediate families, to its actual and bona fide attorneys and physicians and surgeons, to ministers of religion, and inmates of hospitals and eleemosynary and charitable institutions, and to indigent, destitute, and homeless persons, or destitute and homeless persons transported by charitable societies or hospitals, and the necessary agents employed in such transportation; and to inmates of the National Homes or State Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, ex-Confederate soldiers, and of Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Homes, including those about to enter and those returning home after discharge, under arrangements with the boards of managers of said homes. Any carrier violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall for each offense pay to the United States a penalty of not less than $100 nor more than $2,000: Provided, That this provision shall not be construed to prohibit the issue or interchange of passes for officers, agents, and employees and members of their immediate families, nor to owners and care takers of live stock when traveling with such stock or when going to point of shipment or returning from point of delivery, nor shall anything in this provision be deemed to prohibit any carrier from carrying passengers free on account of charity from and to places visited by general epidemic or pestilence or wholly or largely destroyed by fire, water, earthquakes, or other calamitous visitations with the object of providing succor, relief, and other assistance to the inhabitants: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent such carrier from giving free or reduced transportation to laborers transported to any place for the purpose of supplying any demand for labor at such place. Jurisdiction of offenses under this provision shall be the same as that provided for offenses in an act entitled "An act to further regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States," approved February 19, 1903, and any amendment thereof.

Mr. MALLORY. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the Secretary omitted to read the last amendment adopted, namely, the one I suggested, in line 6, after the word "attorneys," to insert "and their immediate families." It was adopted, and it ought to have been read by the Secretary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The record of the Secretary does not show that it was adopted.

Mr. MALLORY. I beg the Chair's pardon. I think the Senate will recognize the fact that it was adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "attorneys," in line 6, it is proposed to insert "and their immediate families."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be regarded as agreed to, in the absence of objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Texas as amended.

Mr. GALLINGER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand the question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when the name of Mr. MORGAN was called). The senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is paired with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. WARREN], and to state that he is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY].

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 49, as follows:

YEAS—23.

Alger	Clark, Wyo.	Gallinger	Platt
Allee	Crane	Kean	Scott
Ankeny	Cullom	Kittredge	Smoot
Beveridge	Dick	Lodge	Spooner
Burnham	Dillingham	Millard	Sutherland

So the Senate refused to lay on the table Mr. CULBERSON'S amendment as amended.

Mr. SCOTT. After the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY], which was adopted, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "and their immediate families" insert "and female nurses who served during the civil war."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If it is now in order, I wish to offer an amendment by way of a substitute for the entire amendment as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana proposes an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the matter intended to be proposed, insert the following:

That no carrier of interstate commerce shall hereafter directly or indirectly issue or by any device give free transportation except to the officers, agents, and employees, and members of their immediate families, actual and bona fide attorneys and physicians and surgeons of the carrier issuing the same, to ministers of religion and inmates of hospitals and eleemosynary and charitable institutions, and indigent persons: Provided, That said carrier of interstate commerce may, by arrangement with other carriers of interstate commerce, provide for free transportation of its officers, agents, attorneys, bona fide employees, physicians and surgeons and their families over the lines of such other carriers in connection with said free transportation over the lines of the carrier providing said free transportation. Any carrier violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall for each offense pay to the United States a penalty of not less than $100 or more than $2,000.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I desire to say only one word in explanation of the amendment which I have offered by way of a substitute. It is an even briefer form of the original substitute of the Senator from Texas, with the addition of interchangeable transportation for employees, officers, agents, attorneys, physicians, and surgeons. The reason for offering the amendment must be clear to the entire Senate. The amendment originally offered by the Senator from Texas has become so involved with numerous exceptions that the Senate can hardly understand what is excepted and what is not. I think it must be clear to the entire Senate that the original amendment offered by the Senator from Texas, and of which this is practically a copy with the addition of the interchangeable feature, will more completely meet the situation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senate has voted down the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] which involved depriving ourselves and other political officeholders, executive and judicial, of the right to receive passes from railroads. It then refused to lay upon the table a proposition which is so grotesque, as it has been amended, that it can not be read through without laughter, and which so extends the field of exceptions that practically passes may be issued to anybody who wants them. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana is an improvement on what we now have before us, but it seems to me the greatest improvement would be to leave the law as it is. The law now prohibits, under the head of discriminations, the issuance of passes, and it excepts certain classes from that provision. They are reasonable exceptions which meet everybody's view and permit the railroads to give passes to their employees and their families.

It seems to me it would be just as well to leave the present tested law as to adopt such an amendment as that now pending before us, where the exceptions have been heaped up until it has become perfectly valueless, it appears to me, for the purpose which it is proposed to fulfill.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I suppose an amendment is not in order to the substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. An amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana is not in order.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I simply give notice that when the bill reaches the Senate I shall propose an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas as modified.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FULTON. I ask if it would be in order to submit again the amendment that was offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN]? The amendment has been changed since that amendment was offered and rejected. I do not know whether it would now be in order. If it be in order and the Senator from Mississippi himself will not offer, I will offer it.

Mr. MCLAURIN. I was not paying attention, and I did not hear what the Senator from Oregon said.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator from Mississippi a few moments ago offered an amendment proposing to provide—

That no free interstate pass shall be issued by any interstate common carrier of passengers to any officer of the United States, including executive, legislative, and judicial officers.

If it is in order, I should like to offer that amendment at this time or to have the Senator offer it.

Mr. MCLAURIN. It is a good amendment. I have no objection to the Senator from Oregon offering it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is it exactly the same amendment as the one submitted by the Senator from Mississippi or is it a new proposition?

Mr. FULTON. It is exactly the same. I will change it, however, so that it will not be exactly the same.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It would then be in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. There seems to be one omission in the amendment as it now stands, and I move the following——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from New Hampshire withhold his amendment until the Secretary states the amendment of the Senator from Oregon to the amendment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. MCLAURIN. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me to ask him if he offers it as a substitute?

Mr. FULTON. I offer it as a substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be in order before the substitute proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move the following amendment for the purpose of perfecting the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the words "and their immediate families" insert the words "and their sisters, their cousins, and aunts." [Laughter.]

Mr. CULBERSON. In view of the fact that the Senator from New Hampshire, so far as I have seen, has opposed any proposition to prohibit the issuance of passes, it is not surprising that this motion to amend should now be made. I call his attention, however, to the fact that he will not probably reduce this subject entirely to ridicule.

I move to lay that amendment on the table, if it should be necessary, offensive as it is.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas moves to lay on the table the amendment to the amendment just read.

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire withdraws the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, I wish to be heard on the amendment as it stands.

Mr. FULTON. I rise to a point of order, or at least an inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon will kindly state his inquiry.

Mr. FULTON. The amendment I offered has not yet been stated. I have offered it as a substitute and I should like to have it stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed as a substitute by the Senator from Oregon.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment intended to be proposed, insert:

That no free interstate pass shall be issued by any interstate-common carrier of passengers to any officer of the United States, including Members of Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if anything could possibly be devised in the way of human language that would make an amendment more grotesque and absurd than the amendment which is now under consideration, I certainly am incapable of framing it. I have believed all along that it was not necessary to meddle with this matter, and in that regard I differ with my friend the Senator from Texas, and with all due deference to the Senator, I suggest to him that I shall entertain my opinion with quite as much independence as he entertains his.

The existing law is very liberal on this subject, Mr. President. It denies free passes to the bulk of our people, but gives them to certain excepted classes that are, I think, very proper, as a rule. There are some exceptions I never have seen much sense in. I have never quite understood why we should except, for instance, ministers of the Gospel any more than we should except teachers. I have never known why we should give free passes to a preacher who is getting a salary of $10,000 and deny it to a person who is teaching our children and getting a salary of $900 a year. But I have no disposition to raise that question, except to say that, to my mind, it is an exception which might well be omitted from the bill.

Now, Mr. President, we are posing before the country as opposed to the issuing of free passes. I venture to say that the exceptions which are in this bill will grant free passes to from 5,000,000 to 8,000,000 people in the United States. As an illustration, the telegrams that came from Chicago stated that there were 125,000 railway employees in the State of Illinois. If that be so, there are somewhere between one and two million employees in the country; and I believe that estimate is correct. We now have extended the privilege to their families, and then we have (and I will not repeat them) extended this privilege to innumerable classes, some of them perhaps deserving, some of them perhaps not so deserving. So if we adopt this amendment—and I confess I am surprised that the Senate should seriously think of doing so—if we put this amendment on the bill, we will have placed, in my judgment, in the bill exceptions that will give the railroads the privilege of issuing to at least one-eighth of the people of the United States free transportation, and I do not know but perhaps to one-half of the people. I am not quite sure as to that.

Mr. President, I do not think we ought to do that. I think the exceptions which are contained in section 22 of the act to regulate commerce as amended March 2, 1889, and February 8, 1895, are sufficiently inclusive, and that there is no particular reason why we should seek to go beyond that point.

Several SENATORS. Read it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will read it:

That nothing in this act shall prevent the carriage, storage, or handling of property free or at reduced rates for the United States, State, or municipal governments, or for charitable purposes, or to or from fairs and expositions for exhibition thereat, or the free carriage of destitute and homeless persons transported by charitable societies, and the necessary agents employed in such transportation, or the issuance of mileage, excursion, or commutation passenger tickets; nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit any common carrier from giving reduced rates to ministers of religion, or to municipal governments for the transportation of indigent persons, or to inmates of the National Homes or State Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and of soldiers' and sailors' orphan homes, including those about to enter and those returning home after discharge.

I think that is a very liberal exception made to the general rule that free passes should not be given to citizens of the United States. I am quite willing to have it specifically stated that they shall not be given to officers of the Government in any department of the Government, and I voted for an amendment which was offered covering that point. But in this bill, which is a dignified measure, which deals with a great subject, which has engaged the attention and the ability in its consideration of the ablest minds in this country and body, I do not think we ought to put as grotesque and absurd an amendment as is now before the Senate.

Mr. President, with those observations I am content to let the matter go as it will. Apparently the Senate is in favor of the amendment, and of course I could only register my vote in favor of laying it on the table. Having failed to accomplish that result, I have no criticism to make of any Senator, nor do I think any Senator has any right to make any criticism upon my attitude on this subject.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I think it is the sense of the Senate that free transportation should be prohibited to officers of the United States and to Members of Congress. That far it seems to me the Congress should go. I think the various amendments in the way of exceptions that have been offered indicate that further than that the Congress ought not to go. At least there are so many exceptions which occur to every person's mind as proper that we had better simply prohibit the granting of passes to officials and stop at that, and leave it to the railroads to determine how far beyond that they will exercise the matter of granting free passes.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. We have just voted down that specific proposition.

Mr. FULTON. I have reoffered it in somewhat different language.

Mr. LODGE. The Senate voted down the proposition of the Senator from Georgia, which would deprive Members of Congress and other officers of the Government of the privilege of passes.

Mr. FULTON. That is true.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know whether it is in order to renew it. I have not examined the form of the amendment.

Mr. FULTON. I made inquiry, and I changed it so that it is substantially different, or at least the language is different. But I make this further suggestion: It is offered as a substitute to a measure that has been changed very considerably since we last voted on this proposition, which, I think, also changes the parliamentary situation. I ask for a yea-and-nay vote on the substitute I have offered.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, it is hardly necessary for me to say to Senators that the amendment in its present form is not of my choice or of my seeking. Part of its grotesqueness, to which allusion has been made, is due to the fact that the Senate, on the motion of Senators unfriendly to this character of legislation, added amendments to it.

The suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] that this subject is sufficiently dealt with by section 2 of the act of 1887 and as subsequently amended is sufficiently answered by stating that that section contains no penalty whatever, and that is one reason why the law has not been executed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course it will be an easy matter, the Senator will agree, to attach a penalty to that law.

Mr. CULBERSON. While I do not approve and voted against the adoption of some of the amendments which have been put to this antipass amendment, I still think, Mr. President, that it is better than no law at all and probably better than the act of 1887.

Now, so far as the substitute offered by the Senator from Oregon is concerned, I suggest that the Senate and the House of Representatives ought not to feel called upon to say that the officials of those two Houses and of the Federal Government are the only ones who ought to be dealt with in this proposition and the ones who ought to be singled out in this legislation. In other words, Mr. President, it would be a strange anomaly for the Congress of the United States to declare that members of that body and other officials of the Federal Government were the only ones who could be affected by the issuance of passes and against whom this legislation should be directed.

Mr. President, if any other Senator desires to discuss this substitute, I will not make the motion, but unless some one does I will move to lay the substitute of the Senator from Oregon on the table.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I call his attention to what seems to impart into this provision a penalty:

The provisions of section 10 of this act shall apply to any violation of the requirements of this proviso.

And section 10 as amended by the act of March 2, 1889, as I read it, makes any violation of the act a misdemeanor, and a penalty attaches.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not think that covers the question to which I refer—that is to say, a specific penalty for the issuance of free transportation. Unless some Senator desires to speak on this question, I move——

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator allow me a suggestion before he makes that motion?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I ask leave to change the substitute I have offered. It reads:

Any carrier violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall for each offense pay to the United States a penalty of not less than $100 nor more than $2,000.

I wish to make this change:

That any person accepting any such pass or transportation——

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator has a right, I understand, to perfect the substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon can perfect his substitute.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment read. I was called from the Chamber, and I have not heard it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HALE. I desire to have the entire amendment read.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion to himself, as well as to other Senators?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. We have had an amendment prepared here, an amendment, and an amendment, and an amendment, until it is a laughingstock, and the Senate itself could not hold its sides; it took five minutes to read it. I want to suggest to Senators that there will be a conference committee on this bill; that the Senate never will be able to get anything in this Chamber that will satisfy all of us, but there must be some squeezing out of all these absurd propositions. I do hope we can go along and do something and get to a vote on the main proposition, and get the bill into the Senate.

Mr. HALE. What the Senator says leads me still more to desire to hear the amendment read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine requests that the amendment shall be again stated by the Secretary. The Secretary will read.

Mr. FULTON. I ask leave to modify the substitute that I have offered, so that it will read as follows:

That no carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall hereafter directly or indirectly issue or give any interstate free ticket, free pass, or free transportation or passage to any Senator of the United States or Representative in Congress, or to any justice or judge of the courts of the United States, or to any officer of either of the Executive Departments of the United States. Any carrier or person given or accepting any such free transportation in violation of this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall for each offense pay to the United States a penalty of not less than one hundred nor more than two thousand dollars.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move to lay the substitute on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine requests the restatement of the amendment.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the original amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, after line 9, insert as a substitute the following:

That no carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall hereafter directly or indirectly issue or give any interstate free ticket, free pass, or free transportation for passengers except to its officers, agents, and employees and members of their immediate families, to its actual and bona fide attorneys and their immediate families, and female nurses who served during the civil war, and physicians and surgeons, to ministers of religion, and inmates of hospitals and eleemosynary and charitable institutions, and to indigent, destitute, and homeless persons, transported by charitable societies or hospitals, and the necessary agents employed in such transportation; and to inmates of the National Homes or State Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, ex-Confederate Soldiers, and of Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Homes, including those about to enter and those returning home after discharge under arrangements with the boards of managers of said homes. Any carrier violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall for each offense pay to the United States a penalty of not less than one hundred nor more than two thousand dollars: Provided, That this provision shall not be construed to prohibit the issue or interchange of passes for officers, agents, and employees and members of their immediate families, nor to owners and care takers of live stock when traveling with such stock or when going to point of shipment or returning from point of delivery, nor shall anything in this provision be deemed to prohibit any carrier from carrying passengers free on account of charity from and to places visited by general epidemic or pestilence or wholly or largely destroyed by fire, water, earthquakes, or other calamitous visitations with the object of providing succor, relief, and other assistance to the inhabitants: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent such carrier from giving free or reduced transportation to laborers transported to any place for the purpose of supplying any demand for labor at such place. Jurisdiction of offenses under this provision shall be the same as that provided for offenses in an act entitled "An act to further regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States," approved February 19, 1903, and any amendment thereof.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have been called out of the Chamber. Who is the father of that provision?

Mr. SPOONER. It has a good many fathers.

Mr. TILLMAN. It had about sixteen paternities.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina will state his question of order.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from Texas made a motion to lay the amendment of the Senator from Oregon on the table.

Mr. TILLMAN. There has been no motion made, I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas made a motion to that effect, which was withheld in order that the amendment might be again reported at the request of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Is it the motion of the Senator from Texas to lay on the table the remarkable proposition I have just heard read?

Mr. CULBERSON. The motion of the Senator from Texas is to lay on the table the substitute offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON].

Mr. HALE. As an amendment to the amendment just read?

Mr. CULBERSON. As a substitute for it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To this amendment the Senator from Oregon proposes an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read.

Mr. HALE. As a substitute for the amendment just read?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. As a substitute for the amendment just read.

Mr. HALE. Now let us hear the substitute of the Senator from Oregon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the substitute of the Senator from Oregon.

The Secretary read as follows:

That no carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall hereafter directly or indirectly issue or give any interstate free ticket, free pass, or free transportation or passage to any Senator of the United States or Representative in Congress, or to any justice or judge of the courts of the United States, or to any officer of either of the Executive Departments of the United States. Any carrier or person giving or accepting such free transportation violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall for each offense pay to the United States a penalty of not less than one hundred nor more than two thousand dollars.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas moves to lay upon the table the substitute just read.

The motion to lay on the table was rejected.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Texas, to come in after the word "soldiers" where it first occurs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "disabled volunteer soldiers" insert "ex-Union soldiers and sailors."

Mr. LODGE. The motion, as I understood it, of the Senator from Texas was to lay upon the table the substitute offered by the Senator from Oregon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That was the motion.

Mr. LODGE. And the Chair declared that motion lost?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so ruled.

Mr. LODGE. Therefore the substitute is now pending in the nature of an amendment to this amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct. The Senator from Wisconsin has a right to perfect the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. LODGE. Excuse me; I thought his amendment was proposed to the substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "disabled volunteer soldiers" insert the words "ex-Union soldiers and sailors."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON].

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, while the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has been loaded down by a large number of modifications, and while it is, therefore, through no fault of the Senator from Texas, not in as good condition as when he originally offered it, I think it is much better than the proposition of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON]. The proposition of the Senator from Oregon merely segregates Senators and Representatives in Congress from the whole body of the people, and provides that these specified officials, and no others, shall not receive free transportation——

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. FULTON. My amendment not only prohibits free transportation to Members of Congress, but to all officials of the Government.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes, sir; but that is just as open to the same objection which I propose now to point out. I intend to vote against the substitute proposed by the Senator from Oregon, not because, Mr. President, I am not in favor of prohibiting transportation companies from furnishing free transportation to the officials named, but because they ought also to be prevented from furnishing free transportation to others than the officials named.

The pass evil is a real evil; but it is a broad evil, and no doubt the injury worked through it is as great or greater in other directions than it is here. I speak freely upon this subject, and shall vote freely upon this subject, because I have never yet, while I have been in public life, taken or used a pass of any kind on any railroad, or any frank of any telegraph company. I shall speak and vote freely against this amendment because I have paid cash for railroad tickets whenever I have traveled and for telegrams whenever I have used the wire unofficially.

And speaking thus freely, Mr. President, I can see no reason why Senators and Representatives in Congress and other officials of the United States Government should alone, out of the whole body of our people, be segregated and subjected to this provision. If the granting of passes is an evil, it is an evil which affects others as well as us; and, as a Senator near me says, "we are no better or no worse in this regard than others."

Therefore, Mr. President, not only should this evil be stopped with reference to people in public life, but it should be stopped with reference to people out of public life. It is not the business of the railroads to furnish free transportation, except in the few well-defined cases which were named in the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas. I can find, Mr. President, no reason in good policy for the adoption, but a great many objections, which can not be too forcibly stated, the statement of which, however, is not necessary in detail, to the substitute offered by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. President, all over the country this evil has been going on, and, now, to say that a few men shall be subjected to this provision and that other men shall not be, is a proposition, Mr. President, not supported, so far as I have yet heard, by one single reason or by one single fact. For that reason, Mr. President, I shall feel perfectly free in voting against the substitute of the Senator from Oregon, which does not reach the evil in its widespread meaning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] to the amendment.

Mr. FULTON. On that I ask the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], who has been called away and is not able to be present to-day. He left to me a discretion in the matter of voting on these amendments; and on this amendment I will take the liberty of voting. I vote "nay."

Mr. FRYE (when Mr. MORGAN'S name was called). The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is paired with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCLAURIN. My colleague [Mr. MONEY] has a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I make this announcement of his pair for the entire day.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 48, as follows:

YEAS—22.

Bacon	Gallinger	Hopkins	Piles
Brandegee	Gamble	Knox	Teller
Bulkeley	Gearin	Lodge	Tillman
Clay	Hale	Long	Warner
Flint	Hansbrough	McLaurin
Fulton	Hemenway	Perkins

NAYS—48.

Alger	Clark, Mont.	Frye	Newlands

NOT VOTING—19.

Aldrich	Daniel	Heyburn	Proctor
Allison	Depew	Money	Rayner
Berry	Dubois	Morgan	Smoot
Burton	Elkins	Patterson	Warren
Crane	Gorman	Penrose

So Mr. FULTON'S amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] as amended.

Mr. GALLINGER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). As I have already stated, I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]; but as he would vote "yea" on this question if present, I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 60, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—60.

Bacon	Culberson	Hansbrough	Newlands
Bailey	Cullom	Hemenway	Nixon
Berry	Daniel	Hopkins	Overman
Beveridge	Dillingam	Kittredge	Perkins
Blackburn	Dolliver	Knox	Pettus

NOT VOTING—13.

Aldrich	Dubois	Morgan	Warren
Allison	Gorman	Patterson
Burton	Heyburn	Penrose
Depew	Money	Proctor

So Mr. CULBERSON'S amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If no amendment be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, has had under consideration an act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce"——

Mr. MCLAURIN. Mr. President, I have an amendment that I desire to offer.

Mr. LODGE. We have not reached that stage yet, have we, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator offer his amendment in the Senate or as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. MCLAURIN. In Committee of the Whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill, then, will be regarded as still in Committee of the Whole. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section, to be known as section 10, as follows:

SEC. 10. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier of interstate commerce to charge or collect any greater compensation for the transportation of the same kind and quantity of freight or property a part than the whole of the distance in the same direction between any two given points on the line of such transportation, but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier to charge and collect as great compensation for the shorter as for the longer distance. Any person from whom a collection unlawful under this section is, directly or indirectly, made may, in any State or United States court having jurisdiction of the amount, subject-matter, and person of the defendant, recover double the excess, together with all costs of collection, including reasonable attorney's fees and costs of travel.

Mr. MCLAURIN. I did desire to make some remarks on this amendment, but the Senate seems to be impatient to get the bill out of Committee of the Whole into the Senate, and I shall content myself with what I have said on it in the speech that I delivered here on the 9th of last month and with a vote on it by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I should like to have that amendment again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated.

The Secretary again read the amendment of Mr. MCLAURIN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. DANIEL. I wish to offer a substitute for that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia proposes a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment proposed by Mr. MCLAURIN, insert the following at the end of the bill as a new section:

SEC. —. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of like kind of property, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance: Provided, however, That upon application to the Commission appointed under the provisions of this act, such common carrier may, in special cases, after investigation by the Commission, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the Commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section of this act: Provided also, That no discrimination shall be made by allowance of a lesser charge for a longer than a shorter haul in favor of any points of localities where natural conditions and advantages are substantially similar.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I wish to offer a substitute for that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia proposes a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment proposed by Mr. MCLAURIN, insert the following at the end of the bill as a new section:

SEC. —. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of like kind of property, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance: Provided, however, That upon application to the Commission appointed under the provisions of this act, such common carrier may, in special cases, after investigation by the Commission, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the Commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section of this act: Provided also, That no discrimination shall be made by allowance of a lesser charge for a longer than a shorter haul in favor of any points as against any other points or localities or where natural conditions and advantages are substantially similar.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, this is a great topic. It is brought up both in the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] and in the substitute which I have offered. I will state that all but the last proviso in the substitute I have offered is now in section 4 of the original interstate-commerce law. It introduces the topic of the longer and shorter hauls. I have reflected upon that subject a good deal, and enough to have reached the conclusion that it would be impracticable for Congress to formulate any abstract proposition which could fittingly cover all cases. Distance is not a thing of such even quality that travel and traffic over all distances can be sold at the same rate per yard. Distance differs in value as much as cloth of various textures and fineness of fabric and manufacture differs in value. Some distances cost much more to traverse than other distances, just as some cloth costs much more than other cloth. A mile through a tunnel and a mile on a plain are of very different cost in travel. A yard of calico and a yard of silk are different things. So there are particular natural advantages and arbitrary conditions in seaports that introduce peculiar and varying circumstances that affect freights. But there are some cases in which such great discriminations are made in charging less for the longer haul than for the shorter haul that some legislation on this subject is needed. They are discriminations uncontrolled by the considerations I have mentioned. Those who study rate questions should ponder the equities of the postage stamp—common charge for all distances. They should also ponder Æsop's fable of the body and its members. The thoughts inspired by both contemplations may prepare the mind to consider the irregularities and difficulties which pervade this subject; but they should not paralyze efforts for betterment.

DIFFERENTIAL TO SEAPORTS DISTINGUISHED FROM THE DISCRIMINATION AGAINST DANVILLE.

About 175 miles south of here is the city of Lynchburg, where I reside. Sixty miles farther south is the city of Danville, near the North Carolina line, and it is a fine town of good people, with numerous and flourishing industries. In a number of cases the charge for freight to my own town, coming from the South and the Southwest, is less than it is to the town of Danville, 60 miles south of it, and in other directions are like discriminations.

Let me read an extract from a letter from a distinguished and able citizen of Danville. It will be seen that he appreciates the fact that with respect to the seaports of the country no ironclad rule can be laid down, and that he distinguishes such cases as are contemplated by the proviso which I have offered from those in which differentials to seaports have been recognized and approved. His language is as follows:

There are a number of very strong reasons why the railroads should be permitted to charge under the long and short haul section of the act of 1887, less for the long than the short haul to such places as Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk, and, in fact, all seaboard cities, and cities on great navigable rivers and lakes, because they have superior natural conditions and advantages, which the railroads do not make. By such a preference commodities of all sort not only find a ready market, but from those points exportations are made to foreign countries, and the mass of our producers would be benefited by the discrimination; that is, not the kind of discrimination that hurts, unless the railroad gives to one of such places undue preference over another similarly situated.

The great wrong in discrimination consists in permitting the carriers to select in the interior of the country localities between which there is no difference in natural advantages and conditions and discriminating against one and in favor of the other. It is not right to deprive any locality of its natural advantages and conditions, nor is it right that carriers should be permitted to make conditions against a locality and then plead that the conditions there are not similar to what they are at some favored place where the carriers also made the conditions. There are hundreds of localities all over the country having similar natural conditions that suffer from discrimination. Danville, for example, has natural advantages and conditions equal to Roanoke or Lynchburg, and yet both of the latter receive freights under the long haul of an average of 40 per cent cheaper than Danville, and Roanoke has the preference without any competing railroad. Danville at two different times had the competing lines, and the Southern removed the competition, thereby making the conditions which, it pleaded before the Interstate Commerce Commission, Danville should have before the place was entitled to as good rates as Lynchburg.

There can be no justification for this wrong. People have invested their earnings and devoted years of toil in a city in a faith that its natural advantages and conditions would preserve the one and reward the other. That city has incurred a heavy public debt, about one-third of it to build this destroyer, and while the people strive to pay this obligation their business vanishes, their property depreciates, and the remorseless beneficiary looks on with unconcern at the ruin that has been wrought. I can assure you that, with the exception of several favored patrons of the Southern Railway Company who get reduced rates—for instance, the big cotton mill here and one other man—there has been little prosperity in Danville for the last fifteen years.

THE INJUSTICE OF RATES TOO LOW TO ONE PLACE IN PROPORTION TO RATES TO OTHER PLACES.

Mr. President, a few words about the low rates. We have made no provision in this bill about rates that are too low. That great topic is not treated in this legislation; and it has been contended upon this floor that a railroad company has the right to make its rates as low as it pleases. I take issue upon that contention. As an ordinary rule, no man needs any inhibition against selling his property too low. The stimulus of self-interest will prompt him to get all he can for it. So in general as to corporations; but sometimes men have sinister purposes, as well as good ones, on selling property below cost. In the case of transportation corporations, they often have the inducement to make rates too low in order to destroy competitive lines and then to put up their rates as high as they please afterwards. Competition has been called, and may continue to be, "the life of trade." But there is such a thing as meretricious and illegal competition just as much as there is just and commendable competition. The most numerous of all cases that require the correcting hand of even-handed justice are those in which railroad companies have discriminated against small communities and small houses by granting a disproportionate lower rate to their competitors and rivals. I will read on this subject just a few lines in the case of The Interstate Commerce Commission v. The Cincinnati and New Orleans Railroad, in 167 United States Reports. Judge Brewer says in that case:

It will be perceived that nowhere in the act is there any suggestion of a maximum or minimum rate. The first section declares that the rates shall be reasonable and just and prohibits every unreasonable and unjust charge. Now, the rate may be unreasonable because it is too low as well as because it is too high. In the former case it is unreasonable and unjust to the stockholder and in the latter case to the shipper.

I assert, further, making an affirmation which is much broader than the statement of the court in this case, that a rate may be too low and illegal against the whole general public and against the people at large.

If a railroad can get cost for its rate, it has no right to sell it below cost. If it can get a reasonable profit on its rate, it has no right to sell it below that reasonable profit, for the broad and general reason that every corporation and especially every public-service corporation is a general public trustee, and that it must be just in all of its charges, just to each individual, just to each locality, just to its stockholders, just to the public; and it is not just when it builds up one rival, if he is one man, against another, or if it seeks to build up one place as against another by giving it the favored condition of lower charges for similar but lesser service. It is not right, as I see it, that Danville shall be discriminated against and made to suffer a burden not imposed on other cities, with respect to which it has substantially similar natural conditions and advantages.

THE DISTINCTIVE COMPLAINT OF DANVILLE AS JUDICIALLY CONSIDERED.

We may perceive wrongs, and find it very difficult to lay down a rule which will correct those wrongs, without bringing on equal or greater injury in other directions. Therefore it does not seem to me to be practicable, or at least my own mind has not been able to prescribe any general and clear rule that would apply to all cases. But I conceive that the proviso which I have appended to the fourth section of the original interstate-commerce act, and which appears with it in the substitute which I have offered, may reach at least some of the cases, including the discrimination against the city of Danville.

Now I will give more specifically the complaint of Danville. In 117 Federal Reporter, page 741, is reported the case of the Interstate Commerce Commission v. Southern Railroad Company, in the circuit court of the western district of Virginia, before Judge McDowell, the district judge; and in 122 Federal Reporter, page 800, the same case appears as presented to the circuit court of appeals for the fourth circuit, where the decision below was confirmed.

The syllabus of the decision in the appeal is that—

Where the rates charged by a railroad to a particular point are not unreasonable in themselves, the fact that lower rates are charged for a longer haul to other points does not create an unjust discrimination against such point, in violation of the interstate-commerce law, where such lower rates are due to active legitimate competition.

Circuit Judges Goff and Purnell sat on the case, as did also District Judge Boyd, who gave the opinion. In the course of it he thus stated the complaint of Danville:

The grounds upon which the complaint is based are substantially that the through rates from the West via Lynchburg to Danville are greater than the rate to Lynchburg, and that the rate to Richmond via Lynchburg is less than that to Danville, although the latter place is nearer to the shipping point than Richmond. The principal grievance complained of against the railroad is the rate charged by the Southern Railway for freight between Lynchburg and Danville. Lynchburg and Richmond are both reached by three railway systems, viz, the Southern, the Norfolk and Western, and the Chesapeake and Ohio railways. Prior to 1886 there were four independent railroads operated to Danville, but in that year three of them passed under the control of the Richmond and Danville Railroad Company. In 1894 the last-named railroad company was succeeded by the Southern Railway Company, which acquired control of all of the property of the Richmond and Danville Company, and in 1899 the Southern purchased the Atlantic and Danville, which was the remaining railroad running into Danville. On account of the several lines reaching Richmond and Lynchburg, and from the fact that these lines, by reason of their location, do business as carriers from the same points in the West, there is active competition both at Lynchburg and Richmond, which has produced exceedingly low freight rates.

Judge Boyd then said:

From the testimony it appears that the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, which competes with the trunk lines, and which complies with the interstate-commerce act by charging no more for the short than the long haul, is primarily responsible for these rates. The rates given Danville are very much higher than those given Lynchburg and Richmond. From the record we gather the following instances, which will show the difference in the rates charged on 100 pounds of freight from the points named to Lynchburg, to Richmond, and to Danville:

Rates in cents per hundred pounds to Lynchburg and Danville.

	Class 1.	Class 2.	Class 3.
Boston to Lynchburg	54	47	28
Boston to Danville	71	63	52
New York to Lynchburg	54	47	38
New York to Danville	66	58	47
Baltimore to Lynchburg	49	42	33
Baltimore to Danville	60	52	41
Chicago to Danville	108	90	70
Chicago to Lynchburg	72	62	47

	Sugar.	Molasses.	Coffee.	Rice.
New Orleans to Lynchburg	32	26	40	32
New Orleans to Danville	43	37	51	42

Tobacco rates to Louisville.

	Cents.
From Richmond	24
From Lynchburg	24
From Danville	40

The Southern Railway does not share in the competitive through rate from the West to Lynchburg, Richmond, and Norfolk charged by the other railways named, and the water competition from New Orleans is shown by the evidence to have direct effect upon the rates to Norfolk and Richmond. It is the settled law that a railroad company is not bound to carry beyond its own lines, and there are numerous decisions at circuit that there is nothing in the interstate-commerce act to compel connecting railroads to form through rates or to join in making through rates.

In the case of East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad Company v. Interstate Commerce Commission (181 U. S., 1; 21 Sup. Ct., 516; 45 L. ed., 719) it is held that "The only principle by which it is possible to enforce the whole statute is the construction adopted by the previous opinions of this court—that is, that competition which is real and substantial and exercises a potential influence on rates to a particular point, brings into play the dissimilarity of circumstances and conditions provided by the statute, and justifies the lesser charge to the more distant and competitive point than the nearer and noncompetitive place, and that this right is not destroyed by the mere fact that incidentally the lesser charge to the competitive point may seemingly give a preference to that point, and the greater rate to the noncompetitive point may apparently engender a discrimination against it. We say seemingly on the one hand and apparently on the other, because in the supposed cases the preference is not 'undue' or the discrimination 'unjust.' This is clearly so when it is considered that the lesser charge upon which both the assumption of preference and discrimination is predicated is sanctioned by the statute, which causes the competition to rise to the right to make such lesser charge."

JUSTICE REQUIRES THE SENSE OF PROPORTION.

I shall not now criticise the opinions of the courts from which I have quoted further than to say that it is difficult for me to avoid doubt as to the soundness of the conclusions reached. Those conclusions are based on the existing statute of Congress, but nevertheless it does not seem to me that sufficient stress is laid upon the true principle that rates must be just and that due proportion in charges is justice, except in those cases where imperious conditions impose the necessity of irregularities that would otherwise be intolerable. The mere stimulus of competition is not in itself sufficient to justify the discrimination against an intermediate community by rates so high as to effect an embargo or punishment upon it, while reaching forth to share the trade of another as against a rival.

Neither Lynchburg nor any town seeks to injure Danville, and it is not for anybody to object to reasonable charges to either Lynchburg or Danville or any other place. Danville does not seek to injure or disparage Lynchburg and would be well content to live and let live. But nobody would be injured by justice to Danville, and everybody should desire it. If the company can make money by its Lynchburg rates, it would make more money by the same rates to Danville, for they would be realized at less cost, i. e., the cost of 60 miles of carriage. It would also make money by a lesser charge to Danville by just so much as the amount of the cost of travel 60 miles farther on to Lynchburg.

These being the facts the rates to Danville at the existing high figures—higher than to more distant places—are not just. They show a lack of the sense of proportion, which is essential to justice.

OTHER DISCRIMINATIONS AGAINST DANVILLE.

In the fourth volume of the Report of Hearings before the Interstate Commerce Committee of this body will be found statements of the people and representatives of Danville which I would bring to your attention if I could fittingly do so; but time is too short. I commend to perusal the statement of Hon. Eugene Withers on page 3438, volume 4, of the Hearings; the memorial of the city of Danville to the general assembly of Virginia on page 3444; the resolutions of a mass meeting of the people of Danville, page 3440; the letter of E. P. Bacon, esq., page 2962, and the petition of the city of Danville to the Congress on page 1816 of volume 3 of the Hearings, which was presented by Judge A. M. Aiken.

My colleague [Mr. MARTIN], who shares in the deep interest I feel in this matter, has just handed me a schedule of freight rates on carloads of starch in cents per hundredweight from Chicago, Ill., to thirty different cities and towns of Virginia, and I here insert it:

Waverly	14.5
Waynesboro	14.5

It will be observed at a glance that the charge with respect to twenty-nine of these Virginia places is 14½ cents per hundredweight, and that Danville is specially victimized by a charge of 25.5 cents. A number of these places are nearer Chicago than Danville, but quite a number of them—Alexandria, Doswell, Fredericksburg, Hampton, Newport News, Norfolk, Petersburg, Phœbus, Portsmouth, Richmond, Suffolk, Wakefield, and Waverly, for instance—are farther distant from Chicago than Danville is. Nevertheless Danville is charged 11 cents more per hundredweight on starch than any one of these more distant points. That city is the sole mark of the discrimination. Is it a wonder that its citizens complain? Is it right that their city be thus burdened and partially treated? I protest that it is wrong and vicious.

Other cases of discrimination in Virginia have been brought to my attention. I am advised by a Lynchburg manufacturer that the rates on his products from Lynchburg to Washington, D. C., are larger than to Boston, Mass. A farmer in Fauquier County lays before me cases in which charges on goods arriving and produce outgoing are discriminatory against his neighbors. Another informs me that the charges from Caroline County., Va., to Newport News are heavier than the charges from Minnesota to the same port on corn. Time forbids the lengthy discussion of this subject now. It is certain that it needs greater attention and consideration than it has received, and that evils exist that will continually demand correction.

I respectfully suggest that we should incorporate in this bill the proviso to existing law that "no discrimination shall be made by allowance of a lesser charge for a longer than a shorter haul in favor of any points or localities as against other points and localities where conditions and advantages are substantially similar." This ought to compel the allowance to Danville of at least the same rates that are accorded to competitive points at a greater distance than Danville from the initial point of shipment. It is to be hoped that even a closer approximate than this to exact justice may be made. The situation here at this time does not encourage the desire for a speedy remedy; but the railroad administration should itself make a more equitable schedule. Surely a claim so just as that of Danville can not be perpetually ignored.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I did not intend to say anything, but expected to permit the amendment to go to a vote. But since the substitute is offered I will say a few words.

There was an impression prevailing throughout the country in 1904, when the President sent to Congress his message, in which he recommended general rate legislation, that we were going to have then real, sure-enough rate legislation. The people all over the country were calling upon their Senators and Representatives to support this policy of the President, a policy which had existed long before the present occupant of the White House held the office which now devolves upon him. I must admit that I had some doubts about the probability, if not about the possibility, of getting any real substantial legislation that would benefit the people who are entitled to benefit under such legislation as is proposed. But when I began to see a division in the ranks of the Republicans in the Senate, I did have some considerable hope that they were in earnest about it, and that the President was in earnest about this legislation, and, with the Democracy of the Senate following out the doctrine of its party on this question, that we would get some legislation which would benefit the shippers of the country.

I know, and every other Senator here knows, that the shippers' bill affects pretty well every citizen in the entire country. If it is for the shipment of flour, every man who uses flour that is shipped must contribute to the payment of the shipper's bill. And so it is with every other class of freight that is shipped.

But it did not take long for me to discover that the President and his party were more interested in getting some advantage to themselves out of this agitation than they were in getting a benefit to the shippers of the country by means of substantial rate legislation.

I notice considerable discussion about a broad court review and a limited court review, and I have heard Senators contend that there is no substantial difference between a narrow court review and a broad court review; that there is no appreciable difference. But the President did not so understand. He stated in his letter which was read in the Senate yesterday:

> I also repeatedly stated that while it was entirely satisfactory to me simply to leave the Hepburn bill in substance as it was—that is, with the recognition of the jurisdiction of the courts, but without any attempt to define that jurisdiction—yet that I was entirely willing that there should be a definition, provided that this definition did not seek to grant a broad review, but explicitly narrowed it to the two subjects which, as a matter of fact, I believed that the courts would alone consider in case there was no attempt to define the limits of their review; that is, would limit it to the question as to whether the Commission had acted ultra vires and as to whether any man's constitutional rights had been impaired.

The President not only there says that there is a difference between the broad court review and the limited court review, but he says that he was in favor of the limited court review. However, he has now stated that he is in favor of the Allison amendment. In a telegram that he sent on May 6—this month—to W. F. Hill and members of the legislative committee of the Pennsylvania State Grange, Harrisburg, Pa., he said:

> Telegram received. I am happy to tell you that not only am I standing on my original position as regards rate legislation, but it seems likely that Congress will take this position, too.
> The Hepburn bill meets my views, as I have from the beginning stated. The Allison amendment is only declaratory of what the Hepburn bill must mean, supposing it to be constitutional, and no genuine friend of the bill can object to it without stultifying himself.
> In addition, I should be glad to get certain amendments, such as those commonly known as the Long and Overman amendments, but they are not vital, and even without them the Hepburn bill, with the Allison amendment, contains practically exactly what I have both originally and always since asked for, and if enacted into law it will represent the longest step ever yet taken in the direction of solving the railway rate problem.
> THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Now mark you, Mr. President, "the Allison amendment is only declaratory of what the Hepburn bill must mean." Let us see what the Allison amendment is. I read from page 25 of the bill as printed on the 14th of May:

> The venue of suits brought in any of the circuit courts of the United States against the Commission to enjoin, set aside, annul, or suspend any order or requirement of the Commission shall be in the district where the carrier against whom such order or requirement may have been made has its principal operating office, and may be brought at any time after such order is promulgated. And if the order or requirement has been made against two or more carriers then in the district where any one of said carriers has its principal operating office; and if the carrier has its principal operating office in the District of Columbia, then the venue shall be in the district where said carrier has its principal office, and jurisdiction to hear and determine such suits is hereby vested in such courts.

Now, jurisdiction to hear and determine what suits? Jurisdiction to hear and determine "suits brought in any of the circuit courts of the United States against the Commission to enjoin, set aside, annul, or suspend any order or requirement of the Commission." Could it be made any broader? Any "suits." Jurisdiction is there vested in the circuit courts of the United States to hear and determine any suit that may be brought against the Commission to enjoin, set aside, annul, or suspend any order or requirement of the Commission. It is impossible for anybody to reconcile that with a narrow court review. If the President meant what he said when he sent the letter to the Senate to be read yesterday, that he was originally in favor of a narrow court review, limiting the court to the questions whether the Commission had acted ultra vires and whether the Commission had violated any constitutional right of anybody—if that was his original intention, when he agreed to the Allison amendment he abandoned it. So there can be but one conclusion; that is, that the President, for some purpose or other, surrendered his contention and went over to those who are fighting against railroad rate legislation.

I do not know why the President surrendered thus; I do not know the motives which prompted him; but there was one Senator, the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], who stated that there is always some basic principle that will ultimately get the Republican party together. He did not state what that basic principle is, but if my observations since I have observed the workings of the Republican party are worth anything in making up a judgment, that basic principle is the "cohesive power of public plunder." Why did the President surrender? That he surrendered there can be no question. Hereafter it will be known as "Roosevelt's surrender," and if it shall ever be set to music it can be sung to the air of Bonaparte's Retreat. It may have been necessary or it may have been more in accord with the views of the President to get the Republican party together and to make this a Republican rate bill than to make it a bill that would benefit the entire shippers of the country. It seems to have been more the intention to secure advantage to himself and to the Republican party as a party than a benefit to the shippers of the country.

There is one thing about the President. The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] the other day said he was a fighter, but that he surrendered in his political contests. There is one thing the Senator might have added to that, which is that when the President surrenders he does not quit fighting. He goes over on the opposite side, swears allegiance to the enemy, and fights those who were his former allies. The President started out as if to be an ally on rate legislation of the Democratic Senators and the Democratic Representatives in Congress and to bring his Republican contingent with him, but after a while when it became necessary for him to surrender to those who were his antagonists in this fight, he did not only surrender and quit fighting the common foe, but he went over to the cohorts of discrimination and extortion and commenced to fight those who were formerly, and by his invitation, his allies.

If we are to have any legislation that will really benefit the shippers of the country, let us adopt the amendment offered by myself instead of the substitute offered by the Senator from Virginia. Had the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] to limit the power of the courts in the granting of injunctions and to prohibit their granting preliminary injunctions been adopted, there would have been some chance for the order of the Commission to go into effect; and wherever that Commission would make an order, it would at least give some temporary relief to the shippers. But instead of that, the Republican contingent of the President have joined with those who were fighting him in the beginning and have voted down that amendment. So that——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Mississippi has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MCLAURIN. I have another amendment that I want to offer. Before it is read, I wish to say that the Republican Senate seems to me disposed to vote down every amendment, and I suppose it would vote down the Lord's Prayer if it were germane and offered as an amendment. I offer the amendment that I send to the desk, and I will say just a few words on it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

> It shall be unlawful for any common carrier engaged in interstate commerce to operate as such interstate common carrier for compensation any steam-propelled vehicle of transportation of passengers or freight between sunrise and sunset on the Sabbath day.

Mr. MCLAURIN. Mr. President, I was just about to say a moment ago that if the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] had been adopted, there could have been some relief given to the shippers; but as it is, it will be no trouble for the carrier who is displeased at all with the order of the Commission to go into court and secure the issuance of a preliminary injunction and keep that injunction in operation for at least a couple of years; and by that time will come the expiration of the time for which the order was made, and no benefit will accrue at all. I am going to discuss the amendment but a little. I should like to have the Chair hear what I am about to read. I simply want to state that while this is not the Lord's Prayer—offered as an amendment to the pending bill, because that would not be exactly germane—it is a part of the Ten Commandments, and it is germane to this bill. I want to read verses 8, 9, 10, and 11 of the twentieth chapter of Exodus, so that when a Senator, if there is any Senator here who has not read this, comes to vote on this amendment, if he votes against it, he may know that he is voting against one of the Ten Commandments, and one that is also germane to this bill:

Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy.
Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work:
But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates:
For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it.

Mr. RAYNER. I suggest that that applies only to persons. It does not apply to corporations.

Mr. McLAURIN. If any corporation can run its trains on the Sabbath day without the agency of any person, it may be permitted to run them. But if it requires the services of any person—manservant or maidservant—to run them, then this commandment applies to such corporation.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask to what the amendment is directed. Is it directed to the bill or does the Senator propose it as an amendment to the Commandments?

Mr. McLAURIN. I can understand how a man who has not read the Bible would not know, but one who is familiar with the Bible knows that what I have read is itself one of the Commandments.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

Mr. McLAURIN. But I will say to the Senator——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The reason why I ask is because of the fact that a part of the Commandments is read from the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. McLAURIN. I did not catch the last that the Senator said. It seems not to be understood on the other side, and if that side is to get any of the benefits of the Scriptures at all it must be read from this.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. Do you propose to stop telegraphic messages and mails on Sunday, too?

Mr. McLAURIN. I would stop the whole business and let everybody rest. I would let the telegraph operators and the railroad employees—the men who run trains on Sunday and never get a Sunday and never know what a Sunday is—rest. I would stop all those trains. I would allow the train crews and laborers a rest of one day in seven, as commanded by the Almighty. That is what the Almighty, through Moses, commanded, and I would give Moses a fair chance in this. [Laughter.]

Mr. DANIEL. Would the Senator also stop the street car lines?

Mr. McLAURIN. We could not stop the street car lines, because they do not do interstate business.

Mr. DANIEL. But in the District of Columbia they are under the control of Congress.

Mr. McLAURIN. The question of the Senator is academic. The amendment applies only to steam-propelled vehicles.

Mr. DANIEL. I suppose the Senator would stop hotels.

Mr. McLAURIN. The amendment does not apply to hotels.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If no further amendment be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, has made sundry amendments to the bill. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. If any——

Mr. LODGE. I think the amendments had better be considered separately and in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. LODGE. I object to concurring in any of the amendments in gross.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts objects to concurring in the amendments in gross. The first amendment made, as in Committee of the Whole, will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, after the words "applied to," insert:

Any corporation or any person or persons engaged in the transportation of oil or other commodity, except water and except natural or artificial gas by means of pipe lines or partly by pipe lines and partly by railroad or partly by pipe lines and partly by water, at any place within the jurisdiction or within the governmental authority of the United States, who shall be considered and held to be common carriers within the meaning and purpose of this act, and to.

Mr. HOPKINS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out all of line 3 after the word "water" and all of line 4.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "water," in line 3, strike out the following words:

At any place within the jurisdiction or within the governmental authority of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just read to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair, the noes have it.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I ask for a division on the amendment to the amendment. It seems to me if the Senate understands the character of this amendment it certainly will be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois demands a division.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I desire just a few words further upon this question. This is the amendment that was adopted which makes a common carrier of the pipe line that the Administration has permitted the Union Oil Company, of California, to construct across the Isthmus. It is a revocable license, and the Administration proposes to grant the license to every oil company in the United States that desires to cross there. But if my amendment is voted down, the result will be that the company, which has expended nearly $3,000,000 in tank vessels and in the construction of its pipe line across the Isthmus, will be prohibited in the near future from transporting a barrel of oil of its own product from one section of the country to the other through its pipe line.

In other words, we have, by an amendment, provided that natural products, including oil, can not be transported by the common carrier that owns the product. So if this exception is not made, as I said, the amount of money which has been expended on the authority of a contract with the Government of the United States will be entirely lost to the company.

In addition to that, it is of great importance to the Government that a pipe line, and several of them, if possible, should be constructed across the Isthmus in order to get the oil there for fuel purposes. As conditions now are, a corner could be made at any time on coal or oil or any other product. The chief engineer reports that the engines which are used on the Isthmus railroad can be transformed for a few hundred dollars each for the use of crude oil to operate the engines, and that a great saving can be had to the Government in the matter of fuel.

I seems to me, Mr. President, without taking any time of the Senate, that the amendment I have offered here should prevail. I am sure there is no Senator here who would desire to nullify the contract that was made by the Administration or who would desire to embarrass the Administration in procuring the fuel for use on the Isthmus.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I do not know how many more times this subject is to come up. I do not feel under any obligation to defend the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole more than rests upon every Senator upon this floor. Here is a proposition to make pipe lines common carriers. The Senate seems to be satisfied with it and has twice voted for that proposition. The Senator from Illinois desires to make a certain exception, that is to say, in favor of a pipe line which has been granted by the President of the United States to a certain party in the Isthmus of Panama. Now, I am opposed to granting any special exceptions in favor of any person by a law of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

Mr. MORGAN. Do not interrupt me, please.

Mr. HOPKINS. All right.

Mr. MORGAN. I am opposed to any law of a general nature being passed by this body in favor of a particular individual. I do not consider that that is good legislation, and I know it is not good Democratic legislation. "Exclusive privileges to none" is the old creed, and that is what I am standing on.

The Senator insists that it will be an exclusive privilege granted to the Union Oil Works, on the other side of the continent. The Union Oil Works, against the objection of Mr. Shonts and against various other objections, have managed in some way or other to get a contract signed by the President of the United States that they shall have the privilege of laying their pipe lines across the Isthmus. They have also a contract with the Government of Panama at Colon and at the city of Panama to put up pumping works, which are expensive works. The Senator says they have also spent a very large amount of money in rigging up boats and tanks to haul their oil down to the Isthmus.

After this contract was made by the President of the United States granting this peculiar and special and unauthorized and incomprehensible concession, the other oil companies in the United States, especially in Texas, claimed the privilege of carrying their oil to the Pacific Ocean in competition with this company. "No," said the company, "you can not do it; it is our property and this was done for the purpose of transporting our oil to the Atlantic, but the oil coming from the Atlantic shall not go to the Pacific."

That struck me as being a very one-sided sort of a partiality, and as absolutely unjustified by any fact that came within the knowledge of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, who investigated this subject very fully and have put all the facts in the RECORD. They are in the RECORD of yesterday. I offered them again on yesterday.

If Congress had been called upon to make a contract of that sort, giving to the Union Oil Company the special privilege of carrying oil across the Isthmus, Congress would have said to the company: "You must also carry oil for other companies the other way. Let the Atlantic supply the Pacific as well as the Pacific supply the Atlantic, and let competition be fair." That is what Congress would have said. But that provision was omitted in this contract, and when these other companies came up and claimed the right to carry their oil across these pipe lines, paying the freight, paying for the privilege, this company said: "No; we will not grant it to you at all;" and when they went to the Secretary of War, who had written a letter which was read here yesterday to try to impress the necessity upon the Senate of standing by the Administration, and when the question was put to the Secretary of War that he should say that these men should have the privilege of transporting oil from the Atlantic to the Pacific side, he said: "I will not grant it."

Now, that is the object of the amendment proposed, and it is a very unworthy one. There is no question about it at all. I do not care whom it favors and I do not care whom it opposes, it is a very unjust provision. The Senator from Illinois is here defending it day after day, pressing it, and he comes now with a demand upon the Republican party of the United States to stand by the Administration on this question.

Mr. President, I want to see what the Administration has been doing about it. The President of the United States, contrary to the objections that I have stated here, all of which are printed in the RECORD now, and contrary to Mr. Shonts's objection, has granted this peculiar and special privilege. What right had the President of the United States to do it? What law of Congress has ever authorized him to dispose of a piece of property of the United States exclusively to any individual, or to any individual without reference to the exclusive privilege? How can he sell or grant? You say here it is a consideration to furnish some money to educate the children down there. How can he for a consideration, under any power that Congress has lodged in him, sell a right to establish a pipe line across that Isthmus? If he has a right to sell that, he has a right to sell the railway, he has a right to sell any mining privilege that may be asked there for gold, and many of them have been asked, and for coal and other privileges, such as making gardens and cutting timber for commerce, and the like of that. Various demands have been made upon this supposed power of the President of the United States, this Spanish power of granting concessions. The President of the United States is put in the attitude here of a Spanish sovereign, the owner of everything in that Zone, with the right to make concessions. That is all the right he has got and all he pretends to have. It was attempted to be defended before the Committee on Interoceanic Canals that the old Spanish law was in existence there and authorized it to be done.

Mr. President, if there is any one thing removed out of that Zone that I am more gratified at than all the balance, it is the Spanish power of granting concessions. It has not been devolved upon the President of the United States. He has not got it, and all of this fuss that is being made over this little amendment is for the sake of compelling Congress to justify that unlawful act of the President of the United States. That is all of it.

Now, I do not want to say anything more about it. I am not able to speak longer.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I desire to make a few remarks in response to the suggestions made by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I call the Senator to order. He has had his day in court, and so have I.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I deem it necessary to correct some of the statements made by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Illinois has no right to the floor. He can not speak twice on the same amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is inclined to the opinion that the limitation of the unanimous-consent agreement is operative in the Senate as it was in Committee of the Whole, and that the Senator would be restricted.

Mr. HOPKINS. If that is correct, I will not take the time of the Senate, although the Senator from Alabama has misrepresented the facts entirely.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Has not the Chair——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the amendment of the Senator from Illinois is the pending amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Question!

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I know nothing whatever about this matter, except what is contained in the letter which was read yesterday to the Senate from the Secretary of War. I think it received very little attention from the Senate. If there is any mystery about it, it is something that is not apparent at all on the face of the papers.

The Secretary of War has charge, under the President, of the construction of the canal on the Isthmus. I think he is one of the most devoted public servants this country has or ever has had. He states to me that he regards it as of the utmost importance to the Government that this license and other licenses of the same sort should be granted. In the first place, the Government needs the oil for fuel for the locomotives. This is a revocable license. He can make none which is not revocable. He has made a contract with this company and is willing to make a contract on the same terms with a Texas company and other companies, five or six of them. He says in his letter that the Chief Engineer informs him—> that if oil can be furnished us at 90 cents a barrel this will be the equivalent of coal of varying steaming qualities at prices between $3.24 and $4 per ton.

That is a very important matter. He has required these people as a part of the contract, I understand, to agree to furnish the Government crude oil fit for fuel purposes in the management of the railway and such other purposes as may be demanded in the construction of the canal, at not exceeding 90 cents a barrel.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the market price.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know whether that is the market price or not, but, Mr. President, if they can secure oil at 90 cents a barrel to take the place of coal at $3.24 and $4 a ton, it would seem to be in the interest of the Government to have it done.

If it were proposed here to give exclusive franchises to one concern, there would be objection to it; but as the Secretary of War states, and no one can gainsay, I take it, his statement, they offer the same permission precisely to anybody representing the Texas oil field, or to anybody representing other California companies.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SPOONER. I yield.

Mr. MORGAN. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the pumping stations and the pumping privileges are granted by the State of Panama, and this pipe line is a connection between those stations. The President of the United States can not grant, of his own right, pumping stations within the Zone.

Mr. SPOONER. Very well; if the company has secured from the Government of Panama, the owner, pumping stations which may be utilized in connection with this pipe line, which the Government of the United States may grant across the Zone, what objection is there to it?

Mr. MORGAN. Provided you will put them on the footing of all other pipe lines in the United States as common carriers, and let them pay the freight. They offer to pay the freight.

Mr. SPOONER. But the situation in Panama is not the situation in the United States. We are building there a tremendous public work thousands of miles away from the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. Suppose the Beaumont Company wants to send oil across the Isthmus of Panama to the city of Panama, ought they not to be allowed to do so on paying the freight for it fixed by the railroad commission?

Mr. SPOONER. The Beaumont Company will be entitled to receive from the Department precisely the same privileges, if it be a franchise. The Secretary of War says in this letter:

Such company——

Mr. HOPKINS. The Secretary, if the Senator will allow me, has stated to that company, and to all companies, that they can have the same privileges that are granted to this company.

Mr. MORGAN. They can never get them. Everybody knows they will never get any privileges.

Mr. SPOONER. Why not?

Mr. MORGAN. Because they would be in competition with this pet. That is the reason.

Mr. SPOONER. If it is a pet, if there is anything back of it which is not apparent on the face of the letter of the Secretary of War, that is another thing.

Mr. MORGAN. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that, whatever action may be taken here upon this subject to-day, it is not going to escape further attention, because the Committee on Interoceanic Canals is going to take up this very question and consider it upon the facts. We will report it, and the Senate can then pass upon that proposition as an independent one, if it votes down this one.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the committee will report upon it. If there is anything about this transaction or any other down there which will not bear the light of day, I hope it will be brought out into the open.

Mr. MORGAN. We will be glad to do it, and we will, if I can have my health.

Mr. SPOONER. I will aid the Senator to the extent of my power, if it comes into the Senate, to do that. But there is no good reason given here why it should be made a common carrier, it seems to me, when this franchise is thrown open to one, two, three, four, five, or six, if they desire to avail themselves of it:

Two companies of California, associated with the Standard Oil Company, asked that the Union Oil Company be compelled to make its line a common carrier. I submitted this proposition to the Union Oil Company, and its reply was, first, that they would need the pipe for constant transportation of their own oil, and, second, that as under such a requirement different qualities of oil would have to be introduced into the pipe, the pipe would have to be cleaned after the use of one quality in order that the next kind of oil pumped might not be affected in value and quality. The letter on this subject may be seen in the evidence already referred to.

When the Secretary of War, in whom we all have confidence, states so explicitly and so fully to the Senate that this is in the interest of the Government, that there is nothing exclusive about it, I think the Senate, in view of the necessity for it, ought not to be reluctant to leave the matter where it is desired it should be left. The Secretary says that if it is made a common carrier the effect of it will be to defeat any pipe line across the Isthmus.

I think there is authority, Mr. President, from two sources. First, I think anything that will facilitate the construction of the canal on that Zone the President is authorized to do under the canal act. Second, there is the act approved July 28, 1892, which provides—

That authority be, and is hereby, given to the Secretary of War, when in his discretion it will be for the public good, to lease, for a period not exceeding five years and revocable at any time, such property of the United States under his control as may not for the time be required for public use and for the leasing of which there is no authority under existing law, and such leases shall be reported annually to Congress: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be held to apply to mineral or phosphate lands.

I know nothing, as I said before, about this matter except what is apparent in the papers, and the papers certainly make a case which ought to lead the Senate to pay heed to the suggestion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] a question as to the practical effect of the words. As the bill now stands, I understand that the Union Oil Company, which has built or is building this pipe line, if the wording shall remain as it is, will be absolutely precluded from shipping its own oil through the pipe line. Is that a correct understanding?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is correct.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. And it will be compelled to take the oil of any other company for transportation?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is right.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. May I ask the Senator from Illinois a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida desires to ask the Senator from Illinois a question.

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I would ask the Senator from Illinois what different position this pipe line company on the Isthmus occupies from pipe line companies in this country?

Mr. HOPKINS. In what respect does the Senator mean?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I mean in respect to the application of this law. If this law should apply to pipe lines in this country, why should it not apply to a pipe line across the Isthmus?

Mr. HOPKINS. For the reason explained in the letter of the Secretary of War, which I had read yesterday at the Secretary's desk, and that is that the conditions upon the Isthmus are peculiar. They are not such as we have in the States. There is no competition there whatever, and there will be no competition. The Government, without this line, will be in a position where combinations can be made on coal and other products which will be used upon the Isthmus, and be compelled to pay the highest prices; but if this pipe line is permitted to be constructed without interference, as proposed by the Secretary of War, the company agrees that the maximum price of oil shall be not to exceed 90 cents for a barrel of 42 gallons. Then that puts them into competition with coal companies and other companies that may desire to construct their pipe line across the Isthmus.

The Senator from Florida, if he has read the letter which Seretary Taft sent to me, will remember the fact that the Secretary says that it is the purpose of the Government to induce other oil companies to construct pipe lines across the Isthmus so as to get an active competition; but if the amendment which I am seeking to have eliminated from this bill be adopted, it will destroy that entirely.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, I heard the testimony of Secretary Taft on this subject, and his position was accurately stated by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. Secretary Taft stated that other pipe line companies had been offered the privilege of constructing lines across the Isthmus under revocable licenses, but that this company was the only one thus far which had availed itself of that privilege; but I have never understood that that privilege was accorded in connection with the construction work of the canal. There is nothing to show to the Senate that a gallon of oil has ever been used for fuel in the work of construction on the canal, and there is nothing here to show that a gallon of oil will ever be used in the work of construction on the canal.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I yield.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will ask the Senator from Florida if he has read Exhibit 27, attached to the testimony of the Secretary of War when he was before the Interoceanic Canal Committee?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I do not recall having read the exhibits, but I recall the Secretary's testimony very clearly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the Senator that in his testimony the Secretary of War did not go into that matter fully, because he submitted all the correspondence that he had had with this company and with Mr. Shonts and others, which fully supports every statement made by the Secretary in his letter, which was read from the Secretary's desk yesterday. It is the purpose to be in a position to change the engines, so that they may be enabled to use crude oil there instead of coal.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, I have no interest at all in this matter, except that I do not want to see the Senate misled about it. There has been a strong contention here that the pipe lines existing in this country should be brought under this act as common carriers; and I fail to understand, if that policy is adopted, why it should not apply, and why it does not apply with equal force to our possessions down in the Canal Zone. If the Standard Oil Company, with its pipe lines through the country, producing its own oil and marketing its own oil, can do business under the provisions of this act, the Independent Oil Company, which has this concession from the Government to construct a pipe line across the Isthmus, ought to be able to do its business. When the bill in its present form brings the pipe lines of this country under the operation of this act, I can see no reason why the pipe lines within the jurisdictional territory of this country should not likewise be brought within the limitations of the act.

I concede all that the Senator from Wisconsin has said about the Secretary of War. He is a faithful public servant, in my judgment, and an excellent gentleman; but even if he should come here and ask a concession in favor of one company over other companies I should not be willing to accord it.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator from Florida allow me?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does not the Senator know that the Secretary of War expressly disclaims giving any preference to this company over any other company?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I have already stated that the Secretary said that practically anybody could get a concession across the Isthmus if he wanted it, but nobody else has got it; and when the owners of one pipe line are the producers and marketers of what they transport in their pipe line across the Isthmus I shall insist that that pipe line across the Isthmus shall be brought under the terms of the act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask for a division.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I understand if the senior Senator from Vermont were present he would vote "yea" on this amendment. I therefore withhold my vote, as I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 43, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—43.

Alger	Dick	Hansbrough	Penrose
Allee	Dillingham	Hemenway	Perkins
Beveridge	Dolliver	Hopkins	Piles
Brandegee	Dryden	Knox	Scott
Bulkeley	Elkins	La Follette	Spooner
Burkett	Flint	Lodge	Stone
Burnham	Foraker	Long	Sutherland
Clapp	Foster	McCumber	Teller
Clark, Wyo.	Frye	Millard	Warner
Crane	Fulton	Nelson	Wetmore
Cullom	Gamble	Nixon

NAYS—25.

Ankeny	Clay	Kittredge	Pettus
Bacon	Culberson	Latimer	Simmons
Bailey	Daniel	McCreary	Taliaferro
Berry	Frazier	McEnery	Tillman
Blackburn	Gallinger	McLaurin
Carmack	Gearin	Martin
Clarke, Ark.	Kean	Overman

NOT VOTING—21.

Aldrich	Depew	Money	Rayner
Allison	Dubois	Morgan	Smoot
Burrows	Gorman	Newlands	Warren
Burton	Hale	Patterson
Carter	Heyburn	Platt
Clark, Mont.	Mallory	Proctor

So Mr. HOPKINS's amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, several Senators have requested me to consent to an adjournment in order that the bill as reported to the Senate may be printed, so that Senators may have a better opportunity to examine it and prepare any amendments which they may want to offer to-morrow. While I am perfectly willing and am anxious to do so——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think we can dispose of some additional amendments now.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. While I am on my feet, I will ask that the bill be reprinted to-night, showing all the amendments that have been agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, in view of the request of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] I shall not now offer the amendment I intended to present, but will let the bill be reprinted as suggested.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 17, 1906, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 16, 1906.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 16, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Journal be approved.

The motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. JOHNSON asked leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Sarah Young, H. R. 19098, first session, Fifty-ninth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the request be granted.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair directs the Clerk to read section 7, Rule XIV.

The Clerk read as follows:

While the Speaker is putting a question or addressing the House no Member shall walk out of or across the Hall, nor, when a Member is speaking, pass between him and the Chair; and during the session of the House no Member shall wear his hat, or remain by the Clerk's desk during the call of the roll or the counting of ballots, or smoke upon the floor of the House; and the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper are charged with the strict enforcement of this clause. Neither shall any person be allowed to smoke upon the floor of the House at any time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk has instructed the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper to see that the rule is enforced.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 115, noes 12.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twelve Members present—a quorum. The ayes have it, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] will take the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

One first-class battle ship, carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any known vessel of its class, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest practicable radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armament and armor, not exceeding $6,000,000: Provided, That before approving any plans or specifications for the construction of such battle ship the Secretary of the Navy shall afford, by advertisement or otherwise, in his discretion, a reasonable opportunity to any competent constructor who may desire so to do, to submit plans and specifications for his consideration, for which said plans, should the same be used by the Department and be not submitted by or on behalf of a successful bidder for the contract, such compensation shall be paid as the Secretary of the Navy shall deem just and equitable out of the amount herein appropriated under the head "Contingent, Navy."

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph beginning on line 25, page 71, and ending with line 14, on page 72.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Beginning on line 25, page 71, strike out line 25 and all of lines 1 to 14, inclusive, on page 72.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported, as there was so much confusion in the House we could not hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again read the amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that we agree upon a time for debate for and against this amendment, and I would suggest that we have forty minutes on each side.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. As far as I am concerned, I shall not require any considerable amount of time, but there are other Members who desire to speak.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the same section, and I would like to ask whether the forty minutes would include my amendment?

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no; the time suggested is for this amendment alone.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee to be a little more generous; I would like to have ten or twelve minutes myself.

Mr. SULZER. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that he make it one hour on each side.

Mr. FOSS. I suggest that there are other propositions in this bill that immediately follow which I think will consume the rest of the day.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But this is the most important proposition in the bill.

Mr. FOSS. We are only seeking to limit the time upon this amendment. Of course there will be other amendments offered to this paragraph.

Mr. SLAYDEN. This, I will say, is the most important amendment, and I think that we ought to have an hour on each side.

Mr. RIXEY. I think the debate on this amendment will do away with other amendments to the same paragraph.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the sentiment here seems to be that we have debate of an hour on each side, I will modify the request and ask that debate be allowed on each side, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and the other hour to be controlled by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that debate upon the pending paragraph be continued for one hour on a side, two hours in the aggregate, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] and the other half to be controlled by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I understood the request was on the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood it to be on the paragraph.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I understand it to be on this amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The request will be modified accordingly. Is there objection?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, before I consent to that, I would like to know from the gentleman who has charge of this bill how much more time will probably be consumed.

Mr. FOSS. Well, following this, Mr. Chairman, is the provision with reference to torpedo-boat destroyers and also submarine boats. It is quite likely that that would take an hour or perhaps longer, and then in connection with this paragraph of the increase of the Navy comes the provisions increasing the limit of cost on colliers and training ships and on the battle ship Connecticut, and I should say that that is likely to take an hour. Then comes the armor-plate proposition, and it was in view of this fact that I desire to limit this debate at the start to forty minutes on a side, if I could, in order to get through to-day.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, we have an excellent rule for limiting debate on this question. We have had general debate, and the gentlemen who seem to be most anxious for the extension of this time have each of them had an hour or more in the discussion of this subject. I desire to remind the gentlemen that there are a number of important bills waiting the removal of this one from the consideration of the House, and up to this time I have not noticed that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], who has charge of this bill, has sought in any way to limit or terminate this interminable debate. I therefore object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa objects. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, in support of the motion to strike out the provision for this battle ship, I desire to present in the first instance several practical considerations. The first one is this, that we have now a programme for the construction of battle ships which will not be completed before the 1st day of January, 1910, so that already provision has been made for the construction of battle ships for nearly four years to come; and, as was conceded in the general discussion, the average delay on ships of this class is at least two years, and it will therefore be January 1, 1912, before the battle ships now provided for, all but two of which are under construction, will be completed. No man can tell what changes there will be in naval architecture during that time. Even more important, no one can tell what changes there will be in the relations of nations of the earth in the settlements of disputes in that time. If the cause of arbitration, if the making of arbitration treaties, continues at the same pace as from the beginning of the century, we may indulge the hope that by January 1, 1912, there will be a general agreement on the part of the strongest nations to suspend further increase of their navies and armies. The next point to which I wish to call attention is the fact that we are making provision for a battle ship the plan of construction of which, the efficiency of which, I may say the success of which, is altogether uncertain and problematical. Skillful naval architects have said that a boat of this size would merely afford a greater amount of surface to shoot at, and that it would be of no substantial advantage over the smaller boats now under construction and in use. Another practical point to which I call attention is this, that in our programme for construction we are altogether outstripping the provision for manning the boats. According to the report that is filed here, the Navy lacks 5,500 men. What is the sensible course to pursue under the circumstances? Is it to go on and on increasing the number of battle ships, or is it to stop a while and get sailors, gunners, and mechanics to man them? Nothing could be more expressive on this subject than the message of President Roosevelt as presented to us last December. He said:

> Modern war ships are most formidable mechanisms when well handled, but they are utterly useless when not well handled; and they can not be handled at all without long and careful training.

Again he says:

> To put a new and untrained crew upon the most powerful battle ship and send it out to meet a formidable enemy is not only to invite but to insure disaster and disgrace. To improvise crews at the outbreak of a war, so far as the serious fighting craft are concerned, is absolutely hopeless. If the officers and men are not thoroughly skilled in, and have not been thoroughly trained to, their duties, it would be far better to keep the ships in port during hostilities than to send them against a formidable opponent, for the result could only be that they would be either sunk or captured.

Whether it is because the genius of our people is not such that young men desire to enlist in the Navy, or what it may be, we are very much short of men, but here, with this unequal pace, we are maintaining construction altogether out of proportion with the essential service of manning the boats. I desire to call attention to the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs upon the tonnage of war ships, the construction of which is under way. I will concede that in some small degree that is explained by the slower construction in this country, but it appears by the programme here filed with the report, that on November 1, 1905, there was building of tonnage for war ships in Great Britain, 234,660 tons; of France, 181,000 tons, and Germany, 121,000 tons, and in the United States, 313,000 tons.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to continue for one minute? Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Thus it appears that there is already under construction in this country—and there are two battle ships not yet contracted for—nearly 80,000 tons more than in Great Britain, and 10,000 tons more than in Germany and in France combined. Is it not time, gentlemen of the committee, to call a halt in this ambitious naval programme of construction? [Applause.]

Mr. VREELAND. I desire to ask the gentleman a question, if he will yield.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. My time has expired.

Mr. VREELAND. I ask that the time of the gentleman from Ohio be extended for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York.

Mr. VREELAND. I rose for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can ask it in his own time.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It is immaterial to me.

Mr. VREELAND. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he thinks he was entirely fair to use the old figures of the amount of construction in the United States as compared with Great Britain or France or Germany, when he knows that we have now ships not yet launched authorized six years ago; when he knows that any one of the three nations, counting the vessels that they have finished in this time as well as what has been authorized in this time, in the case of Great Britain will show three times the amount that they have now building compared with the United States?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. If the gentleman had done me the honor to listen to what I said, the gentleman would have heard me say it was to be conceded that the ships in those countries were constructed more rapidly than in ours; but I want to say to him further, in answer, that this slowness in our programme is the very strongest argument why we should not authorize this battle ship, because no one can tell what changes in naval architecture will occur between now and the time the battle ships we provide for are finished.

Mr. VREELAND. Is not the fact we are building so slowly rather a reason why we should at least keep authorizing one ship to be built each year?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. By no means. When the construction of that boat will not commence for five or six or seven years after the date when we authorize it? Let us wait until we are near the time for beginning, and then we can settle the question wisely.

Mr. VREELAND. The gentleman knows the plans for building the great ship we authorize this year must be commenced at once, and that it may be a year and a half before the Navy Department is prepared to contract for building that ship.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It seems to me that in prompt and efficient methods of administration there would not be so great a delay, but even if that is the case, there is ample time after this session or after this Congress to decide that question in time to commence when the present programme for battle ships is completed.

Mr. VREELAND. We are not obliged to wait and start this ship until the others are completed. We have plenty of yards where work can be commenced.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Ah, as the gentleman and members of his committee have been stating to us, there was to be an abatement of the naval programme. If they intend to double by building this ship cotemporaneously with the others, I think the committee should know it. If we intend to carry on the construction of this boat cotemporaneously with the building of the other battle ships, that, of course, is an argument why you are not expecting to abate your naval programme, but to increase it.

Mr. VREELAND. I desire only to say in reply to the gentleman from Ohio that the building operations authorized this year, as he must know if he has given it attention, at the end of twenty years will leave the American Navy less strong than it is to-day. That is the programme, and it is a programme of moderation. It does not contemplate an increase in the Navy, but contemplates the building of such ships as will keep it up to its present strength only.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I believe it is in order to consider, first, amendments to perfect the bill or perfect the clause before amendments to strike out. With that idea in view, I wish to offer an amendment, which I shall read:

Insert, after the word "Navy," in line 14, page 72, the following: "Provided further, That whereas the British sea monster which we are imitating has been named the Dreadnaught—an archaic name—this man-of-war is hereby named the Skeered o' Nothin' as an expression of our true American spirit: Provided further, That it is hereby made the duty of the first captain who shall command her to challenge, in the nation's name, the so-called 'Dreadnaught' to a duel à l'outrance, to take place upon the sea somewhere in sight of Long Island, and that upon the occasion of the combat the President and his Cabinet, except, of course, the Secretary of Agriculture, who is ex officio a noncombatant, being all of them fond of a strenuous life, shall be entertained on the quarter-deck as guests of the ship and of the nation."

My object in offering this amendment, Mr. Chairman, is——

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS (continuing). To emphasize to all the world our courage and our new national spirit——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A point of order? Upon what ground? It is perfectly germane. It does not change existing law. It is not new legislation. The amendment is a mere expression of the true American spirit as we have lately discovered it. Now, to go on from point to point conquering the world as a true imperial power we ought to serve notice upon the nations of the world that we are not only ready to meet them, our Navy with their navy, but our big sea monster against their big sea monster. We have the men prepared to man her, we have the officers prepared to command her, and we have the Chief of the nation and the Cabinet ready and anxious to be on the quarter-deck while the fun is going on. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is not discussing the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that the gentleman from Mississippi is not discussing the question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am discussing the amendment itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is the question of order. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Upon what ground does the gentleman base his point of order?

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi is a plain violation of the rule of this House. There is an act of Congress providing how vessels shall be named. The whole amendment is in the form of legislation and in plain violation of the rule and requires no discussion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, this is rather a critical and acute sort of stage of naval procedure at which we have arrived. We are starting now on a new line of departure, to which the old law does not apply, as I think the Chair will readily see.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no provision of law to meet these new and acute exigencies that the gentleman speaks about. The amendment is clearly out of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Such is my respect for the bona fides and good faith of the Chairman that I will not appeal from the decision of the Chair. But, it seems to me, this amendment ought to be considered. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I just want to correct, at this stage of the debate, one impression which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has evidently made to this House.

Without debating the question at this time, I wish to state that the impression which the gentleman has given the committee is one as to present construction. I submit that it is hardly fair, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND] has stated, to take the amount of tonnage which we are building at the present time and compare it with what England is building at the present time, or France or Germany, in a single year. The only fair statement to make is to take it for a number of years. For instance, take it for five years upon the amount of tonnage authorized by the different nations. Now, during the last five years England has authorized 663,990 tons of ships; the United States, 339,648.

That is all I desire to state at this time.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. May I ask the gentleman to state what the authorization is in France and Germany, if he has that information at hand?

Mr. FOSS. Germany, 284,589; France, 230,868; Japan, 206,593—during the last five years.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, in speaking in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] striking from this bill the provision authorizing a $10,000,000 battle ship, I do so not because I am opposed to building and maintaining a navy of sufficient size to meet all the necessities of the Government under any and all conditions, nor because I believe we have reached the era of universal peace. I do so, Mr. Chairman, because I am not in sympathy with the policy just announced by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs or the policy advocated by the Administration. Under their policy the size of our Navy is to be determined relatively by the size of the navies of other countries regardless of our own necessity. I do not believe that the American Congress is justified in proceeding upon the theory that, because other countries have authorized so much naval construction this year or last year, we should authorize a like amount. The policy implies a total disregard of necessity or expense and that, like children competing for the most glittering and expensive toys, we must compete with the nations of the world in the construction of the largest and most expensive battle ships in order to satisfy our national pride—vanity. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have only a few minutes.

Mr. FOSS. The question of comparison was brought up by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and not by "the gentleman from Illinois."

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Illinois gave that as one of the reasons, and so did the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND], for the necessity for this battle ship of unprecedented size. Neither of them, however, mentioned the fact that only recently England condemned seventy of her naval vessels and sent them to the scrap pile; nor did they mention the extent to which this competition with the principal nations of the world is to be extended. We have under construction to-day thirty-eight vessels of all classes, with a displacement of 384,780 tons. We have constructed, all told, 270 vessels, with a displacement of 711,262 tons. In other words, we have to-day in course of construction more than 50 per cent of the total tonnage of our present Navy. These thirty-eight vessels will not all be completed until 1910, and possibly not until 1912. Before that, the plan of naval construction, judging by the past, will have so changed that the plan of this battle ship will be comparatively obsolete, and, like the vessels of the English navy, will be on the way to the scrap pile.

Mr. Chairman, I insist that because of the large number of vessels now under construction, with an aggregate tonnage of more than half of our present Navy, there is no necessity for Congress at this session to authorize the construction of a naval vessel which it is popularly claimed will cost $10,000,000, or twice the cost of any battle ship we now have or that we have heretofore authorized. [Applause.]

THE COST OF MAINTENANCE.

But, Mr. Chairman, will the people be as unmindful of or as indifferent to the cost of maintaining the Navy when the vessels now authorized are completed and in commission as they are to-day? Do they now know, do the Members of this House know, what it will cost every year to maintain our Navy when in 1910 all the vessels now authorized are completed? Based on the present cost, the estimated cost will then be not less than $76,091,000 annually. This is merely for maintaining the Navy; it does not include construction or reconstruction. Think of it, Mr. Chairman. That amount is almost as great as the total expenditure of the Government this fiscal year for all governmental purposes outside of the expenditures on account of previous wars and the cost of preparing for wars we anticipate.

The total cost of maintaining a first-class battle ship is, in round numbers, including everything, almost a million dollars annually. We are also told that the life of a battle ship is not to exceed sixteen years. In view of these facts, Mr. Chairman, I respectfully submit that if it is not advisable to halt in our ambitious naval policy, it would at least be wise to mark time for a year or two, or until we can ascertain with some certainty the extent to which we are creating permanent burdens that must be met by taxes collected from the people. [Applause.]

The following statement will show in detail the cost of maintaining our Navy:

Vessels of all types in process of construction		38
Displacement of same	tons	384,780
Vessels in navy June 30, 1905		270
Displacement of same	tons	711,262
Present estimated cost of maintenance		$60,000,000
Estimated cost of maintenance when vessels in process of construction are completed		$76,591,000

Statement showing cost of maintenance of a vessel of each type during the fiscal year 1905.

First-class battle ship	$634,255.54
Second-class battle ship	468,729.31
Armored cruiser	489,206.27
Protected cruiser	395,624.97
Monitor	209,273.56
Gunboat (1,710 tons)	175,429.43
Gunboat (1,177 tons)	133,314.46
Gunboat (1,000 tons)	117,860.89
Torpedo-boat destroyer	81,674.90
Torpedo boat (estimated)	34,000.00
Submarine torpedo boat	29,879.36

THE EXPENSE OF THE NAVY COMPARED WITH THE COST OF THE PANAMA CANAL.

But, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention, by comparison, to the rate at which we are annually, in consequence of our ambitious naval policy, expending money. We talk about the Panama Canal being the greatest undertaking any nation on earth has ever attempted. We speak of the cost of that great project almost in a whisper for fear that we may create an impression throughout the world that its enormous cost may impair our national credit or ultimately bankrupt the nation; and yet it may be of interest to Members of this House and to the people of the country to know that the Fifty-seventh and Fifty-eighth Congresses appropriated more than twice as much money for the Navy as it will cost to build the Panama Canal, according to the highest estimate that has yet been submitted. Let me give the exact figures.

Appropriations for the Navy, Fifty-seventh and Fifty-eighth Congresses.

Fifty-seventh Congress, first session:
Regular appropriation bill	$78,101,791.00
Deficiency appropriations	6,280,760.80
Total	84,382,551.80
Fifty-seventh Congress, second session:
Regular appropriation bill	$81,876,791.43
Deficiency appropriations	2,795,257.30
Total	84,672,048.73
Total, Fifty-seventh Congress	169,054,600.53
Fifty-eighth Congress, second session:
Regular appropriation bill	97,505,140.94
Deficiency appropriations	6,127,974.46
Total	103,633,115.40
Fifty-eighth Congress, third session:
Regular appropriation bill	100,336,679.94
Deficiency appropriations	15,084,317.81
Total	115,420,997.75
Total, Fifty-eighth Congress	219,054,113.15
Total regular appropriations and deficiencies, Fifty-seventh and Fifty-eighth Congresses	388,108,713.68

From these figures we see how insignificant is the cost of the Panama Canal when compared with the cost of our Navy, for which, in the Fifty-seventh and Fifty-eighth Congresses, we appropriated $388,108,713.68. These two Congresses appropriated, therefore, twice as much money for the Navy as the highest estimated cost of the Panama Canal.

Mr. COUSINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have not the time to yield.

Mr. COUSINS. I was only going to ask the gentleman a question. How much did they appropriate for the Army during the same time?

Mr. TAWNEY. I am about to give the total cost for both establishments.

Mr. Chairman, we have had wars in the past and we are to-day appropriating money in consequence of that fact. I trust, sir, the Members of this House will carefully note the amount we are expending this fiscal year to meet the cost of wars in the past and the amount we are spending this year in anticipation of war. The total amount we are expending on account of previous wars is $175,957,638, and in anticipation of war $199,702,081.44. This includes both the naval and military establishments. The total, therefore, expended this fiscal year for previous wars and wars for which we are now preparing is $375,659,719. Our total revenues for this fiscal year, excluding postal receipts, will not exceed $589,093,000.

What, then, does this expenditure mean to the people? It means, Mr. Chairman, that we are expending this year for war and in preparation for war 63¾ per cent of the total revenue of the Government outside of postal revenues. It means an expenditure this year on account of war $28,000,000 greater than our total revenue only nine years ago. In other words, 63¾ per cent of our entire revenue, exclusive of postal receipts, will be paid this fiscal year on account of our military and naval establishments maintained in anticipation of war and for objects the result of wars in which we have heretofore engaged.

Mr. VREELAND. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have no time.

Mr. VREELAND. The figures you have just given to the committee——

Mr. TAWNEY. I think it would be of interest to the committee to have an itemized statement of these general facts, and I think also that it would be of interest to the country.

Mr. VREELAND. I desire to ask the gentleman if the figures he has just given include pensions?

Mr. TAWNEY. With the permission of the committee, I will give the several items which go to make up this startling total.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend until order is secured.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the committee will extend my time five minutes, I will give all the details.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. VREELAND. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes when his time has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now I will answer the gentleman from New York by giving the detailed statement.

Mr. VREELAND. Now, I want to ask the gentleman if the figures he has given to the committee include pensions? And I will ask him further if he does not consider that the pensions this nation has paid is on account of lack of preparedness for war?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not. For the information of the House and the country, let me read the statement I have referred to.

Appropriations for fiscal year 1906 on account of wars.

Pension appropriation	$138,250,000.00
Board of Pension Appeals	64,500.00
Pension Office, salaries	1,937,210.00
Pension Office, special examiners, salaries and per diem	512,500.00
Pension Office, salaries, deficiency	2,650.00
Deficiency, Army and Navy pensions	4,500,000.00
Artificial limbs	425,000.00
Soldiers' Homes (including State Homes)	4,988,259.00
Deficiencies, Soldiers' Homes	173,609.03
Back pay and bounty	200,000.00
Arrears of pay, etc., war with Spain	100,000.00
National cemeteries	303,810.00
Interest on the public debt	24,500,000.00
Total	175,957,638.02

Appropriations, 1906, in preparation for war.

Army appropriation act	$70,396,631.64
Deficiencies, military establishment	935,609.16
Deficiencies, War Department (specific)	581.05
War Department, salaries	1,799,356.00
Naval appropriation act	100,336,679.94
Deficiencies, Naval Establishment	14,962,466.77
Navy Department, salaries	739,660.00
Fortifications appropriation act	6,747,893.00
Military Academy act	673,713.38
Arming and equipping the organized militia	1,000,000.00
Military posts	1,200,000.00
Military parks and other miscellaneous objects under War Department	578,480.50
Armories and arsenals	331,000.00
Total	199,702,081.44
Total appropriations for 1906 on account of and in preparation for war	375,659,719.46

But let me give you a few more facts in the hope that I may induce this House to at least mark time for a year in the further accomplishment of our present ambitious naval policy. A comparison of the total expenditures this year on account of war and anticipated war shows that they are in excess of the total annual receipts of the Government each year from 1880 to and including 1897.

The statement is as follows:

Estimated receipts for 1906	$589,093,000
Percentage of appropriations and expenditures for the fiscal year 1906 on account of and in preparation for war	63⅔

Total appropriations for 1906 on account of and in preparation for war exceeded receipts of the Government, as follows:

1880	$42,133,108.48
1881	14,877,426.89
1884	27,139,849.54
1885	51,969,013.08
1886	39,219,992.40
1887	4,256,441.80
1892	20,721,935.22
1894	77,937,700.21
1895	62,269,644.35
1896	48,683,519.08
1897	27,938,014.30

In other words, Mr. Chairman, I repeat that we are this year expending on account of war and in preparation for war almost $28,000,000 more than the revenues of the Government amounted to only nine years ago, or in the fiscal year 1897, just before the Spanish-American war.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Does the gentleman consider the care of cemeteries a proper charge in anticipation of war? [Laughter].

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not include the care of cemeteries in the amount appropriated in anticipation of war. I said national cemeteries cost $303,000—that is, on account of war, and the item is stated under that head.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my purpose in calling attention to these facts and these expenditures during the current fiscal year is in the hope that I may arrest the attention of the House and of the people to the fact that if we are to give the interior of our country the appropriations that are demanded, that are required, that are necessary for river and harbor improvement, for Government buildings, and for other governmental purposes, it will be absolutely necessary for Congress very soon to do one of two things: Either commence curtailing expenditures in preparation for war or increase the taxes of the people for the purpose of meeting those expenses and the current expenses of the Government. [Applause.]

I maintain that we can very safely dispense with the authority for the construction of this battle ship at this session of Congress at least. We have thirty-eight vessels that are to-day in course of construction and will not be completed until 1910. Congress will be in session every year, and if the necessity arises no question will be made in favor of authorizing another battle ship, or two more if necessity requires it. But at this time, in view of the enormous expenditure of the Government on account of wars past and anticipated, I submit in all fairness and in the interest of the people that we ought to postpone authorizing this battle ship for at least a year, and thus delay carrying out this ambitious naval policy, which has been carried on during the last nine years far in excess of what was ever expected or contemplated when that policy was adopted in 1883. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, when the war with Spain began we had 55,000 tons of battle ships. When the battle ships now authorized are completed we will have 350,000 tons of battle ships. In other words, we have already authorized more than six times as many tons of battle ships as we had during the Spanish war.

Another thing. When the Spanish war began we had authorized 200,000 tons of all classes of war ships under the new naval policy. To-day we have authorized more than three and one-half times that. We have authorized now 730,000 tons of war ships. The amount of tonnage of battle ships already authorized and in course of construction is nearly twice that of the completed battle ships. The table attached to the report of the chairman of the committee on this bill says that there are 196,000 tons of battle ships in the course of construction, and to that amount must be added the ships that were authorized during the last session of Congress, 16,000 tons each, which are not yet in the course of construction. If you add those ships you will find that it will increase the tonnage considerably. Of all classes of war vessels we have unfinished ships to the amount of 345,000 tons, including those authorized last year.

So, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the remarks by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and by the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors are especially appropriate at this time. We have, in my judgment, authorized the most effective navy in the world except one, England alone surpassing us. Our meats and our wheat and corn fields and the Dominion of Canada are perpetual guaranties of peace with England. For our purposes, in my judgment, the American Navy is more effective than the navy of France is for her purposes. France is surrounded by nations that have animosities against the French people. The European nations stand with imaginary lines only between them. There are more opportunities for war between European nations with each other than between us and any other country or all other countries.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I rather infer from the tenor of the gentleman's remarks that he thinks it is desirable that we should have a navy as efficient as that of any large nation in the world.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. We ought to have a navy sufficient for our purposes. We ought to have a navy sufficient to meet any other country, and I think we have a navy sufficient to meet any navy with which a possible conflict can be expected.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Should not the units be fairly comparable with other units of large nations?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I will inform the gentleman now that we have a greater navy in tonnage than any other nation in the world except England and France, and, if you will eliminate from the French navy those vessels laid down prior to 1890, we have a greater tonnage than France.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then, as I understand the gentleman, the total that the committee gives in its report, so far as France is concerned, should be minimized to the extent that the gentleman suggests.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. There are deductions that should be made from it, in order to compare ships of what we call "the new Navy," or the up-to-date ships of efficiency.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. In order to make it an effective and efficient navy.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. But I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the President of the United States, in his last annual message, said that we had a sufficient number of units in our Navy to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, the President takes the position that we have already a sufficient number of units. Why should we proceed to build other units when we have one-half of our authorized units still unfinished and incomplete?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I suppose the gentleman will agree to this, that it is not altogether a question of units so much as it is the efficiency of the unit.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. That is right.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If it be true, and that I am not entirely advised about, that two or three or four of the great leading nations of the world have battle ships that are vastly superior to ours, in order to make our Navy equally efficient and effective, isn't it really necessary to have at least one that will compare with the ships of that character, I would ask the gentleman?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, the same argument would require the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] to advocate a complete revolution of our Navy and the building of every one of our ships upon the greatest scale. Why have only one mammoth battle ship? It can not cover all the waters of the sea. Suppose we come in conflict with another nation, this particular ship can be in but one place at a time. I desire to say there is very grave difference of opinion among naval experts as to what is the best type of battle ship.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That raises another question.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Yes; a question that I will perhaps raise later by an amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me, is it not true, doesn't he think it is true, that one ship, say, of 20,000 tons is not equal in fighting capacity to two ships of 10,000 tons each, for the reason that the one ship is not divisible? It is the old lesson of the Spanish Armada and Drake's ships, is it not?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I will state in reply to the gentleman from Mississippi, that here are two things to be considered. In an actual battle there is an opinion that one immense battle ship of 20,000 tons would be as effective and perhaps more effective than two of the smaller ships whose tonnage together would amount to that. Then there is this other idea, that while the one ship of 20,000 tons can be put at only one place at a time, the two ships, together amounting to 20,000 tons, could be at two different places at the same time. Mr. Chairman, I take it there is not a man in this House who does not desire when a ship is constructed that it shall be of the very best type and of the greatest effectiveness for all practical naval purposes. There are many things to be considered in determining upon the type of battle ship. We must necessarily to a great extent yield to the opinions of naval experts, but as has been asked, why should we deem it so very important to authorize an immense ship now, the exact character of which no man knows? The gentlemen who appeared before our committee have no well-defined plans in their own minds, as I recall it, of the kind of ship that they desire. This great battle ship of the English navy, the Dreadnaught, recently launched, and the two great ships of the Japan navy, the Satsuma and the other, whose name I do not now recall, are of immense tonnage, about 19,000 tons each, but exactly how the Dreadnaught is constructed, the location of her turrets, the location of her guns, the details of construction, we do not know. Indeed we do not know that these great tonnage ships are the formidable instruments of war that they are reputed to be. Let us see how that great ship Dreadnaught behaves herself when in service before we authorize the Navy Department to build some ship of equal tonnage to imitate her when we know so little about the detailed parts that will determine her efficiency as a machine of war. I would be very glad to see the Navy Department instructed to prepare the plans of what, in its opinion, is the best type of modern battle ship and submit those plans to Congress at the next session. I have prepared an amendment looking to that end, which I shall later submit if the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] shall be defeated, which, however, I hope will not be the result. I am in favor of striking out this provision, but in case we fail in that, then I believe it will be the part of wisdom to call upon the Navy Department to make a thorough investigation as to all the characteristics and necessities of modern battle ships, considering all the disputed points and to then report to Congress at its next session the best type of battle ship. We can then adopt such type, and authorize the construction of one, or as many as we see fit. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the figures of the gentleman from Minnesota should not be sent to the country without some explanation. If I understand him correctly, he made a charge that this nation has gone to the limit of the greatest extravagance, beyond the limit of prudence, in providing for its defensive branches of the service. In his figures he includes——

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will pardon me——

Mr. HULL. I have only five minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Inasmuch as you are imputing to me something I did not say I want to correct it. I did not say it had gone to the limit of the greatest extravagance.

Mr. HULL. When it goes to 63½ per cent of the entire revenues for the defensive branches of the service then I am correct in my statement.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is your conclusion; that is not mine.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman includes in those figures about a hundred and forty millions for pensions. He includes in those figures several million dollars for the maintenance of the National Homes and national cemeteries. I want to submit to this House and the country that there is no other nation on earth that pays more in pensions for a war that has passed more than forty years than the combined expenses of the army and navy except the United States of America. It is not a question of defense in paying these large sums; it is a question of gratitude of the people of the United States to the men who made it possible for us to have a great, united, free, and prosperous country, and it is not fair to charge them up to current cost of national defense. [Applause.] Take the naval appropriation this year, with its $100,000,000; take the Army appropriation for this year, with $70,000,000, and we are paying more of what the gentleman from Minnesota calls war expenses for our pensions, our national cemeteries, and our National Homes than the combined appropriations for this year for the defense of the country. I want to say to you gentlemen who are opposed to this ship one other thing. In my judgment this great, strong, rich, prosperous country, with over 4,000 miles of seacoast, with our possessions in the West Indies and on the China Sea and in the Pacific Ocean, that one battle ship a year is an exceedingly moderate programme. We do not propose to build it now, and we will never propose to build it the same year that we pass its authorization. It is extending over a period of years. These gentlemen seem to believe that France and Germany and the other nations will stop building ships because they have not authorized as far ahead as we. That will not be true. By the time their programme now authorized by law is carried out they will have gone on beyond what they are to-day, and if this great people that I hope in the near future will dominate the seas, if it is to maintain its prestige, if it is to maintain its greatness, it can not afford at this time to stop and say we have called a halt in upbuilding the new navy of the United States. Mr. Chairman, I represent in part a State in the heart of the country. No invasion can come to us from any foreign foe; but I represent a people who believe that this Government is strong enough and great enough and patriotic enough to go on with the work in the moderate way proposed of building up the American Navy so that every nation on earth may know that we will maintain our prestige at home and abroad. [Applause.]

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio. He has possibly an additional reason for opposing a ship which, when built, may not be able to use our harbors. He is chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and perhaps fears that this great ship of 20,000 or more tons will have the experience that three or four of our present 16,000-ton battle ships have recently had in the harbors of New York and Norfolk. The battle ships Kentucky, Kearsarge, and Rhode Island have all been aground recently. If sufficient depth of water is not found in the harbors of New York and Norfolk, it can not be found on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. You do not understand the chairman of that committee expends all of this money in deepening harbors?

Mr. RIXEY. No; but he is to some extent responsible for their deepening.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I desire to assure the gentleman that my views on this subject are entirely uninfluenced by anything I have to do with rivers and harbors.

Mr. RIXEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I understand the provision for this battle ship, it is not a business proposition. Heretofore the naval bills have provided for ships and limited them in size and cost, the provision being for so many thousand tons' displacement. The provision in this bill is without limit, the requirement being—

> One first-class battle ship, carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any known vessel of its class.

England is building an 18,500-ton ship. It is stated that Japan is building one which will be of twenty or twenty-two thousand tons. According to this bill the battle ship is to be as great as the greatest.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RIXEY. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If the indefiniteness of the provision is the criticism, does the gentleman propose to limit it by an amendment, or does he oppose it on that ground and then declare it should limit it?

Mr. RIXEY. One objection to the provision is that there is no limit of size placed on this vessel.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What should be the limit of size?

Mr. RIXEY. I think I can show the gentleman before I get through, if the ship is to be authorized at all at this time, that it is the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy and the opinion of the Bureau of Construction and Repair that the ship ought not to exceed 16,000 tons.

In reply to an inquiry as to what the cost of this ship would be, I received the following letter from the Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, D. C., March 30, 1906.

MY DEAR MR. RIXEY: Replying to your letter of March 29, I have to say that the following are the estimates of the cost of a battle ship approximately 20,000 tons, said battle ship to carry twelve 12-inch guns and twenty-six 3-inch guns:

Hull and machinery	$6,000,000
Armament	2,600,000
Armor	2,050,000
Total	10,650,000

* * * * * * *

Yours, sincerely,

N. E. MASON.

Hon. JOHN F. RIXEY, M. C.,
House of Reprcsentatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Chairman, no recommendation came to the Naval Committee for a battle ship of this kind. The Secretary of the Navy in his report expressly recommended only 16,000 tons. The Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, the Bureau which is most intimately concerned in the building of the ship, recommended only 16,000 tons, and stated there was not sufficient depth of water in some of the harbors, and gave other reasons. There was no evidence before the Naval Committee for a provision of this kind.

The following from The Scientific American of April 21, 1906, seems to be well considered.

UNIFORMITY IN BATTLE SHIPS.

It has long been recognized by naval men that a fleet which is made up of heterogeneous types of ships—that is, of ships of different size, speed, armament, and protection—is at a great disadvantage from a tactical point of view when it encounters a fleet of the same total displacement whose ships are arranged in groups of identical vessels. Recent naval operations have emphasized very strongly the truth of this principle, and the best organized navies of to-day are building their ships in groups or classes of four, six, or eight. Ships of such a group have the great advantage that their speed, their coal endurance, and their turning diameter are identical, and that in the various evolutions the vessels will, in their new positions, find themselves at all times grouped symmetrically.

It is earnestly desired by our Navy Department that when new ships are authorized they shall conform to some existing design until they have been brought up to the proper number of units to form a class, say, of half a dozen; and they are naturally opposed to the construction of any new type of vessel which is not likely to be repeated sufficiently often to form a new group.

The decision of the House Committee on Naval Affairs to recommend an appropriation for the construction of a battle ship which in size and power will surpass any ship at present under construction has naturally appealed to the nonprofessional world, or rather to that section of it which believes that there is a certain national prestige conveyed by the possession of a "world beater;" but our naval constructors, who have learned to subordinate sentiment to reason and cold facts, look very unfavorably on the proposition. They are well aware that, although we are perfectly well able to build a 20,000-ton ship of 20 knots speed, such a vessel would be in a class all by itself, and when maneuvering in the company of smaller, slower, and less powerful ships would have to accommodate herself to their limitations, and therefore would be unable to realize in action her full efficiency. The plans proposed for our latest ships, the Michigan and South Carolina, will give us a magnificent ship, of which we ought to build at least half a dozen before launching out into new types.

Although our earlier battle ships differ widely in type, our later ships resolve themselves into classes, each composed of about five or six units. Thus, the three ships of the Maine type and the three of the Illinois type give us a class of six approximately similar ships. In the Virginia class we have five ships absolutely identical; in the Louisiana, Vermont, and New Hampshire classes we have six practically identical battle ships, in which the Mississippi and Idaho, were it not for their low speed, might possibly be included, bringing the number up to eight; while in the South Carolina and Michigan, our latest designs, we have a class which, as we have said, should be extended until it includes five or six identical vessels. By the time Congress has made sufficient appropriation for this purpose, the Navy Department will have formulated its ideas as to the best type of vessel to build, if we decide to construct ships of 18,000 to 20,000 tons displacement.

But it will be an unhappy day for the Navy Department if the Bureau of Construction is to be controlled by any popular "whip creation" theories of war-ship construction.

Mr. DAWSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. RIXEY. I will.

Mr. DAWSON. Has he not overlooked the statement of the Secretary of the Navy before our committee, in which he said:

I would prefer to see two 16,000-ton battle ships built rather than one larger one. If we have to come down to one battle ship, then I recommend that it shall be the largest and strongest battle ship that is yet known to be afloat.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to continue his remarks for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RIXEY. I will read from the report of the Secretary of the Navy. Referring to the Japanese-Russian war, he said:

As a matter of fact, no battle ship of as much as 16,000 tons displacement was used by either belligerent, and while, on the one hand, at least one great power has determined upon the construction of an 18,000-ton battle ship, and others are reported to have in contemplation vessels of from 20,000 to 22,000 tons, on the other, some authorities think these leviathans will prove less formidable and more vulnerable than battle ships of 16,000 tons, such as our contemplated South Carolina and Michigan.

The Department has been caused serious concern by the conflicting advice on the last-mentioned question, tendered it by its authorized expert advisers. The general board recommended some time since that the two last-mentioned vessels be increased in displacement from 16,000 to 18,000 tons. The board on construction dissents from this recommendation. The general board has further recommended the authorization of three battle ships, to cost approximately $8,250,000 each, and to be of such tonnage as will suffice to secure an armament that the two last-mentioned vessels be increased in displacement from this recommendation likewise, and advises instead three battle ships at an estimated cost of $7,500,000 each, with an anticipated armament of eight 12-inch guns and substantially the same tonnage as is contemplated for the South Carolina and Michigan.

After very carefully weighing these divergent views, I feel that it is not as yet sufficiently clear that the larger and more costly battle ships would have such increased efficiency in battle as to justify the certain addition to the public burdens involved in accepting the views of the general board.

Then on page 21 he says:

The same reasons which lead me to think it inexpedient to enlarge the dimensions of the South Carolina and Michigan lead me to advise that the battle ships to be authorized be of the type recommended by the board on construction. Should professional opinion become substantially unanimous in advocating larger vessels before the construction of these ships is actually commenced, their plans can be, of course, remodeled.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. May I make an inquiry?

Mr. RIXEY. You may.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the gentleman from Virginia controvert the fact stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DAWSON] that, notwithstanding the report of the Secretary of the Navy, he stated before the committee on his examination what has been quoted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DAWSON]?

Mr. RIXEY. I do not know that it was so stated by the Secretary of the Navy before the committee; it may have been.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It comes a long way from sustaining your assertion.

Mr. RIXEY. I think it does sustain every assertion. The recommendation of the Secretary, after reviewing the whole subject, after stating that there were two opinions—one in favor of the larger ship and the other in favor of the 16,000-ton ship—was that he favored and recommended the 16,000-ton ships.

Mr. DAWSON. What report was that which the gentleman was reading from?

Mr. RIXEY. The report of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. DAWSON. As submitted to Congress last December?

Mr. RIXEY. Yes.

Mr. DAWSON. May I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the statement which I read was made by the Secretary of the Navy before the House Naval Committee on March 22, 1906, several months after this report was written?

Mr. RIXEY. I understand; but let me ask the gentleman if the Secretary did not, in the same hearing before the Naval Committee, adhere to his recommendation in the report?

Mr. DAWSON. He recommended two battle ships.

Mr. RIXEY. And only 16,000 tons.

Mr. DAWSON. But if he could not get the two, then he recommended the provision which I formerly read.

Mr. RIXEY. And of only 16,000 tons.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman does not want to be understood as saying that the Secretary confined himself in case of one battle ship to one of 16,000 tons?

Mr. RIXEY. No; I do not.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I thought your statement would bear that construction.

Mr. RIXEY. But the Secretary was very emphatic before the committee, as he was in his report, that he favored and recommended the programme of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, which was for the 16,000-ton ships.

Let us consider, Mr. Chairman, in the first place, the necessity for this battle ship costing nearly $11,000,000. The Secretary of the Navy, in his report, on page 23, says, as I understand it, there is no necessity for enlarging the Navy at this time.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Notwithstanding the fact that he had recommended two additional battle ships?

Mr. RIXEY. I will read you what he states. He says:

If circumstances remain as they now are I see no reason to suppose that the number of ships in our Navy need increase; on the contrary, it is reasonable to anticipate that their number will be reduced, and even reduced materially, within the next five years.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. As I understand it, notwithstanding that statement in the same report he recommends and insists on two new battle ships of 16,000 tons. Is that what the gentleman means?

Mr. RIXEY. He recommends the two battle ships in the same report.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What statement does the gentleman think he ought to take?

Mr. RIXEY. I shall take the one that there is at this time no necessity for an increase.

Mr. DAWSON. Will the gentleman just as lief read the statement in the report of the Secretary of the Navy, contained in the last paragraph, on page 23?

Mr. RIXEY. I am going to read that now—the last portion of that same paragraph. I have not time to read it all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DAWSON] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia may have five minutes more in which to continue his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RIXEY. In the same paragraph is the statement:

In other words, the aggregate of our battle ships, armored cruisers, and coast-defense vessels built, building, or authorized would seem, according to present indications, sufficient to provide for any contingencies within the limits of probability.

I suppose that is what my friend refers to.

Mr. DAWSON. No; the sentence I referred to is the one which just follows.

Mr. RIXEY. In the next paragraph?

Mr. DAWSON. The next two sentences.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman did not have time to read them.

Mr. RIXEY. He says in his opinion practically what the President stated in his message. He says the number of units was sufficient at present for the Navy.

Mr. DAWSON. Does he not say in the next sentence that it should not be understood?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Misunderstood.

Mr. DAWSON (reading):

This statement, however, must not be misunderstood. It does not at all mean that we should give up building new ships; on the contrary, the necessity for vessels of an improved type to take the place of those now recognized as obsolete, or evidently destined to become such, has grown plain and urgent.

Mr. RIXEY. I understand. We have got to replace these ships as they become obsolete. Nobody questions that. The question is about adding new ships to increase the Navy. There are no battle ships of the United States Navy that are obsolete. Not one. There is one now in the second class of battle ships, but even that is in use.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I am assuming that the Secretary of the Navy is an intelligent man and familiar with the Department under his charge, and that he estimates that in order to maintain the existing efficiency of the units, by reason of the fact that vessels are growing obsolete; that vessels must now be authorized in order to maintain practically the existing units in the Navy; and his advice is to have two battle ships of 16,000 tons each, or, in default of two, one, the largest that floats. Now, the committee have recommended one instead of two. Am I correct?

Mr. RIXEY. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then in order to maintain the existing efficiency of the Navy and its units intact, in the opinion of the Secretary they have got to have built this large battle ship. Is not that correct, from his standpoint?

Mr. RIXEY. I do not know that that is his opinion. If it is, I do not think it well founded.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is not that a fair statement?

Mr. RIXEY. Possibly, of his opinion, but not of the necessity. He recommended two battle ships, and he placed it on the ground, largely, that a number of the monitors were old and ought to be replaced with battle ships.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I said a moment ago, there is no contention but what battle ships and armored cruisers and other ships of war, as they become obsolete, must be replaced. We have built and are building twenty-eight battle ships, and we have built and are building twelve armored cruisers. These twenty-eight battle ships and twelve armored cruisers make forty of the largest war ships. The life of a battle ship is, according to naval experts, about twenty years. Therefore these ships have to be replaced every twenty years. With forty ships, that is an average of two ships a year; and as soon as they become obsolete we have, therefore, got to continue our building programme at the rate of two great war ships each year.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. How long has the programme been going on?

Mr. RIXEY. In the neighborhood of twenty years.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then from your argument we ought to have two battle ships in this bill now.

Mr. RIXEY. No, because the present ships are not obsolete. New ships can certainly wait until we pay for what we have contracted for and are now building. We still owe about $50,000,000 on ships already authorized.

The President in his annual message to Congress in December, 1905, stated:

It does not seem to me necessary, however, that the Navy should—at least in the immediate future—be increased beyond the present number of units.

The Secretary of the Navy in his report also stated, "If circumstances remain as they now are, I see no reason to suppose that the number of ships in our Navy need increase. On the contrary, it is reasonable to anticipate that their number will be reduced, and even reduced materially, within the next five years." This is rather more than I have ever contended for. Let us omit the building programme for two years, pay off what we now owe on ships, and then go on and proceed to replace the ships as they become obsolete.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I ask that the gentleman may have five minutes longer.

Mr. RIXEY. I will only take about two minutes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman has been interrupted a good deal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Virginia be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, in addition to this the statement has been made, and is not questioned, that we are now building more battle ships than Great Britain, and, while the navy of France is placed in the table here as being superior to that of the United States, the fact remains that we have more tonnage in battle ships than she has. The statement was made before the Naval Committee that in time of war the strength of the nation was really measured by battle ships and not by smaller craft.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is it not true that the Secretary of the Navy and the President of the United States, when they make their estimates on the present size of the Navy, estimate the vessels under construction as a part of the units, and that they recommend their programme upon the basis of these vessels when they are completed?

Mr. RIXEY. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If that is true, and we have been building ships for twenty years, and vessels have been going out of commission, by reason of becoming obsolete, two every year, is it not true that we have to have two vessels every year to maintain the existing number of units?

Mr. RIXEY. I have just stated that we will have to provide two ships a year, and will have to begin that programme in a few years.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But this bill only provides one.

Mr. RIXEY. Yes; but there is now no necessity for any. We have forty new battle ships and armored cruisers, about half of which are not yet completed, and they are not paid for by $50,000,000.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is a matter of no concern.

Mr. RIXEY. Yes; but the gentleman must realize that it is a matter of considerable concern. It is time enough to replace them when they become obsolete.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I suppose I fully realize the fact that a battle ship that is not now completed is not 20 years old. I suppose I realize the further fact that we began twenty years ago to build the Navy, and there are some ships now 20 years old. Those are the ships that are to be replaced by building new ships every year. Now, if my statement is correct, we ought to have two vessels in this bill to maintain the existing units. If the 20-year-old ships go out at the rate of two every year, then we ought to put in two ships. It is not a question of whether they are paid for.

Mr. RIXEY. The gentleman's premises are entirely wrong. Our ships are comparatively new, the oldest not over 15 or 16 years, and one-half not yet completed.

Mr. TALBOTT. But they were not all authorized at once.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Of course not.

Mr. RIXEY. They could not be built at one time. We have not a battle ship that is obsolete.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What about the Texas?

Mr. RIXEY. I will say that I understand the Texas is yet a good ship. She never was a first-class battle ship.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. How old is she?

Mr. RIXEY. I do not know. I understand it was authorized in 1886. It was probably completed within four or five years after that date. It is probably 15 or 16 years old and I believe is the oldest ship in the Navy. We owe $50,000,000 on those already authorized, and we ought to divide it up and pay $25,000,000 a year until it is paid, and we can then appropriate $25,000,000 every year to take the place of the obsolete vessels. If the naval bill is to be kept within the limit of $100,000,000 annually, we should only replace obsolete ships.

Mr. TALBOTT. Do we owe $25,000,000 or $1,000,000 on a completed war vessel?

Mr. RIXEY. I do not suppose that we owe anything on a completed war vessel.

Mr. TALBOTT. The gentleman means that we shall stand obligated to pay $25,000,000 when the vessels already authorized are completed?

Mr. RIXEY. Yes; we owe on contracts already let and to be paid when the vessels are completed $50,000,000, which will go to the shipbuilders and for armor and armor plate.

Mr. TALBOTT. They are contracts under existing law and existing appropriations, and some of them will not be completed for three or four years.

Mr. RIXEY. Yes.

Mr. TALBOTT. When we authorize this vessel there will be a time limit, and the next year the gentleman will make the same argument that on uncompleted vessels we owe so much money. We do not owe the money until the vessel is completed.

Mr. RIXEY. It is not to be paid except as the vessels are completed, but the contracts are made and we are obligated for the money. We are building thirteen battle ships and six armored cruisers, and we owe $50,000,000, and we can apply that money for the next two years and then there will be plenty of time to authorize new ships. We have not the men now to command the ships that are already in commission. The condition will probably be worse when the thirteen new ships are added to the Navy.

Why not look to the question of providing officers and men for the new ships? Not much pressure for that, but unlimited pressure for new ships, costing nearly $11,000,000 each, the money for which goes almost entirely to the shipbuilders and the armor-plate trust. Little wonder at the never-ceasing demand for the authorization of more ships.

The two battle ships authorized in the last naval bill, a little over twelve months ago, are not yet contracted for; and yet we are now urged on, as if the safety of the country depended on it, to authorize the Navy Department to contract for another ship to cost nearly $11,000,000. If this is done, then the Navy Department will be authorized to make contracts for three battle ships, costing over $25,000,000. In my judgment there is no justification for this condition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY] has called attention to the real point at issue in this debate. The question is not, as some gentlemen seem to think, a question of the increase of the Navy; it is simply a question of maintaining the present efficiency of the Navy. As the President said in his annual message to Congress last December:

> We have most wisely continued for a number of years to build up our Navy, and it has now reached a fairly high standard of efficiency. This standard of efficiency must not only be maintained, but increased. It does not seem to me necessary, however, that the Navy should—at least, in the immediate future—be increased beyond the present number of units. What is now clearly necessary is to substitute efficient for inefficient units as the latter become worn out or as it becomes apparent that they are useless. Probably the result would be attained by adding a single battle ship to our Navy each year, the superseded or outworn vessels being laid up or broken up as they are thus replaced.

The Secretary of the Navy in his last annual report to Congress has this to say of our naval policy:

> The aggregate of our battle ships, armored cruisers, and coast-defense vessels built, building, or authorized would seem, according to present indications, sufficient to provide for any contingencies within the limits of probability. * * * This does not at all mean that we should give up building new ships; on the contrary, the necessity for vessels of an improved type to take the place of those now recognized as obsolete, or evidently destined to become such, has grown plain and urgent.
> Our programme of naval construction for the future, in so far as it relates to our fighting fleet alone, should consist in substituting five new battle ships and two new armored cruisers for the oldest vessels of these types on our register, and five more battle ships for the ten coast-defense vessels of the monitor type, and that these substitutions should be made, at latest, within the next six years.

Now, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY] states that he is in favor of maintaining the present efficiency of the Navy. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has called attention to the fact that if the battle ship proposed in this bill is authorized it could not be built until 1910 or 1912, and possibly later. Before that time shall have arrived there will be at least four of the present battle ships and two armored cruisers which, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy, should be replaced by new and efficient ships. The battle ship Texas was authorized by Congress in 1886, and, as the gentleman from Virginia states, the average life of a battle ship is twenty years.

Mr. RIXEY. When was that battle ship completed?

Mr. DAWSON. I could not tell. I do not know when it went into commission; but it seems to me it is fair, inasmuch as we are only making an authorization in this bill, to compare the dates of authorizations. In 1890 the Indiana, the Massachusetts, and the Oregon were authorized; so that in three years from this time twenty years will have expired since their authorization. Now, as everyone knows, the strength of the Navy is represented by the strength of the ships that can take their places in the line of battle. The lesson of the war between Russia and Japan was that the Russian navy was crushed by the concentration of the fire from the heavy guns on the Japanese ships. The lessons of modern warfare have proved that efficiency in the line of battle rests with the big guns, and it rests in concentration of fire. The 16,000-ton ships which we are now building contain four turrets, with two 12-inch guns in each turret. Subsidiary batteries have been dispensed with to a large degree. Other nations appear on the sea with vessels of greater speed and better protection, carrying ten 12-inch guns, with turrets so arranged that they can point six of those guns straight ahead or six on a broadside. An enlightened naval policy dictates that in point of efficiency our Navy should be up to the highest standard.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY] has stated that we are building more battle ships than England is. I have here the report of the Board of Admiralty of the British nation, submitted by them to Parliament and through Parliament to the public.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Iowa may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I have heard it said that England and the other great nations have decided not to build any more battle ships until the question of international disarmament is settled by the next Hague conference. The report of the board of admiralty in this particular may be of interest. Here is what they say:

> At the present time strategic requirements necessitate an output of four large armored ships annually, and unless unforeseen contingencies arise, this number will not be exceeded. The period of building is to be two years, and therefore four ships will be laid down each year, and there will be eight ships in course of construction in any one year either in the dockyards or by contract. While the board anticipates at present that the output of four large armored ships a year should suffice to meet our requirements, there would be no difficulty whatever in increasing this output to whatever extent may be necessary in consequence of any increase of naval power abroad.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAWSON. Yes.

Mr. RIXEY. The statement I made was based upon the report of the chairman of the Committeee on Naval Affairs. It is headed "The strength of the principal naval powers," and under the head of "Great Britain, battle ships, first class," he has the statement that they are building 99,050 tons; that France is building 89,190 tons; that Germany is building 78,000 tons, and the United States 196,200 tons, which is nearly twice what Great Britain is now building in battle ships.

Mr. DAWSON. I do not see any conflict between that statement and the statement that I made. Here is England building four battle ships a year.

In the face of the recommendation of the President and the Secretary of the Navy as to the need of new vessels of an improved type to replace obsolete ships, opposition arises in this House to the construction of a single battle ship, and a battle ship simply to replace one of those which is now or must soon be put into the reserve.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Does the gentleman from Iowa think that we should measure our Navy by that of Great Britain?

Mr. DAWSON. No; I do not.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. What share of its navy does he think we ought to have in the United States?

Mr. DAWSON. I do not know as I would care to go into proportions, but I do not think it is necessary for us to maintain a Navy equal in size to that of Great Britain.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Then is not the comparison based on the statement that they are laying down four battle ships a year fallacious?

Mr. DAWSON. No; but when you come to compare four to nothing, it has a part in this debate.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. But it is not four to nothing.

Mr. DAWSON. But if the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio prevails it will be four to nothing.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. But there are ships under construction, finished year by year. One other thing, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa, what is the date of the document from which he read?

Mr. DAWSON. This is dated November 30, 1905, and was submitted to Parliament December last.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Is it not true that the chancellor of the exchequer has said since that time that the reason for carrying out certain recommendations was simply because it was a legacy from the preceding ministry and that he favored a substantial abatement of the naval programme?

Mr. DAWSON. I have not seen that statement. I did, however, see a statement, carried in the Associated Press dispatches of last evening, that England was putting into her reserve a large number of ships and supplanting them with active fighting ships—fighting vessels of new and improved types. This dispatch states that since 1902 forty battle ships and cruisers have been removed from the active list and placed in the reserve.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That pertains, however, to the removal of those that have become useless or worn out. Is there any promise in that paragraph or in any programme presented to Parliament that they are to be replaced by new ships?

Mr. DAWSON. I will ask to insert the dispatch, as follows:

LONDON, May 15.

The rapidity with which Great Britain is removing from the navy all but her really efficient war ships was evidenced by a statement presented to Parliament to-day, showing that no less than forty battle ships and cruisers have practically been removed from the list since 1902.

The exact figures are: Eight battle ships, ten armored cruisers, and three protected cruisers removed from the fighting effective, while three battle ships and sixteen protected cruisers were reclassed, placing them on the list of ships of the smallest fighting value. During the same period the construction of thirteen new battle ships, eighteen armored cruisers, and four protected cruisers was commenced.

If we are to maintain our Navy on a comparative basis to the navies of the world we must pursue the same policy that they are pursuing—that is, when a battle ship becomes out of date, put it into the reserve, for coast defense or harbor defense, and replace it with a modern, up-to-date fighting machine, and that is all this committee proposes to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VREELAND. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. VREELAND. I want to suggest to my colleague on the committee that his statement of England's building operations, as I understand it, is entirely too modest. As I understand it, England in the last three and a half years has authorized thirteen battle ships and eighteen armored cruisers, vessels which cost as much as a battle ship, in addition to the great building of torpedo boats, submarines, and cruisers of different types.

Mr. DAWSON. I thank you for the information.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 72, line 4, after the word "dollars," insert the following: "Provided, however, That if at the second Hague conference any measure should be adopted for the limitation of the naval forces of the great powers, or for the settlement of international controversies by judicial decision and by means of arbitration treaties, the Secretary of the Navy shall have discretion to defer the construction of the ship herein provided for."

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Does not the amendment to strike out the paragraph take precedence? Ought not that first to be voted upon?

The CHAIRMAN. The rule is that an amendment calculated to perfect a section or paragraph has priority over an amendment to strike out or substitute for a paragraph.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Is this really an amendment to perfect the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. It is an amendment offered to perfect the paragraph, and it has priority over the motion to strike out.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. For the information of my friend from Ohio, I will say I made sure by consulting the Chairman before I offered this amendment, and this is the only way for it to be considered, because in case the gentleman's amendment should be adopted, there would be no chance for my amendment to be voted upon at all; hence I offer it at this time.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. In that case I will say to the gentleman there would be no occasion to offer the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. There might be.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The rule is that a motion to perfect the paragraph always comes before a motion to strike out.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment of which I gave notice in the course of general debate, and which I am happy to say the American press has generally indorsed since it has been printed in the RECORD. I offer it in good faith and in the hope that it may be adopted, believing as I do that a great majority of the constituency of every Member on this floor will favor my proposition if it is properly explained to them.

My position is different from the position of those who are opposing this battle ship for financial or other reasons. To the men interested in the movement for international arbitration or peace it is immaterial how many battle ships the different nations are constructing to-day, and I, for one, shall not antagonize this battle ship. I shall vote, if considerations of patriotism demand, if the national safety demands, if considerations of patriotism demand it, for ten or twenty more battle ships. I shall do it, of course, with all the scorn that is in me, because I abhor the system which makes them necessary. But the peace movement should not be confounded with any movement or any attempt to decrease naval expenses or military expenses here and there. If that movement succeeds, if there will be an agreement at The Hague this fall in favor of international arbitration, or in favor of some more civilized method by which to settle international difficulties than by war, why, then, the battle ships we are constructing now and which other nations have constructed will become absolutely unnecessary. They will be thrown in the junk shop. So I consider, Mr. Chairman, every addition to the Navy and every addition to the Army will not defer but will hasten the moment when nations will be compelled to come to an agreement of that kind. If nations go on at the present rate, the time is near when they will have reached the point of exhaustion, when they will be compelled to meet around the green table and discuss measures for the settlement of international difficulties by resorting to arbitration instead of resorting to war.

This amendment, as I said, does not antagonize the naval programme, but its effect will be to leave to the Government of the United States a free hand, so that if at The Hague an agreement should be reached, the President and the Secretary of the Navy will have discretion to construct or not to construct this battle ship. If an agreement is reached, of course, the construction will be unnecessary. If no agreement is reached, the naval programme as outlined in this bill will be proceeded with and a ship will be constructed. But the amendment serves another purpose. It is the only chance, my friends, for this House and this Congress to go on record as saying to the other nations that we are in sympathy with the efforts being made all over the world to reach an international agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] asks that the gentleman from Missouri continue his remarks for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In this connection I desire to call to the attention of the House the action recently taken by the House of Commons of England. It appears from press dispatches that a member moved a resolution calling on the Government to take drastic steps to reduce the expenditures for armament, and press for a resolution of armament reduction by international agreement at The Hague conference. This resolution was discussed, and finally the representative of the Government, Sir Edward Grey, the foreign secretary, was called upon for an expression of opinion. He said he believed the declaration which was contained in Mr. Vivian's motion was worth having for the effect it might have on other nations. There was a growing disposition, he said, in other countries for some reduction. He thought the question should be discussed at The Hague, but it would depend upon the responses of other nations. The Government welcomed the motion. He hoped the other nations would regard it as an invitation from the British House of Commons to respond to their feelings in the matter. And then the report goes on to say that the motion was adopted. Since the counter motion has been withdrawn, I take it, Mr. Chairman, that that motion was adopted unanimously by the House of Commons of England.

My amendment, gentlemen, gives you an opportunity to accept that invitation extended by England. It gives you a chance to say to the world that the American Congress, too, is ready to countenance the efforts which are being made in behalf of international peace.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Is it not absolutely certain that a battle ship will be built if your amendment passes and you leave it to the discretion of the President?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It is not; because the amendment says if an agreement is reached as to the limitation of armament or an international agreement to settle difficulties by arbitration, in that case the Secretary of the Navy shall defer the construction of the battle ship.

Mr. COCKRAN. I should like to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRAN. I recognize him as a great authority on this question of international arbitration. Is it his idea that by facilitating the construction of this ship and thus increasing our armament we will contribute to a universal conclusion in favor of disarmament? Do I understand him correctly?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No.

Mr. COCKRAN. I understand the gentleman is going to vote for this particular ship upon that ground?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; not entirely upon that ground.

Mr. COCKRAN. I would like to know——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I stated, as a general proposition, Mr. Chairman, that the increase of armament all over the world will have the effect of hastening the day when an international agreement will be reached.

Mr. COCKRAN. I understand the gentleman abhors the appropriation of money for these engines of destruction; but, nevertheless, will vote in favor of this particular one under the impression that by exhibiting this tendency to huge military establishments in its fullest development the world will become disgusted with it. Am I right?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am very glad the gentleman asked this question, because it gives me an opportunity to emphasize what I had forgotten.

The position of the friends of arbitration and peace upon this question is this: We say that as long as there is no international agreement, as long as nations must be ready to defend their rights by armament, just so long will the friends of arbitration and peace be ready to vote for such armament as may be deemed necessary by the Government for the national defense. They will not go further. They will not authorize armament for an aggressive war. But if the Government in its responsibility says to me that this battle ship is absolutely necessary for the defense of American interests, I am willing to vote for it.

Mr. COCKRAN. I will ask, is the gentleman voting for this battle ship because somebody else has told him it is necessary to our defense, or because in the exercise of his own judgment as a Member of this House, as well as an illustrious apostle of arbitration, he considers it necessary? Is he voting in favor of building this ship on his own judgment or on the judgment of somebody else?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am voting on my own judgment.

Mr. COCKRAN. On his own judgment. I would like to ask the gentleman if on his own judgment he believes the construction of this ship is necessary to our defense?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am not clothed with the authority or with the responsibility—and I am glad I am not—to say whether or not this battle ship may become necessary for the defense of our interests; but the gentleman will admit that it might. It might become necessary as long as there is no international agreement between the nations, as long as present conditions exist.

Mr. COCKRAN. I can not see upon what ground it can be considered necessary, according to the gentleman's own statement. But I ask the gentleman again, is he voting in favor of this measure upon somebody else's responsibility or his own?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COCKRAN. I trust the gentleman's time will be extended a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the time of the gentleman being extended for two minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I take it that when a naval bill is proposed here containing a provision for a new battle ship that that naval bill has not only the earmarks of the experts of the Navy Department, but that it has the approval of the officials of our Government who are responsible for conducting the Government's affairs. I take it that the President, the Cabinet, and all the powers that are conducting our Government to-day have been consulted and earnestly believe that battle ship to be necessary.

Mr. COCKRAN. Why does the gentleman, whom we all admire so much, exclude himself from the number of those powers?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Because this is a question which belongs to diplomacy and not legislation.

Mr. COCKRAN. Then I understand the gentleman to say that in voting for this battle ship he is voting for it because he considers the House of which he is a Member has nothing to do with it, but outside parties think its construction advisable?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Not at all.

Mr. COCKRAN. If the gentleman is voting for this battle ship because he, exercising his own judgment, believes it is necessary to our defense, then I would like to ask him from whom we are to apprehend danger, in order that I in my uninformed condition may get the benefit of his information in reaching a just conclusion. In discussing the advisability of constructing this huge battle ship, the gentleman says he will vote for it because it is necessary for defense, and then he adds that he has not reached this conclusion upon his own judgment, but on that of somebody else. Now, I ask if it be his conception of his duty as a Member of this House that he should cast his vote for the construction of this battle ship on somebody else's judgment?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Now, I want to say to the gentleman, as one who has been to some extent identified with the movement for international arbitration and peace——

Mr. COCKRAN. That is the reason I asked the question.

Mr. BARTHOLDT (continuing). That I do not want to expose this movement to the charge of it being actuated by unpatriotic motives, nor do I want to lose, for the purpose of attaining my object, the support of those who are now clamoring for a new battle ship.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman surely does not intend to vote for the construction of a battle ship in obedience to the clamor of its advocates in order to promote the reign of peace?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I simply do not want to sacrifice the interests of the cause I have at heart in taking the position I take.

Mr. COCKRAN. Which cause? The cause of duty as a Member of this House or some other cause, supported by somebody outside the House?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The cause of arbitration.

Mr. COCKRAN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he is proposing to vote for this battle ship on this floor, not because he believes it necessary, but in order to win the favor of its supporters for a general scheme of arbitration?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Oh, no; and the gentleman himself knows better.

Mr. COCKRAN. That is what I understood from the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I stated my position fairly.

Mr. COCKRAN. I would like the gentleman to correct me if I am in error.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If the gentleman had only honored me with his attention——

Mr. COCKRAN. The closest. The gentleman does me but faint justice when he suggests that I did not listen closely to every word of his.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, all I can add in answer to the gentleman's question is to repeat what I said before—that the men who are responsible for the conduct of our Government are the best judges as to what armaments we need, and I take it that the legislative branch of the Government has but little connection with diplomacy. I take it——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, concerning the relative merits of two battle ships of 16,000 tons each and one of twenty or more thousand tons I have nothing to say. Concerning the purely technical questions of the manner of construction and type of ships and of their relative fighting value I say nothing, because I know nothing. My observations will be addressed solely to what I conceive to be the proper policy for this Government with relation to the Administration idea of developing a large and aggressive navy, and particularly along the lines which I think will and should lead to international agreements for arbitration.

Mr. Chairman, what I have to say and the way I shall vote will be found entirely consistent in that matter. I do not see how gentlemen can speak one way and vote another. It is impossible to follow the reasoning of Members who preach peace and feverishly prepare for war. To support the ideas of The Hague tribunal with mere lip service is not an important contribution to the cause of peace. A reduction in the world's armament is the chief purpose of The Hague court of peace, and this is an opportunity for the American supporters of that exalted idea to stand up and be counted on the side of righteousness.

The spirit of arbitration appears to be more in evidence in Europe, where one would expect to find greater difficulty in its execution, than here in America, where obstacles in the way of its application are so few and insignificant as not to be worth consideration.

In the United States we have no disputed boundaries. The last we had was with the powerful British Empire. It was submitted to arbitration and satisfactorily adjusted. The history of neither country suggests that a peaceful solution of the question was secured because either was afraid of the issue of war. A native of one and descended from the other, I am proud of the fact that both possess a high order of physical courage. I am still prouder of the fact that in a great crisis both have shown high moral courage also.

The outcome of that case ought to be an inspiration for the submission of all international quarrels to a court of arbitration.

Before the last general election in Great Britain Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, now prime minister, in an eloquent speech at Albert Hall, in London, said:

I rejoice that the principle of arbitration has made great strides, and that to-day it is no longer counted weakness for any of the great powers of the world to submit those issues which once would have been referred to the arbitrament of self-assertion and of passion to a higher tribunal. But it is vain to seek peace if you do not also ensue it. I hold that the growth of armaments is a great danger to the peace of the world. A policy of huge armaments keeps alive and stimulates and feeds the belief that force is the best, if not the only, solution of international differences. It is a policy that tends to inflame old sores and to create new sores; and I submit to you that as the principle of peaceful arbitration gains ground it becomes one of the highests tasks of a statesman to adjust those armaments to the newer and happier condition of things. What nobler rôle could this great country assume than at the fitting moment to place itself at the head of a league of peace, through whose instrumentality this great work could be effected?

Gentlemen who advocate a large and warlike navy in this country may question the sincerity of the prime minister's speech, because the British naval budget again provides for an increase of the sea power of Great Britain; but they are only casual students of the European situation who do not understand that the Liberal Government in England is driven, against its will, into these extravagant military expenditures.

Trade and political jealousies between England and Germany and the steady development of the sea power of the German Empire compel the British, who want peace and disarmament. to continue in a course which their better nature abhors and their judgment holds unnecessary if arbitration can be agreed upon. But these conditions do not vex the United States, and need not keep us out of the paths of peace, wisdom, and economy. The geographical isolation of our country, its vast population, and exhaustless resources put us into a class by ourselves. We have no neighbors who are dangerous, unless we except the Japanese, who are near the Philippines, and who, if they are half as clever as we have been led to believe, wouldn't take the islands if we offered them as a gracious gift.

Menaced by no one, endangered from no source whatever, why should we commit the folly of undertaking this mad shipbuilding competition with Great Britain? Even if England were not, as I firmly believe she is, our sincere friend, Canada, which we could easily invade from the land side and no doubt capture, is a hostage which she would not sacrifice. Canada is England's pledge of peace with us. But I do not like to even consider our relations with Great Britain from the point of view of possible hostilities. England is governed by enlightened statesmen and controlled by public opinion, which in all intelligent and free states is a higher and greater power still. Public opinion in England would not tolerate the thought of a war with the United States. It would be justly condemned as a crime, and any government which even coquetted with the idea of war with this country would be kicked out of Parliament House by an indignant public. Then, this being true, British naval development is not aimed at this country. Her statesmen do not want to commit suicide. They appreciate the importance to their own people of keeping the sea open to the great Anglo-American trade. Their people must be fed and clothed, and the grain and cotton of the United States are essential. Idle Lancashire looms and a hungry mob in London are more to be dreaded than a war with any power of continental Europe. English naval growth may be viewed as a suspicious and warlike circumstance by Russia, Germany, or France, but for this country it can only mean the certainty that we will continue to send cotton to Manchester and corn to London over a sea kept open mainly by British taxpayers.

All we need to do, Mr. Chairman, to maintain peaceful relations with the rest of the world is to adhere to the traditional American policies and stay at home and mind our own business. We ought at once to agree to treaties of arbitration with every civilized government on earth. We ought to begin by making such treaties with all the other American republics.

It would be an act of generosity and justice from a great, strong government to weaker states that are sincerely trying to develop the same political ideas. For great states with undisputed reserve military force to suggest such treaties to smaller and weaker ones would be an act of grace that would command the applause of just and peace-loving men throughout the world. Such treaties will surely come. A growing public sentiment will demand them. Shall we not secure for our country the honor of leadership in a cause so glorious? Shall we not secure the peace and happiness of America by doing this righteous and reasonable thing? It can not be denied that all the Central and South American countries view us with a certain degree of alarm. Ought we not to allay their apprehension by giving them the assurance of solemn treaties of arbitration that will evenly match the smallest and weakest nation against the strongest? Let us put this great Republic at the head of the league of peace.

THE LARGEST BATTLE SHIP.

Now comes our Committee on Naval Affairs and asks this House to authorize the construction of the largest and most formidable battle ship afloat. The fierce spirit of the committee is shown in the language of their bill, which asks for "one first-class battle ship, carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any known vessel of its class." But as extreme as this language is, it is mild compared to that used by gentlemen in their speeches. They say that we must have a ship which will steam faster and farther and be altogether a more powerful engine of war than the new British ship, the Dreadnought. Does this suggestion grow out of the fact that our liberty or the integrity of our soil is threatened by any power on earth? Surely, sir, the most unblushing jingo will hardly have the presumption to say so. Is it merely to gratify national vanity? And if so, is it worth while putting our people to this great expense just to have the privilege of boasting that the greatest fighting machine afloat sails under the American flag? It is a sad commentary on the wisdom of our legislation that we can go on increasing commerce destroyers—for battle ships, in the last analysis, are essentially commerce destroyers—while our merchant marine does not grow.

It is generally understood that this unmatched battle ship will cost about $11,000,000 and that it will take nearly a million dollars per year to maintain and operate it.

To my friends from the South I want to suggest that the prime cost of the vessel represents the value of 220,000 bales of cotton at the rather high price of 10 cents a pound. Your constituents and mine will have to produce 20,000 bales of cotton each year just to meet the operating expenses of the ship.

One of the Representatives from Iowa [Mr. DAWSON], I believe, made an interesting speech here the other day in which he told of the bucolic glories of his State. Horses, cattle, sheep, and swine were eulogized for their contributions to the comfort and happiness of the human family. He grew most eloquent in telling how the barnyard fowls of Iowa preserved the balance of trade.

Even the wonderful fertility and industry of the Iowa hen will be worked overtime to meet these augmented and increasing expenses. At $1 per bushel, a price which is rarely received, it will take 11,000,000 bushels of wheat to pay for this one vessel that will certainly be worthless in twenty years, and may be obsolete even before it is finished. The farmers who are to earn this ship along with their daily bread by moistening the earth with the sweat of their faces will have to make an extra million bushels of wheat to pay for its operation for a single year. It will cost four or five million dollars more than we appropriate each year for our great Department of Agriculture. Yet we expect the Department to endure forever, and we know the ship will be in the scrap heap in a few years. I hope these facts will be well considered by the man who makes the wheat and the cotton.

HOW IT MAY BE USED.

The only possible reason I can see for this departure from our heretofore relatively peaceful programme is that the great ship may be used in the Philippines. It will be so powerful in its armament and have guns of such wonderful range that even the most remote mountain fastnesses of the Philippines will very likely be in the zone of danger. It will be a useful ally of Governor Curry, of Samar, in his proposed war of extermination against the Pulajanes. After a little target practice the smallest band of these naked savages hidden away in the coast ranges will make an unavoidable target.

In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I want the attention of the committee to the remarkable suggestion recently made by this same Governor Curry. It is taken from the Associated Press reports in the New York World of May 13:

WEYLERISM FAVORED BY OFFICIALS IN PHILIPPINES—"EXTERMINATE THE BREED" IS THE WATCHWORD BORROWED FROM SPANISH GENERAL.

MANILA, May 13, 1906.

Superintendent of Schools Hoover, of Samar, and several native officials of that island have arrived here on their way to Baguio, Province of Benguet, the summer capital, to visit Governor-General Ide. Mr. Hoover says:

"Ninety-five per cent of the natives of Samar are anxious to have the fanatics exterminated and absolute peace established. The native officials are organizing volunteers, who are scouring the mountains, guarding trails, and capturing or killing outlaws. It is estimated that 300 Pulajanes still remain in the mountains."

Governor Curry, of Samar, has proposed to turn over the Pulajane districts to the Federal authorities, have martial law proclaimed, and the fanatics exterminated. If General Wood agrees, he will put two regiments, backed by naval gunboats, on the island and in the adjacent waters, to keep the outlaws from escaping to neighboring islands.

Governor-General Ide has reached no decision in the matter.

The Pulajane leader is 64 years old, and has been in the mountains forty years.

It will be observed that this wonderful school superintendent, Hoover—his name deserves to be embalmed on the roll of infamy—says that "95 per cent of the natives of Samar are anxious to have the fanatics exterminated and absolute peace established." This report goes on to say that "Governor Curry has proposed to turn over the Pulajane districts to the Federal authorities, have martial law proclaimed, and the fanatics exterminated." There it is again, Mr. Chairman. Extermination is what they want.

No doubt this little plan of the worthy governor and his Christian superintendent of schools will bring peace to the Pulajanes, but it will be the peace of the grave. Not one of these savages is to be left alive if the governor, engaged in "benevolent assimilation," and the school superintendent, engaged in the spread of Christian civilization, are to have their way. And who can doubt, after Mount Dajo, that they will be given their way? Against that, Mr. Chairman, I protest in the name of all true sportsmen and in the name of science. I demand, sir, that Governor Curry be compelled to give the Pulajanes the same periodical immunity we give to birds and other game in this country. If the governor were a true sportsman, he would surely make provision for a close season. Even Filipinos should not be killed out of season. They ought to be given an opportunity to restock the preserves. But he advocates a war of extermination, unremitting and unrelenting. It is unsportsmanlike and will destroy the game.

When these unhappy islanders have gone the way of the buffalo, when only a few specimens remain alive, confined in some corral in the Philippines for the entertainment of tourists or exhibited in a dime museum in New York, students of ethnology will regret that the ardor of Governor Curry was not stayed somewhere short of extermination. Then, sir, while it is yet time, in the name of science and of sport I ask that a few specimens of the Filipino savage be kept alive, even if this great battle ship should never be put into commission. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to perfect my amendment by inserting three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to amend his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask if the correction is ready?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the words "Hague conference" the words "to be held within the next twelve months."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, I sympathize entirely with the purpose of The Hague conference. I sympathize entirely with the efforts of the gentleman from Missouri who will be one of the representatives in that conference from this country, to impart to representatives of other great powers the knowledge that the United States of America stands to-day, as it has stood throughout all its history, in favor of a peaceful means of settling difficulties.

But, Mr. Chairman, I can not support the amendment which is offered to this bill. I do not believe that by adopting this amendment the House would select the best means of conveying through our representatives to The Hague conference the sympathy of the American Congress to the object of that conference. Mr. Chairman, the American people do not need to say to the nations of the earth that they are in favor of peace and in favor of arbitration. Through all our history we have taken the lead in settling great questions of national concern by submitting them to arbitration. We all remember the Alabama award. We remember the depredations of vessels built in England to prey upon the American merchant marine during the war between the States.

We remember that at the close of the civil war the United States demanded damages of Great Britain for the depredations of those vessels. We know, and all the words knows, that we were in shape to enforce our claims. We had a million and a half of the seasoned veterans of Grant's army. The iron ships which had been invented during that war had made useless the wooden vessels of the world. We were hardened by four years of warfare, we were flushed by victory, and yet under all those circumstances, with national pride and the national feeling aroused and indignant, we went into the treaty of Geneva and submitted that question to arbitration, out of which came the Alabama award. So that the American people do not need to convey to the world a new message, that they sympathize with the doctrine of arbitration.

Mr. Chairman, we all know that these commissioners who meet at The Hague next year are clothed with no power. We know that they can resolve, but they can not bind the nations which they represent. We know that in every case they must go back to the nations from which they come to secure from them approval of any action that is taken there. We know from past experience that it may be one, two, three, or even five years before the last of the nations that take part in that conference shall have acted upon and either approved or disapproved of the resolutions adopted in that peace convention. In the meanwhile, what is the Secretary of the Navy to do about this ship that we authorize? How long would he wait under the amendment offered to this bill? Why, it proposes that in two cases the building of this great ship shall be suspended. If that conference shall resolve to curtail armaments, then in that case the Secretary of the Navy must suspend. In case they resolve that all future questions shall be submitted to arbitration the Secretary of the Navy is directed, in his discretion, to suspend the operations of building this ship. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that it would put the Secretary of the Navy in position where he would be criticised whatever he did, where he would be unable to know, as a practical proposition, what he should do. Mr. Chairman, I stand strongly in favor of sending our able representative to The Hague clothed with whatever authority the American Congress can give him, showing the sympathy of the American people toward the peaceful settlement of difficulties.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VREELAND. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The gentleman seems to be laboring under the misapprehension that I am to be a delegate to The Hague conference. That is not the case.

Mr. VREELAND. Well, I am sorry that my friend is not to be a delegate, if that is true.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I want to call the attention of my friend to the fact that after the first Hague conference every government signatory to The Hague convention within a reasonable time ratified the action of that body.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that the gentleman from Missouri is not to be a representative from this country in that conference. If he were, I should feel that our interests were left in safe and able hands, but let me suggest to the gentleman that instead of pressing this amendment upon the committee, instead of seeking to tie up and embarrass the building operations of the Navy, let him bring before this House a joint resolution declaring the sympathy of the American Congress with the efforts of their representatives in The Hague conference to obtain peaceful methods of settling difficulties among nations. I would almost guarantee that unless objection is made by the leader of the Democratic side such a resolution would go through by unanimous consent.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, there seem to be only two objections made here to the authorization of this large battle ship—one made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] that we have not the money to expend, and one made by the gentleman who put in the last amendment, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], and by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], that we ought to disarm in order to be leading the way toward the peace of the world.

Now, in the first place, in regard to the objection made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, it seems to me that he is a little unfair in charging up to the Navy all the expenditures that have come as a result of the great civil war and of all the wars and troubles that we have since had.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me, the gentleman from Minnesota made no such charge. I did not charge this expenditure to the Navy, but I said that on account of these things we were this year expending 63¾ per cent of the total revenue of the Government.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield to the gentleman. I think he made that same statement four or five times during his speech, but he did make the objection that because of the large expenditure we were now making as a result of the civil war we ought not to authorize this battle ship, and it amounts to the same thing in whatever words he sees fit to put it. When we appropriated one hundred and thirty-nine millions here for pensions, that met with the universal approval of everybody in the House. I do not recollect that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] objected. We were all in favor of it. That expenditure is a necessary and proper one and has nothing to do with the question as to whether we ought to keep up our Navy.

In the first place, this authorization of a new battle ship does not call for the expenditure of any money at this time. It is left in the discretion of the President as to when it shall be built. No money is appropriated at this time and will not be before next year or some later time. If, as has been suggested here, the gentlemen who are interested in rivers and harbors are opposed to any further expenditure for the Navy until they can get a large appropriation for the improvement of their rivers and harbors will wait until next year, they can then present those considerations to Congress and have it then decided whether any money shall be expended for the further construction of the Navy.

It is objected by several gentlemen upon the floor of the House that there should be no further increase of our fleet; that, on the contrary, our naval power should be decreased; and that we should commence disarmament as an example to other great naval powers of the world, and that such a step on our part would be a direct advance toward the arbitration of all disputes between nations and tend to general peace throughout the world.

It seems to me that this is a mistaken view of the situation. No step toward disarmament can be taken by us until there is some general agreement to that end by the great powers of the world. No other great power is now taking any step toward a reduction of its navy. On the contrary, the navies of Italy, France, Germany, Japan, and especially Great Britain are being greatly increased both in number of vessels and number and weight of guns. We can not continue to be classed among the great world powers unless we not only keep our present Navy in repair and condition for service, but also largely increase our present fleet. We need a great navy, not for the purpose of menace or war, but for purposes of peace, to defend the Philippine Islands and our other insular possessions, to protect our citizens in all parts of the world from insult and oppression.

The question, then, is whether the American people desire to continue the policy of this Government which was commenced in 1883, to build and maintain a powerful and efficient navy. That is the real question. The Secretary of the Navy and the President have both stated that in order to keep the Navy up to its present efficiency, not to increase it, but to keep it up to its present efficiency and strength, there ought to be one battle ship at least authorized each year, and that is all this provision attempts to do. It still leaves it in the hands of Congress to decide next year whether we have sufficient money to go on with its construction. I believe that our country ought to lead in the way toward peaceful solutions of international disputes and differences, but the only influence that the United States has in that way is on account of its power, on account of its powerful Navy and great naval victories of late years. It is only a few months since our President received the congratulations of the world upon his success in bringing about peace between Japan and Russia. The reason that he had the power and influence to do that, that he was called upon to do it, was because we had become one of the great naval powers of the world. If our Navy had gone to ruin, if we were then disarming, we would have had little to say——

Mr. JOHNSON. May I interrupt the gentleman——

Mr. WALDO. I refuse to yield; I have only a minute or so, and the gentleman can take his own time later.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALDO. I do not intend to say that we menaced Russia and Japan into making peace. Nobody believes that for a moment; but we all know that the peacemaker in the neighborhood is the strong man—among nations, the strong nation. It is not the weakling who has influence in the council of men or the council of nations.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. WALDO. I can not yield; I have only a few moments. This is one of the reasons why, if we desire to keep up the power and influence of our country, we ought to keep up the Navy at least to its present efficiency. There is another reason why we who live on the coasts, both the east and west coast of our country, think that there ought to be an efficient Navy. It is not a great while since people on the Atlantic coast were in great fear of having their cities destroyed by the Spanish fleet. If the Spanish admiral had sailed to this country instead of to the West Indies, the damage to our seacoast would have been many times the cost of our whole Navy. Those people who lived directly upon the coast remember that time very well—that there was a general fleeing from all exposed quarters, and the harbor lights were put out on our Atlantic coast from Florida to the northern point of Maine. That recollection is something that appeals to us on the seacoast. I suppose those gentlemen who live on the prairies of Minnesota or other parts of the West two or three thousand miles from either coast never felt that fear; but it was not an idle fear by any means.

Another reason, it seems to me, why we ought to keep up our Navy is because we are now considering the question of the great increase of our merchant marine. Because we had no Navy at the beginning of the civil war, our merchant marine was practically wiped off the sea. We have never been able to get it back, because there was such an impetus given to the English trade that we never have recovered, and never will recover until Congress does something to that end.

We have before us a great measure looking toward the creation of a great merchant marine. There is little use in attempting to cover the seas again with American merchant vessels if we have not a powerful navy to protect our merchant ships in all parts of the world. We have to-day the largest commerce of any country in the world, but it is carried almost exclusively by foreign ships. You may sail the world over and scarcely see an American flag in a foreign port, except upon one of our war vessels. We are paying yearly an immense tribute in freight to England, Germany, and other foreign countries to transport our goods to the world—an immense sum that ought to support a great fleet of American deep-sea going ships, enrich our country, and keep always in existence a great force of experienced and hardy sailors to man our Navy and defend our coast and interests in case of war with any foreign power. It is impossible, no matter what pains we may take or money we may spend, to have any great merchant marine without a great navy to protect it. The two must go hand in hand. It is not properly a warlike measure, but a measure that tends to peace for our country, protection of its interests and its citizens in the farthermost parts of the world, and gives to us a great voice and influence in promoting the peace of the world.

The American people will never consent to the dismantling of our fleet and the abandonment of our great navy-yards. It is a beautiful and iridescent dream to think that peace is to reign continually throughout the world, and that we shall be respected at home and abroad without the power and the Navy to enforce respect and peace. We shall have peace ourselves, and can aid greatly in enforcing general peace throughout the world only so long as we are armed and able to command it. I believe that the increase of our Navy must go on, and that the repair and building of war ships will and must continue until our nation is ready to fall into decay.

The gentleman from Ohio has referred to the fact that our war ships had been from two to four years behind in building, and gave that as one reason why we ought not to build any more naval vessels. If he will look at the paper he had before him at the time he will see that all of those ships that were two to four years, or even six years, behind in their date of completion were constructed in private shipyards of the country. There never has been one ship constructed in a private shipyard until the last—the Louisiana—that was constructed within the time limit of the contract. This is no reason why the building of war ships should be abandoned; it is no reason why we should abandon our Navy. But it is a very strong reason why we should keep our naval construction going on in the navy-yards, to compel private shipyards to complete their war ships on time and for reasonable prices.

It is, then, only a question of policy as to whether the new ships shall be built and repairs on the old ones be made in private or Government yards. The only objection made to the building of a proportion at least of the new war ships in our navy-yards is the claim that it will cost the Government more in its own yards than to have the ships built by private contract. If this were so, which, to say the least, is very doubtful, that reason would not be enough to overcome the many strong and cogent reasons for building in Government yards. In the first place, the excess of cost of the Connecticut, being built at the New York Navy-Yard, according to present figures, will not be over 9½ per cent over the cost of the original estimate. The alterations in the Government yards have been very much less than the alterations on the Louisiana at the Newport News yard. It is not known whether the private yard will not bring in a bill for loss in the construction of the Louisiana on the ground that she has cost more than they expected when they took the contract. Such claims have been made against the Government in the past, and are very likely to be in the future should it be found when the ship is completed that she has cost more than was expected when the contract and original estimates were made.

Naval Constructor Albert W. Stahl, at the hearing of the Naval Committee of the House, submitted the following table relative to certain private-built ships, showing that the total cost of such ships is considerably in excess of the contract price:

Comparison of contract price with total cost of certain ships.

The navy-yard at New York had to be prepared for the construction of its first battle ship, the Connecticut. Many delays occurred in getting together the necessary plant, in obtaining the necessary force of experienced men. There were delays in obtaining material, while the private yards obtained their material with less delay. The men at the navy-yard worked eight hours per day, while at the private yards they worked from nine to ten hours. The pay at the navy-yard has been as much or more for eight hours' work than was received at the private yards for nine or ten hours' work. With all these difficulties, the excess of cost is only 9½ per cent at the Government yard.

There is little doubt that hereafter, provided work is continued, that ships can be constructed at less expense than was the Connecticut, so that on the question of cost there can be little or no advantage with the private yards. If we may take the experience of England, where shipbuilding has been continuous in public yards, the cost will be somewhat less in our navy-yards, if we keep sufficient construction work there to keep the plant in condition and a sufficient force of experienced men constantly together.

It is absolutely necessary that we should have one or more navy-yards on the Atlantic and on the Pacific coast constantly ready with a sufficient plant and a large and efficient body of experienced workmen to make the large repairs that are necessary to keep our great fleet in seagoing condition and ready for service. Such repairs must be made at once, whenever the fleet or any of its ships go into harbor from a voyage. It can be done much better in the Government yards and will cost only a fraction of the charges at private yards. The difference in this item alone will make up many times any difference in excess of constructing the vessels at the private yards, and that must be done in order to keep a force on hand to make repairs on ships whenever they come into port, so that the force of men may be diverted from construction work to repair work.

A war ship constructed at Government yards under the immediate direction and supervision of the officers of the Navy will be better built than a ship constructed at a private yard. There would be the same difference as between a house constructed by day work under the direction and supervision of a competent builder for his own use and a house built by a contractor only interested in building the structure as cheaply as possible so long as a sufficiently fair exterior is shown to secure a ready sale. A ship built at the Government yard would practically be worth from 15 to 20, probably 25, per cent more than one constructed at a private yard, and the difference in expenses for repairs would more than equal the 10 or 15 per cent difference which it is now claimed would be the additional cost.

The Government plants for shipbuilding at the navy-yards have cost millions of dollars. If shipbuilding is discontinued at the yards these plants will deteriorate and become practically valueless and the Government would be without means to construct or repair ships in case of war or other great necessity.

Until the Government started into the construction of ships itself the private yards have been from six months to forty-six months behind in the completion of ships, so that the loss of interest in the money invested has greatly exceeded any difference now claimed in the cost of construction at Government yards.

The Government ought to be prepared and able to construct new torpedo boats, submarines, or war ships generally, with such new and secret improvements as may have been or are likely to be made in her yards if constantly engaged in construction, so that such new inventions and secrets may not become the property of other nations.

Lastly, it is absolutely necessary that the Government should have a certain amount of construction in the Government yards in order that its officials and constructing engineers may have any real knowledge of the construction of war ships, of the best means, appliances, methods of building, of the cost, and of the time of construction. Such knowledge can not be obtained from books or the casual supervision of construction as the Government gives to ships constructed for it at private yards.

If the merchant-marine bill, which has already passed the Senate, should pass the House and become a law, there would be such an immediate increase in shipbuilding for the merchant service that all of the private yards of this country and many more new yards would be overloaded with work for private persons and corporations. It is not proposed to abandon the building of war ships in the private yards, but under such circumstances as these the Government would be obliged to abandon the building of ships in private yards unless at a largely increased expense of cost of building at Government yards.

It is urged that only a small proportion of the Government shipbuilding should be done in the Government yards; a sufficient proportion to keep the Government shipbuilding plant in repair and order and to keep together a sufficient body of experienced and skilled men to be ready for repair work or for especial construction work that might be necessary in case of war.

There are now under construction in private yards some twenty-seven naval ships of various kinds, the total contract price for which is nearly $80,000,000. Of this $80,000,000 there still remains to be expended over $30,000,000. Certainly, under these circumstances at least, one ship ought to be kept under construction in each of the Government yards which is now prepared to do such work.

This country can not continue to be prosperous without great foreign commerce. It can not be assured that its commerce will not be swept away from the seas at any moment without a powerful navy. Congress has adopted the policy of sustaining and increasing the power of the Navy. The people have supported them in that policy, are supporting them, and will continue to support them. Such a Navy can not be maintained and kept properly equipped without great Government yards for the construction and repair of its ships. The Government can not now abandon the policy of building a portion of the ships to be added to the Navy in the Government yards without great loss in its shipbuilding plants and great detriment to its policy in maintaining and increasing its present naval force.

Mr. ROBERTS. At the opening of this debate the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, pointed out to the committee the great, and what I understood him to characterize extravagant, appropriations of the Fifty-seventh and Fifty-eighth Congresses along the lines of naval construction. Now, the gentleman from Minnesota was a Member of both of those Congresses, and I have no recollection whatever of his rising in his seat and calling the attention of either of those Congresses to the great folly upon which they were embarking. Yet to-day he rises and by inference, if not by direct charge, warns this committee that we are following in the footsteps of those two Congresses.

What are the facts? Why, Mr. Chairman, the programme recommended by the Naval Committee this year, of about 20,000 tons of new construction, is the smallest programme, with but one exception, that has been recommended since the second session of the Fifty-third Congress, in 1894, that exception coming in the first session of the Fifty-fifth Congress, in 1897. And I want to call the attention of the committee and of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] to a fact which seems to have escaped his observation, that the two Congresses which he has criticised for extravagant appropriations for war ships were on the down-hill side in the matter of appropriations. The high-water mark in the building up of our Navy was reached in the third session of the Fifty-fifth Congress, when there was authorized over 105,000 tons of new construction. And since that time, down to and through the Fifty-seventh and Fifty-eighth Congresses, there has been a marked and steady decline in the number of tons that has been authorized, with the exception of the second session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, where there was a slight increase over the preceding Congress. But the next Congress after that reduced the tonnage so much that the average of reduction remained the same. Now, we are asking but 20,000 tons of new construction, and in this connection, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the Committee on Naval Affairs has been somewhat unfortunate in the use of language in framing the bill. They say that, "For the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment." It seems to me we should have said: "For the purpose of maintaining the present efficiency of the naval establishment."

And I think I am warranted in that statement when we consider the message of the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Navy, both submitted to this Congress, in which they emphasize the fact that we should maintain the present efficiency of our Navy, and make no recommendation for further increase. I think I am fairly voicing the sentiment of the President, of the Secretary of the Navy, and of the members of the Naval Committee when I say that the recommendations this year are not along the lines of further increase of the Navy, but merely to maintain the present efficiency of the Navy we now have. That, I believe, is the policy of the committee and of the Administration, and I believe it should be the policy.

Not many years ago it was thought that we should build up a great Navy, that we should have at least forty-eight or fifty battle ships and armored cruisers and other craft in that proportion, but now the sentiment is that the Navy is large enough in the number of its units, but those units should be kept to the highest state of efficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachustts asks unanimous consent that he may continue his remarks for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTS. Now, what does the Secretary of the Navy say along those very lines:

I think it may be safely said that if the situation was not complicated by any unforeseen development, the programme of naval construction for the future, in so far as it relates to our fighting fleet alone, should consist of substituting five new battle ships and two new armored cruisers for the oldest vessels of these types on our register, and five more battle ships for the coast defense vessels of the monitor type, and these substitutions should be made at latest within the next six years.

Now, it seems to me the Committee on Naval Affairs can not be charged with extravagance in following the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, who asks this House to provide for only one new battle ship.

And why do we ask for one new battle ship when the recommendation of the Secretary was for two? Why, the testimony before our committee, uncontradicted, was that the battle ship now provided for in this bill would be the equal of any two battle ships now afloat, and any two battle ships now afloat, of the class last authorized by Congress, would cost $15,000,000, and yet we have, if this bill becomes a law, one battle ship at a cost of $10,000,000, which is the equal of any two that would cost together $15,000,000. During the general debate on this naval bill the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], himself a gallant soldier and an ex-Speaker of this House, made use of a gem of thought which it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, should be emblazoned in letters of gold and spread over the desk of the Speaker of this House, where Members not only of this, but of all future Congresses might constantly have it before their eyes. He said, referring to that great saying of the immortal Washington, "In time of peace prepare for war;" he would amend it by saying, "In time of peace prepare to maintain it."

And that, Mr. Chairman, is the very purpose of the recommendations of this year, not to enlarge the size of the present Navy, but to have every fighting unit in that Navy of the latest and most improved type. And the time has come, Mr. Chairman, as anybody can see by looking at the ages of our present battle ships, when Congress must devote itself to a serious consideration of that point. Otherwise we shall see our present Navy deteriorate from year to year. And I do not believe it is the wish or desire of any Member on this floor, or of the American people, that the present Navy, in which they take so much pride, shall be allowed to deteriorate from its present standard.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. OLMSTED having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6128. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Pend d'Oreille River, in Stevens County, Wash., by the Pend d'Oreille Development Company; and

S. R. 59. Joint resolution relative to the appropriation for the native schools and reindeer enterprise in Alaska.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table, and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. R. 59. Joint resolution relative to the appropriation for the native schools and reindeer enterprise in Alaska—to the Committee on the Territories.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GILLESPIE] is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the item in this bill providing for an additional battle ship, calling for an expenditure of probably $10,000,000. I am opposed to it because I believe it is unnecessary and, therefore, will be an unjustifiable burden placed upon our people. Every right-thinking American citizen believes in this country's having an adequate Navy, but in considering the adequacy of our Navy there are two points from which to view it. One is a navy sufficient for purely defensive operations and the other not only for defensive, but for aggressive operations as well.

I insist that in view of our history and the general American spirit that a navy strong enough for our self-defense is all that we ought to have. Our people are now burdened with an annual naval expenditure exceeding $100,000,000, a sum much too large, in my opinion. It is a folly scarcely short of madness for us to enter the list with European nations in the struggle for the largest, most destructive, and expensive navy. They, at least, can appeal to the virtue of necessity behind their programme. England, France, and Japan can reasonably say: "Our foreign trade must continue or our people starve," but the United States can put up no such plea. Our country, compared to theirs, is but in its youth. We have vast acres of undeveloped territory. Our boundless resources have scarcely been touched. Our energies, properly organized and distributed, can find employment at home for a century to come.

Besides, Mr. Chairman, in every true sense, the American idea of commerce is based upon the idea of peace and not war. Trade arrangements between nations, as between individuals, are the result of agreement, where the minds of the contracting parties must come together by mutual consent, and I insist that it is wholly un-American, it is un-Christian, it is against the boasted civilization that we claim, to look upon commerce as any other than the product of peace, and he who views it from any other standpoint has his face turned to the setting rather than the rising sun.

Mr. Chairman, it strikes me as a cold, inhuman, dollar-blinded policy that would throw this nation of ours backward and call forth its lower rather than its higher virtues; that would place before us the dollar and say to us: "Sacrifice all to get this."

I call attention to an able speech delivered on the floor of this House on Saturday, May 5, 1906, by a Member of this House from Massachusetts, Mr. WEEKS, a gentleman for whom I have the very highest regard from a personal standpoint, and whose ability and patriotism none can dispute. I think this speech furnishes the keynote to the naval programme which is being, with great adroitness, placed before the American people. The fundamental idea is commerce—an extension of our commerce through the power of our Navy.

Mr. Weeks says:

The wars of the future will be waged for commercial or humane reasons, as have nearly all wars since the time of the first Napoleon. We, in common with all the great nations of Europe, have reached a condition where we produce more manufactured goods than we consume. We are all looking for markets. To insure our having a fair chance to trade with the whole world the open-door policy must be maintained, especially in the Orient; but if we were lacking in physical power, it is safe to say that the door to our trade in many localities would be closed. Gentlemen speak of the triumphs of diplomacy as indicating the folly of maintaining a large navy, but diplomacy would lose many of its laurels if a navy did not exist to insure a hearing and compel a respectful consideration of our demands.

Again:

Our trade commenced to increase about the time our Navy commenced to develop. Our Navy is our one advertising medium in the Orient. The fact that we showed great strength during the Spanish-American war, great physical power, appeals to those people. They buy goods of nations which show to them that they have physical strength.

Again:

But the fact is, Mr. Chairman, we need a navy large enough to meet the commercial rivals whom we would have to meet in case of difficulty. In other words, our building policy, in my opinion, should be placed upon what our rivals are doing.

Mr. Chairman, while this picture drawn by the gentleman from Massachusetts to my mind has its cold, compassionless eye fixed upon the dollar, blinded to all else; while no impulse of our higher Christian civilization stirs its features; while its ears appear to be deaf to the calls of the higher and nobler works of humanity, yet I must confess that the picture is true.

Mr. Chairman, let us consider for a moment how much heartlessness, cruelty, and audaciousness, not only to our people, but to the peoples upon whom we depend for our foreign trade, are involved in this proposition. This is a demand of the manufacturers of this nation. Only yesterday, in New York, the manufacturers' association with a whoop indorsed ship subsidy. They long ago said to our consuming masses:

Pay to us more for our products than you can get them for in the world's markets with free competition. Let us build up a great American manufacturing industry, and through home competition you will get manufactured products as cheaply as you can in the open world market.

They appealed to our patriotism, and we acceded to their demands, and we have borne the burden through the heat of the day. The time came when, through home competition, our people were getting cheap home-manufactured goods. The home market was preserved to our manufacturers.

Then these same manufacturers made new demands upon our people. They said to us:

You have given us aid. This aid is expressed in the increased capital represented by our stocks and bonds. We can not submit to home competition. It means our destruction as surely as foreign competition. Therefore you patriotic Americans who wish to keep up your American industries must permit us to consolidate and combine our industries so as to throttle home competition.

By word, expressed in the Sherman antitrust law, we have repudiated this demand, but by acts in letting this law remain a dead letter we have acceded to the demands of our manufacturers. We have permitted this consolidation and combination to grow and spread rapidly until no part of our country and no industry is free from its blighting touch. Home competition is practically destroyed, tariff duties are at their highest point, and just to the extent that home competition has been destroyed our people have been forced to pay higher prices for home-manufactured articles.

Now the proposition is submitted to us:

You Americans, through your patriotism, have poured your money into our coffers. We have denied you the benefit of home competition, which we promised you; you have acceded to our demands and are paying the additional heavy bonus to us. We still appeal to your patriotism and say to you the whole industrial fabric of America will tumble to ruins if you do not agree to still keep out foreign competition and submit to our trust prices. It is true we have not complied with our promises; we are making more than you can consume, but it is not wise for us to increase your consumptive capacity by lowering to you the cost of home-manufactured articles; we must keep the home market up, and therefore our surplus must go to the foreign consumer. You just be good Americans and submit to our programme as to the foreign market, and here it is: It is true the foreigner is willing to send his ships to our shores and take our products to foreign markets cheaper than we can carry them in our own ships, but we want our ships to act as commercial agents and find new fields and enlarge old ones for our products, but our ships can not compete with foreign ships; with your aid we have forced them to pay more for construction, more for labor. They require a bonus, a subsidy, and we, the manufacturers of America, want you good Americans not only to submit to what you have already submitted to with a patience that is a supreme wonder, in view of the American spirit of fair play, but we want you, the great mass of consumers of America, to pay, for our benefit, this additional bonus to American ships. It is true this will have a tendency to drive foreign ships off the seas, and it is true these same foreigners are the largest consumers of the great agricultural surplus of this nation, but we are not looking after the interests of agriculture.

Further, when we go to extend the market for our manufactured products and drive the foreign manufacturers from these fields, and the foreign manufacturer begins to look toward the source of strength of his new competitor and sees the immense tariff wall that keeps him out of the American market, he is liable to become irritated and realize the sense of injustice to him. He is apt to try to raise a tariff wall against us, and thus shut the door of trade against us as we have against him. To overcome this, we require a navy as strong as the strongest of our competitors, but you good Americans must furnish us the navy. Tax yourselves as you are already doing, at an annual rate of over $100,000,000; continue to build immense battle ships; furnish us the bravest of your sons to man these battle ships; give them freely as an offering to our greed. You good Americans, sacrifice them upon the altar of your country. Let American mothers suffer in silence at the loss of loved ones. Why should we stop to consider that when it stands in the way of extending our foreign markets?

Mr. Chairman, this whole programme is full of impudence, injustice, and cruelty as against the great agricultural interests of this country especially, and also in every other respect. The agricultural interests have too little regard paid to them on the floor of this House. The banking interests of this country have able champions here, the manufacturers have able champions here, the railroads have able champions here; but, I ask, where is the committee of this House that stands here and demands and insists upon the rights of agriculture, not only in spending a few paltry thousands in the distribution of seeds and the establishment of experimental stations here and there; but where is the committee of this House that takes care of the interests of agriculture in this country in the way of securing cheaper implements, cheaper machinery and tools, lower taxation, something that is a positive and direct benefit to the American farmer? Look the situation over, and the answer comes back to you: "There is no such committee in the great American Congress." Every other interest is taken care of here. Direct and specific measures tending to promote them come before this House and are ably advocated by members from the committees having these interests in charge.

It is true we all profess great interest in the American farmer—and this is not a mere profession; it is a genuine feeling—but I ask the practical question, What committee of this House has the interest of the American farmer directly under its care and is here insisting upon those measures that will make his burdens lighter by taking off him unjust and unreasonable restrictions and by giving him the privilege to buy what he must consume and use at a better advantage?

We say the American farmer has no right to ask direct aid at the hands of the United States Government. This is true; but also the one eternal truth remains, so far as national legislation is concerned, that the farmer has the right to demand of the Federal Government that the heavy burdens placed upon him by the selfishness of other interests, which has found expression in legislation, be lifted from his shoulders. I long for the day to come in the American Congress when the Committee on Agriculture will be so organized that it will be composed of able, patriotic men who will look at all legislation affecting the agricultural interests of this country from the standpoint of agriculture—men who will insist upon the rights of the American farmer, so that we will no longer present to the world the shameful spectacle of putting the American farmer in the background and letting all the benefits that we would have flow to him first pass through the hands of other interests that are organized and stand next to the seat of power.

Mr. Chairman, the American farmer is organizing, and he ought to organize. There is no other way to force the organization of such a committee in this House. We tax ourselves, we endure heavy burdens, we sacrifice the lives of our sons, and make heavy the hearts of our mothers, all in the interest of the American manufacturer, but what have we done to protect the American farmer?

In his name and in the name of the highest and best interests of the American people, in the name of the Christian civilization which we claim, I object to this increase of the American Navy.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, for various reasons, amongst which my physical condition is the strongest, I did not intend to participate in this debate. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], however, involves so much that is essential, in my judgment, to the credit of this Republic, the welfare of this people, and, indeed, the prospects of humanity that I can not allow this discussion to close without doing all that may be in my power to impress its importance on the committee.

Mr. Chairman, at the outset I ask attention to the extraordinary position assumed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT]. He proposes to vote in favor of constructing this enormous battle ship, not because he favors extensive armaments, but because he professes a desire for general disarmament. If I understand his argument, he proposes that we increase our armaments to such an extent that in time the waste will become so enormous and so obvious that we ourselves and all the world will recoil from it. Surely, sir, this means that in his opinion, the virtuous end at which he aims must be reached through immediate profligacy. For my part, I believe that vice should be cured by abstinence, not by satiety; by refraining from it altogether, not by indulging it until the capacity for indulgence shall be exhausted. I do not think the gentleman from Missouri will make as creditable an appearance before the next session of the International Peace Congress as his friends would wish, and as many of his admirers may expect, having supported by his vote the very policy of which he expresses abhorrence so eloquently upon this floor and elsewhere.

Mr. Chairman, I have looked through all this debate for a single ray of light on one aspect of this proposal to construct a battle ship larger than any in existence, which seems to me the crux of the entire question. Gentleman on the other side all say we must have an "adequate" Navy, but not one has told us what he means by that qualification. To the direct question what kind of a navy is an adequate navy, the answer is always evasive though seldom temperate. When members of the Naval Committee are asked, "Must we have a navy as large as that of Great Britain?" they answer, "No;" "Must we have a navy as large as that of Germany?" gentlemen become vague, but vehement; "Must we have one as large as France?" they become still more indistinct in meaning, though much more sonorous in rhetoric. If that word "adequate" could be defined, then we might at least have a basis of intelligent discussion.

While no one among the supporters of this proposal will tell us just what, in his opinion, constitutes an adequate navy, they are all unanimous and vociferous in saying they want a navy, a great navy, solely for defense—not to make war, but to maintain peace. This phrase seems to have soothed consciences naturally averse to violence and to have converted advocates of peace into supporters of huge armaments. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], for instance, seems to have persuaded himself that it is consistent to vote for armaments while advocating disarmament; that in voting to retain this section he is yet animated by an abhorrence of the very thing for which it provides. The gentleman from Missouri may not suspect it, but when he professes to be animated by a desire for peace while voting preparations for war he is not by any means original. He is using the language by which every invader, every aggressive conqueror, every land pirate, every disturber of the peace of the world since the beginning of time justified his violences. Did Napoleon Bonaparte ever admit that he wantonly disturbed the peace of nations for the mere love of war? Did not every proclamation by which he began a contest, even that against Russia, declare it was undertaken for the sole purpose of establishing peace and making it permanent? On that pretense, with that avowed object, did he not compel more than once all the nations of Europe to take up arms and engage in struggles which their own interests would have led them to avoid? Has the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] forgotten that when Napoleon III strangled the French Republic and established on its ruins his empire of corruption and aggression he launched that enterprise of treason, of bloodshed, and of violence with a declaration that "The Empire is peace?" Yet, with this unbroken record of men the most prone to war, the most lustful of conquest, the most reckless in aggression, the most pitiless in plunder, always professing love of peace while planning schemes of violence, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] believes that he can bear an effective part in promoting general disarmament and establishing the reign of peace throughout the world while he comes in here and votes for an increase of armament by adding to our Navy the largest battle ship ever constructed in the world, apparently under the impression that engines of war and carnage and destruction are effective implements of peace.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Of course, the gentleman does not desire to misrepresent me.

Mr. COCKRAN. It is the last thought in my mind.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In one word I can definitely state my position.

Mr. COCKRAN. With the understanding, of course, that it will not be taken out of my time, I yield the floor for as long as the gentleman may desire.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I do not go as far as some who are insisting that we shall have a navy as big and as powerful as would be strong enough to enforce the peace of the world, as, for instance, our friend Captain Hobson.

Mr. COCKRAN. How far in that direction does the gentleman from Missouri go?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. But on the other hand I do not want to go to the other extreme and deny to the Government that which it says it must have for defense.

Mr. COCKRAN. How far will the gentleman go in voting moneys to build naval vessels professedly for defensive purposes? My object in taking the floor is to get light on that particular point. What does the gentleman fix as the limit of his complaisance?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am willing to trust to the judgment of the Government on that.

Mr. COCKRAN. There I differ with the gentleman radically and irreconcilably. I believe that he and I and every Member of the House have taken an oath each one to exercise his own judgment on every proposition involving the expenditure of public money. There is but one way by which a dollar of the public treasure can be spent, and that is through an appropriation made by a vote of this House. There is but one excuse for an appropriation, and that is a conscientious belief by the House that it is necessary to provide for some public requirement. On the existence and sufficiency of that requirement each Member of this House must exercise his own judgment, under the dominion of his own conscience. No Member of this House can conscientiously vote for any disposition of public money on any judgment but his own. He can not accept the judgment of another, for that would be to abdicate his own functions, which would be a renunciation of his duty and a violation of the oath which he has taken to discharge it.

I do not think the gentleman from Missouri is in a creditable position at home or abroad when he stands on this floor and announces that he will vote an enormous sum out of the Treasury of the United States for the construction of a battle ship, not because he who is charged with the duty of guarding the public funds believes that the expenditure is necessary, but because it is judged advisable by somebody else upon whom the Constitution places no responsibility for public expenditures and in whose hands it places no authority over them.

Mr. Chairman, we are not trusted with the public purse to dispose of its contents as a matter of courtesy between departments. Before that trust was reposed in us we were required to give our solemn oath that we would exercise it for the highest interest of the American people according to our own conception of what is most likely to promote their well-being. Neither the gentleman from Missouri nor any other Member has any right to open the doors of the Treasury and allow one dollar to be withdrawn from it unless he is satisfied, according to his own judgment and his own conscience, that the appropriation is essential to the public welfare. The surrender of his authority by a Member of this House into the hands of any other person, whoever he may be, whether an officer of the Government, however exalted, or a suppliant for its favor, is an evasion of duty, and that is not a creditable attitude for the gentleman whose fame is dear to the people of Missouri, and whose intelligent exercise of his own judgment on the propriety of every expenditure is due to this House, of which he is a Member, and to the country, whose interests this House is bound to safeguard.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York have time to conclude his remarks.

Mr. FOSS. I think, Mr. Chairman, that we ought to fix the time.

Mr. COCKRAN. I will not be very long—not over ten minutes.

Mr. FOSS. I will not object to ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks that his colleague's time be extended ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, let us see whether the gentleman from Missouri and the other gentlemen on that side do not deceive themselves utterly and egregiously when they tell us that they favor the construction of this enormous ship, this huge engine of destruction, solely as a precaution for preserving peace.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] published a speech in the RECORD of the 10th, which had for its caption: "The man with the gun; is he an evil?" where, in rhetoric that is almost rhapsodical, he is painted as the hope of progress, the rampart of peace, the bulwark of civilization.

Reading that interesting effusion, I was struck with what seems to be a glaring injustice perpetrated, though quite unconsciously, by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Why has he lavished all his praises on one exponent of force while excluding from the scope of his panegyric all other agents of violence? While he rejoices in the activity and hopes for the permanence of the man at the gun, why does he not lament the disappearance of "the man with the tomahawk," who may have been of less actual efficiency, but who was certainly of equal enthusiasm in the destruction of human life? Why does he begrudge a word of praise to "the man with the bludgeon," whom people less enlightened than the gentleman from Pennsylvania send to jail or the scaffold when in the exercise of his activities he beats or kills a traveler on the public highway? Why is the gentleman forgetful of "the man with the brass knuckles," who, though he does not rise to the dignity of homicide, is yet deeply convinced that peace is demoralizing, and who, though he does not often destroy his neighbor's life, yet always does his humble but diligent best to reduce the pulchritude of his neighbor's countenance? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that notwithstanding the carefully studied language employed by its supporters it is the spirit of savagery that has been let loose in support of this proposal to construct the biggest engine of destruction in the world. Not one single argument has been advanced to the reason or intelligence of this House. There is but one redeeming feature in all this rhetoric. It shows that this country is still governed by a strong love of peace, since the men who favor building this battle ship pretend it is intended not for aggression, but for defense. But, sir, this assertion is more creditable to their ingenuity than to their candor. Defense against whom? Where is the foe that menaces us? The transparent character of this pretense becomes obvious the moment we examine it. In the face of this action, any attempt on our part to take the lead in a movement for peace becomes extravagant and farcical. How can we pretend to be sincerely desirous of peace while we are taking the lead in constructing machinery of war? The gentleman from Missouri apparently believes that we can establish peace upon the basis of eloquence; that while we are multiplying the engines of war we can become effective agents for peace merely by professing attachment to it. If peace can be established upon the basis of eloquence, we have but to send him to attend an international conference and the white dove will spread her wings over this continent and all the civilized world. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I would substitute for myself there the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN].

Mr. COCKRAN. If I had the same faith as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], I would be glad to accompany him as his humble acolyte. But I do not mind now taking the House into my confidence and saying that in my judgment there is but one way to secure peace throughout the world, and that is to make justice its basis. All the arguments for arbitration, all the treaties that can be put upon paper will not make men submit to injustice. While one single element of injustice enters into the government of men, there will be resistance, and that resistance will cause either redress or war.

Mr. Chairman, the whole civilized world was once under the dominion of a single government. There was no organized power on earth to dispute its authority. But it was built upon injustice, on conquest, on servitude, on plunder; it depended on force and coercion, and although there was no organized government anywhere to resist it, from the depths of the forest savage tribes emerged in swarms, swept across its plains, devastated its fields, burned its villages, sacked its towns, scattered its legions, razed its very foundations, so that not a fragment of that vast empire remains in existence to-day. And if peace could not be maintained upon wrong, though one government exercised all the power of the world, do you suppose it can be made permanent on such a foundation now through a combination of independent governments each inflamed by jealousy and anxious to share the plunder which any one of them has been successful in levying?

Mr. Chairman, peace will be established throughout the world, and will be permanent, when all the nations agree that the moral law is binding on governments no less than on individuals. The moral law of nations is embodied in our own Declaration of Independence, in the principle there for the first time formulated that the sole, legitimate basis of government is the consent of the governed. When that principle is universally applied, no disturbance of international peace will be possible. Not merely has this country, in proclaiming its own independence, announced the doctrine which must for evermore be the moral law of nations, and therefore the sole foundation of peace, but it has preached the most forceful lesson of peace for a hundred years when, though it remained almost wholly unarmed, it proved itself the most powerful in war and the most fruitful in industry—the most influential member in the family of nations, not through the size of its armaments, but through the virtue of its people and the splendor of their achievements. What people has ever been so potent in their influence or so prosperous in their possessions? Is any gentleman here ashamed of our history? Is any gentleman here ashamed of the record that we made in 1812, when, with not 10 per cent of the tonnage which we faced, we overthrew the supremacy of our foe upon the sea and wrote a new and glorious chapter in the annals of nations battling for the right and triumphing in the struggle?

Is any gentleman ashamed of the record we made in more recent years when we accomplished the first great triumph of arbitration by compelling submission to the Geneva tribunal of questions between England and this country growing out of the civil war? And at that time I do not think we had a single vessel that could be called a first-class battle ship. When have we enjoyed greater consequence in the estimation of the world than when we were practically unarmed? But gentlemen will say that times have changed; that we are now a world power, and as the scope of our influence has widened sources of attack have multiplied. This vagueness of speech is one of the disguises behind which vicious proposals become formidable.

If gentlemen be sincere in the statement that they favor constructing this ship as a precaution against attack, why do they hesitate to point out the direction from which they expect it to come? Where is this enemy whom we fear? Where is this foe that threatens us? Against whom are we arming?

Human nature has not changed since those ancient days pictured so eloquently by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER]. Men still pursue profit as they pursued it then, except that they have become more intelligent as to the way by which it can be reached most rapidly and gathered in greatest abundance. If we had anything that another nation desired, if we held anything to which another nation could make a reasonable claim, I would acknowledge there is but one way to keep it, and that is by arms. But what have we that any nation covets? What have we that any nation would take, even if we offered it? Does anyone here believe that we could make a present of the Philippines to any other country, even if we gave along with the islands $2 in cash for every one of their inhabitants? [Laughter and applause.] There is no gentleman on either side of this Chamber who does not admit the taking of these islands was a national calamity. Some of us believe it was a grievous error, for which there is no excuse or palliation. Others tell us it was a visitation of Providence; that this country obeyed the will of Heaven when these brown men were forced into subjection; that our military forces were agents of progress when they fired civilizing bullets into the bodies of natives who would not accept the lessons of civilization through their intellectuals. But we all are agreed that the acquisition of the archipelago was not a national benefit, but the assumption of an onerous national burden.

Does anyone suppose that in view of our experience any nation of the world would take these islands from us as a gift? If they ever do go to another power, then I pray it may be to mine enemy. [Laughter.] What else do we possess which any other power would accept even as a free gift? Does anyone suppose that if we offered to present a State of this Union, or one of our Territories, to any nation in the world, the offer would be accepted? And if there be nothing on the surface of this globe which we possess that any other nation desires, is there anything possessed by any other nation that we covet, that we would take by force of arms, or that we would be willing to accept? About what, then, can we ever go to war? On what ground can anyone assail us, or are we likely to attack any other power? What, then, in the name of common sense, becomes of the pretense that this increase of armament by the addition of an enormous battle ship is necessary to our defense? I admit a certain force in the appeal to imagination and national pride when we are urged to place among our possessions anything which is the biggest of its kind on earth. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat sensible to an appeal of that character myself. This is the biggest country in the world, and the biggest things proper to the sphere in which she moves are her natural possessions and her suitable adornment.

I want the biggest things on earth in every field where our history, our tradition, our civilization invites us to compete for preeminence. I would like to see the largest engine of production developed by American genius. I abhor the thought that we would engage in a competition to produce the most effective engine of destruction. [Applause.] What is there that would justify us in arming against our neighbors? I ask once more, gentlemen on the other side, especially the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], since there is no thirst for territory on our part to gratify or on the part of any other nation that we are concerned to resist. I pause for an answer. There is none and there can be none. Some gentlemen talk vaguely about an open door in China, as though we could institute an active and prosperous commerce with a 12-inch gun. Some gentlemen seem to think that if we want to sell goods in the east an American war ship must be near by, but I don't think anyone seriously believes war ships can be turned into vessels for transporting freight.

Does anybody believe that force can play any part in peaceful commerce? Do not gentlemen realize that to the extent we waste our national treasure in constructing these destructive engines we withdraw it from the productive enterprises which are the legitimate fields of peaceful and profitable competition between civlized men?

Before sitting down I ask any gentleman on the other side to point out one single tangible, comprehensible reason why our Navy should be increased. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe that we have to-day a navy far in excess of our needs; certainly a navy far in excess of any need that has been pointed out upon that side. I would like to know if there be any reason which this debate has not disclosed that could justify such an increase as the one proposed by this bill in our naval armament?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. COCKRAN. Certainly.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. In view of the fact that in 1898 the gentleman's constituents in New York City demanded that the entire American Navy be sent to New York City and to Boston to defend the metropolis of the Republic against the Spanish fleet, does he not think that a navy large enough for the rest of the country ought to be established in case we have the same sort of a situation again? [Applause.]

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I am delighted to welcome that applause. Fairy tales well told always amuse the thoughtless. [Laughter.] I never heard any such demand made by anyone in New York City. I myself live on Long Island in the summer time, between the place where a hostile squadron approaching New York by the Sound would be most likely to anchor, and Willets Point, which is one of the main defenses of the city on that side. Had the Spanish war ships ever attempted such an attack, my house would have been exactly in the line of all the shots exchanged between vessels and ports. Any missiles that fell short of their objective would in all probability have rained on my roof, yet I never thought of moving. I never asked for protection. I never lost a minute's sleep by mistaking peals of thunder for the roar of cannon. And I don't believe anybody was more disturbed than I, unless he was moved by hope of an appropriation. That always intensifies terror or at least quickens expression of apprehension. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COCKRAN. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. TALBOTT. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. COCKRAN. I shall be glad to answer a question.

Mr. TALBOTT. Do you know what brought about the war between England and the United States in 1812?

Mr. COCKRAN. Yes, sir; I think I do. I think I am not utterly ignorant of my country's history.

Mr. TALBOTT. Was it not because we denied the right of the British navy to search and impress seamen from our vessels?

Mr. COCKRAN. Certainly.

Mr. TALBOTT. Do you believe that if we had a navy to compare with that of Great Britain at that time they would have dared to do that or attempted to do that?

Mr. COCKRAN. I know that we made Great Britain sorry that she ever attempted it, and I know this much——

Mr. TALBOTT. Do you think the English Government would have attempted to take what they claimed were their citizens from our vessels of the American Navy——

Mr. COCKRAN. I have never been able to fathom the intentions of the English Government. When the gentleman asks me to explain what the British Government would have done in a certain case, he manifestly asks me to enter a domain of speculation where I could accomplish no useful result. I do know that with an armament not 10 per cent so strong as that of Great Britain we drove her forces from our shores and upset her supremacy on the seas. In the light of that history I would rather stand upon the resources of American valor whenever danger may arise than adopt a policy through which the treasure of the country must be wasted in enormous amounts every year under a groundless apprehension.

Mr. TALBOTT. There is no trouble standing upon the history of that question. Does not the gentleman think we could have stopped the impressment of American seamen on a merchant vessel if we had had a navy then in comparison with the one we have now?

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, there is no prouder page in American history than the page that tells the story of that insult and the way it was avenged. It was wiped out most completely and effectually by a people who armed themselves when occasion for using arms arose, and who proved themselves invincible in war, though they had not previously spent years wasting their treasure in ridiculous and unnecessary armaments.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think, if we had had a larger navy, an adequate navy, that this Republic would have been protected against the humiliation of seeing its Capitol burned in 1812?

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, again I can not undertake to say what might have happened if something else had occurred. I decline to enter into that domain of speculation. [Laughter.] But this I do say, that we have spent upon these perfectly useless and senseless preparations for events that can in all human probability never occur more than enough to build a capitol as fine as this in every State of the Union, and to establish broad and easy highways between all of them for the benefit of the American people and the promotion of intercourse and commerce between the States. [Applause.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman what he thinks would be the result if Great Britain would undertake with the Navy that we now have to enforce any demand?

Mr. COCKRAN. Into that speculation I decline to enter. I have never had any confidential relations with the British Government which would justify me in speaking with authority of its aims or proposals. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. COCKS. I would like to ask the gentleman, my distinguished colleague, if we did not have some fear at the time of the Spanish war?

Mr. COCKRAN. I can not answer for the gentleman, but looking at him here now as he appears on the floor of the House, I must say if he ever was afraid he has recovered from the fright so completely that by this time he must have forgotten it. [Laughter.] And after all, when it comes to paying $100,000,000 or $150,000,000 a year—I think we have spent about a billion since the Spanish war for naval purposes—to keep the roses of confidence in the gentleman's cheeks, it is rather a large price even for such a valuable result. I think it would be the part of patriotism to seek some other and less costly method for preserving his happiness. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, there has been one valuable suggestion running through all these interruptions, and I desire to submit it to the sober judgment of this committee. There might have been plausible excuses for huge armaments in the past when the questions to which gentlemen have referred were still pending, but when, nevertheless, we managed to sustain our dignity and protect our interests successfully without a big or, to use the euphonious term now current, an adequate navy. It is but a few years ago since we had several—I will not say burning, but certainly pressing—questions in different directions. The existence of Cuba as a Spanish possession at our doors was such a serious and constant menace to our peace that it might have justified extensive military establishments. With Canada we had a series of disputes touching boundaries and fisheries. Of these the most important are all now settled. We have not to-day with any nation in the world a single serious question undecided that I know of. And at this moment, when there is less occasion for a navy than ever in our whole history, this House is invoked in the sacred name of patriotism to establish a bigger navy than we found necessary in the midst of distracting complications. Against that course of folly and extravagance I protest. [Applause.]

Mr. VREELAND. I desire the gentleman to state during the remainder of his time how large a navy, in the opinion of the gentleman, the United States ought to maintain, if any.

Mr. COCKRAN. I will answer very frankly, Mr. Chairman, that a navy equal to that which was strong enough to force arbitration upon reluctant England after the close of our civil war, when our credit was so low that gold commanded a high premium in our currency, would be, in my judgment, a big enough navy now, when we have no question to settle and no powerful country to coerce, either by moral or physical force.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has again expired.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. COCKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have leave to conclude his remarks.

Mr. COCKRAN. I am practically through, but I am ready to answer any question that may be asked. [Applause.] As no one answers, Mr. Chairman, I will not detain the committee further. [Applause.]

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, just a word in answer to the gentleman from New York. In 1890, sixteen years ago, the Congress of the United States authorized the building of three first-class battle ships. Their names were the Indiana, the Massachusetts, and the Oregon. Within the next two years Congress authorized the building of two cruisers and a battle ship, the Minneapolis, the Brooklyn, and the Iowa. Those vessels were all authorized within three years—six first-class battle ships and cruisers within three years and in time of profound peace. And they had scarcely been in commission, they had not more than learned their way through the waters, when events broke out which made the names of those battle ships and cruisers household words. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] if he or any other American became ashamed of the names of the Indiana, the Massachusetts, the Oregon, the Minneapolis, the Brooklyn, and the Iowa, and the deeds of valor performed by them in a war for humanity in which this Government and this country engaged?

Mr. COCKRAN. Does the gentleman wish me to answer that?

Mr. BATES. Yes; if you please.

Mr. COCKRAN. Why, Mr. Chairman, I think I was the first in this country, at the first public meeting ever held in this country, before the close of Mr. Cleveland's Administration, to urge intervention in Cuba to stop the fusion of bloodshed and the perpetration by the Spanish Government of the very outrages that government is organized to prevent. But I was careful then to say that this country would be glorious in interfering for liberty and justice, but if she undertook to make that intervention the excuse for perpetrating conquests herself, our position would be indefensible. And I believe so yet. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BATES. Yes; the gentleman was very eager for war then in spite of his pacific remarks to-day; but could we, would we have dared to have entered into that war in 1898 had we not with forethought and prudence authorized, six and eight years before, the very ships which, when once engaged, shed so much luster on the American Navy and the American name? In his former remarks he used the words "a useless and senseless event which never can occur." I would like to ask the gentleman from New York how he knows now, in the year of grace 1906, what may occur in the next few years any better than he could have known when these battle ships and cruisers were authorized by Congress merely on the assumption that something might occur in the future which never then was dreamed of? [Applause.]

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman, I suppose, desires me to answer. I have endeavored to point out that every question about which there was any possibility of foreign complications has been settled. We, to-day, have nothing that anybody covets and nobody has anything we covet, and so long as there is no possible ground for war I do not believe that this country should rush in and make it for the mere fun of doing it.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I remember that as late as the winter of 1898 some able writer in one of the great magazines in this country wrote a series of articles with splendid irony on "Our late war with Spain," treating as absurd the idea that it could ever occur, and within ninety days this country, impelled by the wishes and demands of all our people, without regard to party, was engaged in a foreign war. What, I ask, Mr. Chairman, would have been our chances in the waters of the Atlantic Ocean that summer had we not had faith in the efficiency of those vessels which I have just named?

I desire also to call the attention of the gentleman from New York to another fact.

Mr. COCKRAN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BATES. I would ask the gentleman if he is mindful of the fact that the life of one of these battle ships is only about twenty years, and that twenty years has now passed since the authorization of the Texas and of these battle ships and cruisers which I have named, or will before any ship we can to-day authorize can be taken from the docks or be available?

Mr. COCKRAN. Does the gentleman ask my opinion as a naval expert?

Mr. BATES. I merely call the attention of the gentleman to this fact.

Mr. COCKRAN. I beg to say there might be some doubt as to whether I could qualify as a naval expert, but the gentleman can tell us whether these ships and cruisers are out of service or in service.

Mr. BATES. Why, Mr. Chairman, they are still in service, but their time is drawing to a close.

Mr. COCKRAN. Who fixes the time?

Mr. BATES. The naval constructors of the Navy Department of this Government give it as their opinion that the average life of a battle ship or cruiser is about twenty years, and before a ship that we would authorize to-day could be finished the life of these battle ships and these cruisers will practically have come to an end.

Mr. COCKRAN. I would like to ask the gentleman what sized navy he thinks we ought to have in order to make our defense perfect?

Mr. BATES. I will answer the gentleman. I believe that the naval establishment of this country ought to be carried on along the lines which were adopted in 1883, 1884, and 1885, when we first decided that we would have a first-class modern navy. In time of profound peace, before any excitement caused by the Spanish war had arisen or before public opinion had been especially aroused on this subject, from 1885 up to the time of the Spanish war, one ship annually on the average was authorized by Congress, and that is what we favor now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COCKRAN. I ask that the gentleman have another minute.

Mr. MAHON. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. This is the regular order.

Mr. BATES. I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended one minute in order that I may answer the question of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRAN. Make it five minutes for the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. COCKRAN. I ask the gentleman now if he can tell us what he considers a proper navy, not in general terms, but how many ships he thinks we ought to have and of what tonnage?

Mr. BATES. In a day of profound peace sixteen years ago, in 1890, we authorized a tonnage of 38,000 tons. In 1895, in a day of profound peace, when no war was dreamed of, we authorized a tonnage of 29,000 tons.

Mr. COCKRAN. Is the gentleman speaking of the total tonnage in existence during those years or of the new ships added each year?

Mr. BATES. I am giving the total in tonnage authorized each year—that is, battle ships, cruisers, gunboats, etc.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid that the gentleman and I are talking at cross purposes.

Mr. BATES. The total can be easily ascertained. In 1896 35,000 tons were authorized, about as much as we authorized last year. Now, in answer to the question what is a sufficient navy for this country, I believe that the efficiency of the present Navy ought to be maintained. To do this it is necessary to add one or two ships each year to replace those which become obsolete and are laid aside.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BATES. The country at large, the people who send us here, desire a strong Navy, and I believe it should be kept up to its present efficiency, and that we ought to authorize at least one of the largest class of fighting machines this year. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I think we have had a very full debate upon this proposition, and I move to close debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto in fifteen minutes. I desire to state that of that time I want ten minutes myself. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that all debate upon the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in fifteen minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I trust that out of that time the author of the amendment may have the other five minutes.

Mr. FOSS. I desire to make a few remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, which is not debatable.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division! Divide the time equally.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 136, noes 42.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND].

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, the associations in opposition to the building of a battle ship in this House to-day must excite considerable interest among the Members on account of their seeming incongruity. I have no fault to find with the gentleman from Minnesota for opposing this bill. The position of chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in this House during my membership in it has carried great weight on this floor. But that, Mr. Chairman, has not been because of any power conferred upon the chairman of that committee by the rules of this House. That great power and authority has come to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations by reason of the great power and knowledge, the fairness and candor in debate by that man who during my term here was chairman of that great committee and who to-day is the Speaker of the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the gentleman who succeeded him, my friend from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], has in him the material to make a great chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but I believe he never will be able to exert the influence in this House to which he has a right to aspire, except by proceeding in debate with candor, with strict accordance to the facts, and with accuracy of statement, which attributes, I am sorry to say, did not characterize him, in my judgment, in the attack he made on the bill before the committee.

I believe the statement of the chairman of that committee going out to the country conveys a false impression. It conveys an impression of extravagance in naval expenditure under cover of facts presented by him which does not exist. I believe it is unfair to state to the country that expenditures for pensions, expenditures for care of parks, expenditures for cemeteries are made necessary by the present military programme being carried out for the United States.

I asked the gentleman the question if he did not consider pensions rather the result of lack of preparedness on the part of the nation than as a result of preparation for war. Why, Mr. Chairman, suppose we had not been prepared for the war with Spain?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, while I believe the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri would place the naval programme in a better position than the adoption of the provision in the pending bill, I can not see my way clear to support it. It would leave the decision as to whether we should proceed with the battle ship to the result of The Hague conference. One of the chief glories of a nation, as well as to an individual, is to be a leader, to do something decisive. Why need we wait for The Hague conference? We are strong enough with the nations of the world to take this stand right here to-day that we will not proceed with this colossal battle ship. [Applause.] But it is said that the building of the proposed battle ship is merely maintenance; that it is not extension. Can you call the building of a ship greater than any ever constructed on this side of the Atlantic, as large as any ever constructed, maintenance of the Navy? What will be the result when this ship is built? On the one hand it may prove to be a failure, but if it is a success every influence will be brought to bear to substitute for every other battle ship in our Navy one of the same type.

And so I say the construction of two battle ships, or three battle ships, might not mean as much for the enlargement of the Navy and for the continuation of this ambitious naval programme as does this one ship which is provided for in the bill. I trust that the House may to-day strike out this provision and proclaim thereby that this country stands for peace, and that in this great progressive era we are ready and willing to run the risk of war, provided we are able to take the leadership for a time when the disputes between nations shall be settled as those between individuals—by peaceful methods. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the question before the committee, the vote will come first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri to postpone the completion of this battle ship until we hear from the peace conference. We had the first meeting of the conference in 1899. It was called by the Czar of Russia, and in that call special emphasis was laid upon the question of the disarmament of the military forces. What was the result? After a resolution had been passed by that peace conference the nations of the world started in to build their naval establishments larger than ever before. France has authorized 340,000 tons of ships since the peace conference of 1899; England has authorized 662,000 tons; Japan, 191,000 tons; Germany, 350,000 tons; and, in addtion to that, the United States, Russia, and Italy, nearly 600,000 tons of ships: in all 2,000,000 tons of ships since the last peace conference, or what is equivalent to 100 battle ships of 20,000 tons each.

Not only that, but the Czar of Russia has been at war with Japan in one of the greatest conflicts of the ages, where the men engaged in battles on the land numbered more than perhaps any previous battles in the history of the world. And in that war there occurred the greatest naval engagement the world has ever seen, where there was the greatest tonnage of ships and the deadliest instruments of warfare. So I say, Mr. Chairman, if that has been the result of the last peace conference it is ridiculous to postpone the building of this battle ship until the next peace conference meets. In this connection I would like to read the call for this next peace conference, issued by the Czar of Russia. It is as follows:

> The Imperial Government, believing that it is necessary only to examine questions which press with particular energy, inasmuch as they arise from the experience of recent years, and without touching on those which belong to the limitation of military and naval forces, proposes therefore as a programme for the conference the following points.

Mr. Chairman, the Czar of Russia in his call for the second peace conference eliminates the whole question of the disarmament of nations. Now, if under the first peace conference the result was that the nations of the world built larger naval and military establishments than ever before, when the Czar of Russia called them together to determine upon that question, what will be the result now that he has eliminated that whole question from the second peace conference?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. I must decline to yield, for I have only just a moment.

It is very amusing to hear gentlemen on this floor talking about peace, wonderful words of peace, beautiful words of peace, lovely words of peace. I wish that some of these distinguished gentlemen who talk about peace in times of peace might be permitted to go out on the firing line and meet the enemy in time of war and deliver these magnificent eulogies on peace, beautiful peace, lovely peace!

Mr. COCKRAN. Does the gentleman apprehend war?

Mr. FOSS. I do not believe in that kind of peace, Mr. Chairman. I do not believe in that sickly, sentimental kind of peace that is not backed up by preparation for war. [Applause.] That is the kind of peace that surrenders upon first demand. But the kind of peace that I believe in is the peace for which our fathers always stood—that peace that is honorable among men and justifiable of God; that peace that never makes surrender of national duty or of national obligation or of national honor; that peace, in other words, that is always backed up by preparation for war. [Applause.]

There are other questions that have been introduced into this debate. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] the other day impressively raised his hand and said, "Who would fight us?" and the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] asked that same question upon this floor to-day. One month before the Spanish-American war broke out the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] might have raised that same hand and with the same emphasis asked that same question, yet one month later he himself voted for war upon this floor. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Ohio has spoken of the size of ships. Of course there are arguments on both sides.

ARGUMENTS ADVANCED AGAINST BIG SHIPS.

1. GREATER TARGET AREA.

True, and by this much:

The length of the Connecticut, of 16,000 tons, is 450 feet; her beam, 77 feet.

The length of the Dreadnought, of 18,500 tons, is 500 feet; her beam, 82; which figures exceed the Connecticut by 50 feet and 5 feet, respectively.

This makes a greater target area of about 250 square feet, not a very serious matter. There would be some increase due to extra height, but it would be as unimportant.

2. DECREASED HANDINESS DUE TO SIZE.

While if the Dreadnought had a single rudder she would not turn so well as a smaller ship, yet even then that fact is not of great importance, since in fleet actions ships follow each other, as did the Japanese battle ships, and there is not the same necessity for great handiness as there was in the old days of single-ship actions.

It happens, however, that the Dreadnought is to have double rudders, and these, with her four screws, are expected to give her much greater handiness than is possessed by the present battle ships. The advantages of double rudders have been demonstrated and no doubt is felt that the Dreadnought will have great handiness.

3. INCREASE IN DRAFT WITH REFERENCE TO DRAFT OF HARBORS, AND IN BEAM, BOTH AFFECTING SIZE OF DRY DOCKS.

The Dreadnought will draw 28 feet, which is a few feet more than our deepest battle ships and armored cruisers. We already have merchant ships entering our principal harbors drawing over 30 feet, and steps are in progress which will give us deep-water channels for any vessels which enter our principal harbors.

DEPTHS OF VARIOUS HARBORS, EXISTING AND PROJECTED—REPORT OF CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY, FOR 1905.

Boston.—The river and harbor act of June 13, 1902, provides for 35 feet depth at mean low water from Charleston Navy-Yard to the sea. June 30, 1905, the channel was dredged to 27 feet and more at mean low water. Twenty-seven feet draft can be carried at low water and any draft at high water.

New York.—Gedney channel to be 30 feet at mean low water. June 30, 1905, channels navigable at mean low water by ships drawing 30 feet. Mean rise of tide 4½ feet. Project adopted 1899 to make East channel 40 feet deep at mean low water.

Delaware.—River and harbor act of March 3, 1899, provided for a 30-foot channel from Philadelphia to the sea. June 30, 1905, at mean low water and at shoalest part of river 22 feet draft could pass.

Baltimore.—Thirty-foot draft at mean low water can now be carried to this city.

Norfolk.—June 30, 1905, at mean low water vessels of 28 feet draft can go to navy-yard. Rise of tide about 3 feet.

Charleston.—The depth of 27 feet at mean low water has been secured. The freight steamer Manhattan, drawing 26.5 feet, entered the port during 1904, and was the largest vessel which ever entered the port. Rise of tide 5.2 feet.

Key West.—Key West Harbor accommodates vessels drawing about 27 feet. Rise of tide 2.6 feet.

Tampa Bay.—Project of 1899 contemplates channel from sea to Port Tampa of 27 feet; so far secured 24 feet at mean low water. Rise of tide 1.5 to 2 feet.

Galveston.—Harbor has in part 30 feet depth. Depth on outer bar 27.25 feet.

Pensacola.—Thirty-foot channel to city and bay.

Mobile (Ala.).—About 25 feet draft can be carried.

Mississippi Passes.—At present 30-foot depth, work going on to secure 35 feet.

It must not be forgotten that our battle fleet is not expected to enter many of our ports. Its work is on the high seas, and only the principal harbors should be visited by them. This is really the case now, because, except to give liberty, the battle ships are kept where drills and exercises can be carried on.

Necessity really only exists for our battle fleet to visit strategical points of importance, such as dockyards and naval stations or possible naval bases.

As far as dry docks go, our best docks are of 32 feet depth.

4. The greater fineness of hull necessary for high speed makes it difficult to carry heavy end weights. Probably quite true.

5. It is stated that there would be a serious decrease of structural strength if important structural members are damaged owing to heavy end weights and great length.

Perhaps true; but greater protection gives less likelihood of such damage. In any event, it is an architectural question, like the building of a bridge, and it would seem that the strength would increase with size.

6. The results due to disabling motive power or steering gear of a big ship would be more serious than for a smaller ship, as there would be fewer big ships than small ones; but the chance of such disabling would be very much less, owing to the greater invulnerability of the bigger ships in these details.

7. Increased cost.—Seven million five hundred thousand dollars for 16,000 tons to $10,000,000 for 20,000 tons.

True, but you get more in proportion; and if it is necessary to win, the cost will not count.

The claim that a greater number of small units was better than fewer large vessels was not difficult to sustain when the small battle ships carried practically the same number of big guns as the larger ones; but now we propose a step which has so much gain in big guns and so little further liability to damage on account of size that it becomes worth while. The increase from the Iowa, of 12,000 tons, to the Connecticut, of 16,000 tons, was not accompanied by an adequate increase of battery power, though other less important gains were made.

It is true that any considerable increase in size should be accompanied by some material gain in battle power sufficient to justify the increased cost. The Michigan and South Carolina, of 16,000 tons, while not throwing any more metal than the Connecticut class of the same size, yet will be militarily more efficient, because they carry a uniform number of 12-inch guns; having eight of these, they have twice as many as the Connecticut. The Dreadnought, of 18,500 tons, carries ten, giving the same broadside of eight as the Michigan class, and our proposed battle ship of about 20,000 tons should carry twelve 12-inch guns.

As to when we have reached the point where increase in size involves too large a loss in proportion to the whole by losing one unit, that is a question for most serious consideration. While all advantages lie with a fleet of the largest battle ships, there is yet a limit to size, determined by the loss which one unit would be to the whole force, and the effect this might have on the conduct of the war. At the beginning of the Japanese-Russian war the loss of two Japanese battle ships—which was such a large proportion of their whole force of battle ships—was a source of much embarrassment to the Japanese, and materially modified their plans.

What the limit of size must be, due to this consideration, is yet to be determined, and it must principally be left to experts to decide; but it may be stated that so far we have not yet reached it since the greater naval powers are agreed on a general increase in size. Of them all, the only one with modern war experience, Japan, builds the largest, one of 19,400 tons. It is evident she has no doubts.

ARGUMENTS FOR BIG BATTLE SHIPS.

1. By a considerable increase in displacement such as we contemplate, we obtain a substantial increase in battery power, which more than doubles the fighting efficiency of our battle ships. The Maine, Kearsarge, and others of about 12,000 tons had four 12-inch guns, the 16,000-ton Michigan and South Carolina will have eight 12-inch, while the 18,500-ton Dreadnought carries ten 12-inch, and a 20,000-odd tons, if authorized by the House, may be expected to carry twelve 12-inch. What is possible on the limit of cost fixed by this House has not been fully worked out, but it is certain that the battle ship produced under this appropriation will not be surpassed in efficiency by anything which floats.

The Dreadnought, of 18,500 tons, and our 20,000-ton ship, could, with her enormous battery and greater speed, take their own position away from a half dozen or more Kentuckys or Maines and destroy them in detail, the bigger and newer vessels' heavier armor protecting them at the greater range they would choose from the few 12-inch carried by the smaller vessels.

2. For a given efficiency as a fighting vessel, we build cheaper in large vessels than in a number of smaller ones; we also decrease materially the cost of maintenance and operation per ton of displacement.

Mahan says:

> It is much more expensive to put the same aggregate tonnage into two ships than in one. You get less military efficiency at higher cost. You need two captains for one, nearly twice as many officers, and crews which, while they may not be double of the one ship, will exceed it by a very large percentage.

He uses this argument in favor of the survival of the battle ship, though personally he is in favor of small or medium battle ships.

3. In big ships we are able to secure a more stable gun platform, and carry the heavy guns higher, thus being able to fight the battery in weather which smaller vessels would be seriously hampered by. The Indiana class and the Iowa, and, indeed, the later battle ships of this size, are really "coast-line battle ships," as they were called, which carry their guns so low that they are seriously hampered in anything of a sea.

It must be borne in mind that the ship is of no importance except to carry guns which are able to fire in all weathers.

4. Since the weight of hull for the same strength is relatively less in the larger ship, there is more margin of weight for additional speed or coal. By the ability to carry more coal, the bigger ships are less dependent on colliers and coaling stations and more able to keep the sea and pursue their legitimate functions.

The greater displacement provides greater engine weight, which, combined with the increased fineness of the ship's hull, gives a considerable increase in speed from 18 to 20 or 21 knots. This means a considerable strategical advantage in being able to reach a given locality or scene of action quickly and an increased tactical ability to maneuver on the day of battle, which enables an admiral commanding such ships to get the advantage of position and destroy his enemy ship by ship.

In the battle of the Sea of Japan the Russian battle ships at the head of the column were driven out of the firing line one after the other by the Japanese battle ships of greater speed, while those Russian battle ships that were opposed by the Japanese armored cruisers escaped any serious injury. The big guns on the big ships did the work.

5. The same tonnage in big ships, giving better sea speed, better protection, and more big guns, would triumph over the same tonnage in a greater number of smaller vessels.

6. A fleet of big battle ships occupies less sea room than the same tonnage of smaller speed and is more easily controlled, especially in smoke or fog.

By concentrating big guns in big ships we can have much closer formations—a short line or column—permitting more rapid maneuvers, far more effective fire at long range, and more perfect control by the flag officer over his command. This last is of prime importance, since successful signaling can not be accomplished at long distances.

This ability to maneuver with facility, combined with the greater speed in big ships, enables the admiral to concentrate his fire on and destroy a portion of the enemy's ships to the exclusion and isolation of the others—where the enemy's fleet is composed of smaller battle ships.

7. The bigger battle ship has stronger hull, thicker armor, and better all-around protection to vital parts. She can therefore continue fighting long after receiving a fire which would disable smaller and not so well protected vessels. She has an all-around armor belt, and practically all her men are behind armor, so that she is not so likely to suffer disastrous losses in personnel as smaller ships would of the present-day type, and as the Russians did.

8. By having a uniform battery of big guns much space is saved in storing ammunition, more can be carried, and greater speed made in getting charges to the guns, owing to greater simplicity of apparatus and less confusion.

9. Handiness, which was formerly such a great factor in single-ship actions, can no longer be considered of importance, as ships now fight in fleets and do not require close maneuvering and quick turning.

10. The Japanese have the advantage, which no other nation with a strong fleet possess, of practical experience with battle ships in an important sea fight; for this reason, the decision of Japan—and her ally England, who alone of other nations has been given the benefit of her experience—for big battle ships must carry exceptional weight.

WHAT OTHER COUNTRIES ARE BUILDING IN THE WAY OF BIG SHIPS.

England.—The Dreadnought, of 18,500 tons, and ten 12-inch guns (authorized 1904).

Germany.—Two battle ships of about 19,000 tons, carrying either fourteen 11-inch or sixteen 11-inch guns; speed about 21 knots. One armored cruiser of 15,000 tons, with eight 11-inch guns and six 6.7-inch guns, and ten destroyers of 570 tons.

France.—Six battle ships of about 18,000 tons, with 21 knots speed, four 12-inch and twelve 9.6-inch and sixteen 5-inch guns; ten destroyers of 490 tons; twenty submersibles of 398 tons.

The programme given above for France is to be supplemented in 1907 by a seventh battle ship of 18,000 tons, and this will be followed by laying down six battle ships of 20,000 or 21,000 tons, with speed of 19 knots and batteries of six 12-inch and eight 9.4-inch guns. This programme will provide France, by about 1913, with fourteen first-class battle ships of from 18,000 to 21,000 tons.

Russia.—The Czar has approved the following programme, spread over nine years: Twelve battle ships of not less than 17,000 tons, four cruisers of 12,000 tons, seven cruisers of 12,700 tons, four cruisers of 6,700 tons; forty-six destroyers of 400 tons; eighteen torpedo boats of 300 tons; ten submarines; seven gunboats of 100 tons; nine monitors for home ports; one mining vessel. Total cost of programme, about $190,000,000.

EXPERT OPINION ON WAR LESSONS AND BIG SHIPS.

French naval experts say the battle ship must be more prominent than ever in the navies of the future, and are loud in their denunciation of their past policy which has resulted in a lack of battle ships in the French navy, and a predominance of small vessels and torpedo and submarine craft. They are resolved now to lay down and build as quickly as possible six of the largest size, like the Dreadnought. The authorities who voice this opinion are M. Pelletan, the present minister of marine; M. Lockroy, former minister of marine; M. Bertin, chief naval constructor; Admiral Fournier; Admiral Gervais, and M. Charles Bos.

Secretary of the Navy Bonaparte has announced himself in favor of the big-gun big ship, going so far, indeed, on the advice of the Chief Constructor of the Navy, as to advocate a battle ship larger than any now building; i. e., of about 20,500 tons, to carry twelve 12-inch guns.

Admiral Dewey is strongly in favor of big battle ships, carrying a uniform battery of heaviest guns, and has advocated one of about 18,600 tons trial displacement, to carry ten 12-inch guns.

In an interview last September, in the New York Herald, Admiral Dewey was asked what lessons the American Navy has learned from the Japanese-Russian war, and he replied:

More big ships, more big guns, and good shooting. The American Navy needs, more than anything else, battle ships of 18,000 tons, carrying 12-inch guns, with a few—like 3-inch—for defense against torpedo-boat attacks.

The Admiral further said:

I have changed my mind on this subject. When the Oregon came out, I agreed with a great many other naval officers that it was an ideal craft, ready to meet the enemy at each and every range, but I now realize that the modern battle is fought at a range of 3 or 4 miles, and at that range your 8-inch guns are nothing but so much dead weight on the ship. You might as well be firing with a pistol. No; it is the big ships, such as the English are building, and the big guns that decide the battle.

The results of the discussion of Admiral Dewey's views in favor of big battle ships in England show that there is practical unanimity of opinion among naval officers as to the necessity for big guns and big ships, in England, France, Germany, and the United States.

Count E. Reventlow, a well-known German naval expert, stated that he entirely concurred with Admiral Dewey's views as to the lessons to be derived from recent naval actions in the Far East. In doing so he stated that he voiced the opinion of a majority of German naval experts, who believe that in future naval battles will be decided by heavily armored battle ships possessing primary batteries of 12-inch guns and secondary batteries of small, quick-firing guns to repulse torpedo boats. Count Reventlow believes a new type is to be built for Germany of at least 18,000 tons. The question of larger ships, with heavier armor and guns, has passed, as settled, from the field of naval experts.

OUR NEED OF A STRONG NAVY.

No nation can exist commercially and exert its proper political influence among the nations of the world without a navy strong in proportion to its wealth and the ambitions and commercial necessities of its population.

The United States for years has been in an agricultural period, but it is now getting deep into a manufacturing age. So involved is the country now in manufactures that it is already beginning to make more than can be sold at home and is seeking foreign buyers.

The time is near when we must turn our serious attention to the capture of the trade of the undeveloped countries and there compete in safety with the commerce of other nations. With expanding foreign commerce we can no longer afford to pay out freight charges to foreign shipowners, so that building up of a new commercial fleet will be a necessity. This fleet and this trade will lead our citizens in the different parts of Africa, South America, and the Far East, where American commerce has not yet made much impression, and in the struggle which will ensue no weapon which will advantage our trade should be withheld. Our business men, our consular and diplomatic officers can not do without that security and backing which is afforded by our flag floating over a fleet of adequate strength. In the comparatively uncivilized regions where our trade must seek customers, our men-of-war must accompany the merchant and protect him and the American interests which he represents. Besides the American goods which are introduced in foreign countries to our interest, there is the vast volume of American capital seeking profitable investment—all of which must be adequately protected by our men-of-war. American money is constantly looking for opportunities to build railroads, establish steamer lines, engage in building operations of all kinds, and compete in such enterprises with enterprising foreigners. This money will not be risked unless security for it is certain. To-day American capital is hesitating on account of the unsettled conditions in China, and it will not be invested there until reasonable security is assured.

The Navy is the long arm of the nation, the force which it is able to swing to any given locality to enforce its policy and guard its commercial and political interests.

Our foreign commerce is growing, and a navy is needed to protect it; and even without an increasing carrying trade our foreign interests require and must be given complete protection. History shows that no nation has had a large fleet of merchant vessels for any great length of time without a corresponding naval force for its protection. The merchant fleet may rise before or fall after the naval fleet, but its existence is short in the absence of a strong naval fleet. In the history of nations the decay of commercial power and wealth may be generally seen to have been due to loss of naval power, though occasionally it has been due to other causes; but it is certain that the existence of one is a sure sign of the existence of the other. Carthage, Athens, Venice, and Holland all had at one time large naval fleets and great commerce, which fell together. Holland's trade was destroyed after the defeat of De Ruyter by the English, and what little she has since regained has been under the tolerating protection of stronger nations possessing navies.

DEFENSE OF OUR COASTS.

We have an enormous extent of coast line, we have Alaska, Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines, and we have the obligation to guard and protect Cuba and maintain her neutrality. To satisfactorily perform these obligations we must have a strong sea-going fleet; we can not have a fort at every important point on account of the cost in money and men, even if forts were an absolute defense, which Port Arthur shows they are not. Forts are very necessary to us for the partial protection of our richest cities, behind which lie our navy-yards and supply stations. If we have a strong, efficient navy our forts will probably not have to fire a gun.

It must be ever remembered that the only sure defense of any country, and the only permanent assurance of peace, is for the fleet to seek out its enemy on the high seas and cripple or destroy it, so that the offending country can be placed under adequate bonds to keep the peace. It does not suffice to simply drive the enemy a few miles away from our coast and then wait in uncertainty for another attack, for during that period of anxiety commerce is paralyzed and the business of the country is held up. Safety can only be assured by the destruction of the enemy's fleet, and such victory can only be accomplished by concentration of the fighting fleet and its efficient use against the enemy. We can not afford to scatter our fighting vessels along our coasts in response to the ignorant demands of frightened towns and cities. We must keep our ships together and get out and fight on the high seas to properly defend our coasts and our homes.

MONROE DOCTRINE.

The humorist of the House has said that "the Monroe doctrine is as big as the Navy and no bigger," and that is a truism we may easily forget.

PANAMA CANAL.

While the Panama Canal will strategically give us a great advantage in that we can move our battle fleet from one coast to the other, and thus meet an enemy from any direction, yet owing to the great volume of trade which will flow through it and the consequent increased responsibilities we will confront, our need for a very strong navy will not, in my opinion, be lessened in the least. With the opening of the Panama Canal the trade routes of the world will instantly readjust themselves, and the Caribbean will become a scene of great activity and commercial strife. The islands and ports of the West Indies will assume greater importance and our dominant influence of right must be maintained by sea strength. We will have such fortifications at the ends of the canal as will enable us to temporarily stand off an enemy until the fleet can arrive, but our fleet must be able to defend that canal and maintain its neutrality. We have guaranteed its neutrality and must be prepared to maintain it. We have a treaty with England which gives us reasonable security in that quarter, but with no other power. We do not want to spend two hundred millions for a canal which could be destroyed in twenty-four hours by a nation having a navy superior to our own. We must have an adequate fleet to defend it and keep it open. We need a navy to back up our foreign policy and protect our growing interests the world over. [Applause.]

APPENDIX.

OUR NEED OF A STRONG NAVY.

[By Benjamin S. Baker.]

The chief functions of our Navy are:

(1) To prevent war—

a. By making other nations fear to attack us.

b. By giving weight to our diplomacy through which the causes of war may be avoided.

(2) To wage war successfully when a conflict is decided upon.

(3) To redress isolated violence to our citizens or trade by show of force or actual use of force. Our dealings with Turkey and the Algerine pirates are examples.

Our Navy is already large enough to protect our citizens. It is conceivable that some isolated hostile act or acts might precipitate a war, but that possibility is slight and wholly overshadowed by other considerations demanding a strong fighting force.

Trade is the source from which the cause of future wars are likely to spring. International law, with regard to private, individual rights has made armed redress in the case of other first-class naval powers unlikely. There are, however, possibilities of serious trouble when the commercial interests of two nations clash.

The attitude of other powers toward our commercial interests abroad will be largely influenced by their feeling that we are able and ready to protect those rights by naval force. This is a mere truism, but will bear restating. The views on certain topics of a physically big man command a respect that is due as much to his size as to the justice of his opinions; this, of course, in instances when one side or the other believes in fighting for his views. The Chinese boycott is an example. If China had our present naval power and we her lack of it, the Peking Government could, with perfect safety, have given official encouragement to the recent attacks on our trade and forced us, by means of damage to our business, to change our exclusion laws. The result of even the unofficial boycott shows how our foreign trade is our chief vulnerable point. Another instance was provided by the Russo-Japanese war. If Japan's navy had been overwhelmingly superior to Russia's at the beginning of the negotiations of 1903, there would have been no war. Had Japan been too weak in her navy, Russia would either have won the war or secured full control in Manchuria and Korea without a war. In that event the threat and probability of commercial exclusion from Manchuria, in defiance of treaty, would have been transferred to the United States and other powers.

If we alone should choose in such a case to urge our rights under treaty with China, only superior naval force, or better, adequate naval force, at our disposal could make Russia respect our rights. Other instances within the range of possibility can easily be imagined.

Trade as the subject-matter of war not merely involves national prestige and self-respect, but it concerns the very essence of national prosperity. It is obvious that the greater our foreign trade the greater is our stake in its security, the greater the possible damage to us of hostile action, and the greater the need of guarding against that damage by the only possible instrument—a strong fighting Navy. Here the matter of isolated injury comes into the chief category, for violence to our merchants or their goods and ships abroad means a lessening of prestige that carries money loss, unless a navy is available to force a righting of the wrong. If trade is to be safe, the flag must be ready to follow trade wherever trade is threatened with unjust treatment.

Great Britain furnishes an example which the United States will soon parallel. The prosperity of the British Empire is absolutely dependent on the security of her seaborne commerce. That security has been obtained by her great navy, the cost of which has been in the strictest sense an insurance cost, an outlay absolutely effective and as obviously needed. The United States will not parallel the opium coercion of China, but it will use every fair means to increase its foreign trade, and with every increase it will become more vulnerable through that trade.

"Commerce insurance" is therefore a perfectly sound term to apply to the cost of our naval establishment.

The need of this insurance may be questioned. But no folly can be more complete than reliance on the idea that there can never be another war.

With the possibility of war in the future, it is easily demonstrable that the prevention of war through possession of a strong navy is cheaper in dollars and cents than the cost of even a brief war. A calculation of the cost to America of the war with Spain—counting as cost the direct outlay on Navy and Army, destruction of material, pensions, damage claims, and the disturbances to business—will show that a navy of such strength as to have prevented Spain from going to war would have been far cheaper than the war. This is regarding only the financial side and omitting entirely human misery and suffering.

A strong navy is additionally necessary through the tendency, for which the United States is largely responsible, to make private property not meant for use by the belligerents exempt from capture. Commerce destruction is one of the most effective forms of naval warfare, and most quickly and surely disastrous to the losing side. We have tried to do away with that, and the end will probably be soon reached.

But in narrowing thus the area of attack, we have intensified the process of waging a naval war. In confining the outcome of wars to the armed navies of the belligerents, we have made war far more critical. When once a war might be spread over the whole seas, it is now restricted to the issue of a very few great combats. We have put all our eggs in one basket, and staked everything, so to speak, on one chance. The improvidence of taking chances under such an arrangement is too obvious to require argument.

With the issue of wars narrowed to relatively so small a question, and with a growing foreign trade making us more vulnerable, it is the part of prudence to make our naval provision with reference to conflict with such powers as may most possibly come into serious conflict with us. While we do not need to follow the British two-navy standard, we ought to remember that the geographical situation which gives us immunity from land invasion enlarges our naval needs.

We must have an Atlantic fleet strong enough to cope with any possible attack on this side of the continent, and we must have a Pacific fleet strong enough to strike a decisive blow in the Far East, when every power strong enough to engage us in war has interests through which it is peculiarly assailable.

China, also, is a coming problem. She will one day have a navy, and that navy could do us the gravest harm without taking the trouble to visit our Pacific coast.

Our possession of the Philippines is a point of the greatest importance in our favor. An adequate fleet based there will not only smooth the way of our diplomacy in the Far East, but in the event of war would enable us to deal a decisive blow at any European power. Every European power would appreciate that fact. With reference to conflict with any European power in the East, our Philippine fleet should have measurably the advantages that Togo's fleet had over the Russian.

In regard to commerce destruction, we must consider the temptation an adversary would have to destroy or capture our goods in transit, even if it had already pledged itself to their immunity. The fortune of some future war might easily be determined by commerce destruction. It is unreasonable for us to rely on our enemy's regarding his pledge not to destroy commerce if he should think himself able to win the war by violating his pledge.

The precedent of the Alabama arbitration is not really in conflict with this supposition.

If it be urged that an enemy who destroyed our commerce might be forced to arbitrate afterwards, the answer is that the only adequate force would be an American Navy strong enough to have defeated him in the first place.

This brings up the value of a strong navy in promoting international arbitration as a substitute for decision by means of war. Abundant precedent shows that it is the strong power, not the weak one, that secures arbitration. A big navy justly used is like the policeman or the civil process that brings the delinquent into court.

WHY WE NEED A BIGGER NAVY.

[By Walter Scott Meriwether, in Harper's Weekly, March 10, 1906.]

According to a recent estimate by Representative GEORGE E. FOSS, chairman of the House Naval Committee, our naval appropriation act for the current year carried $100,000,000, and yet, on the basis of per capita, this is a little more than $1 for each man, woman, and child in the country. It is only about 4 per cent of our foreign trade during the past year, which amounted to about $2,500,000,000. It is 14 per cent of our annual governmental expenditures, a less percentage than was expended upon the Navy one hundred years ago. It is only one-tenth of 1 per cent of our national wealth. It is about one-third of what this country annually expended in premiums on fire insurance, yet one hostile ship of war winning to New York's harbor approaches could start a work of destruction that would bankrupt every insurance company here and abroad, while the amount of damage she could cause would be more than sufficient to maintain for more than one hundred years a navy thrice as big as the one we now possess.

There will be many to assert that this is inconceivable, many to contend that no nation has fleets powerful enough to force an entrance past the batteries which guard New York. Thanks to the panic which the Spanish-American war brought to the seaboard citizen and which was reflected in the halls of legislation, that is doubtless true, but what if there should be a coalition of powers against this Republic? That is not inconceivable, and, according to one well-known English observer, not even unlikely.

"It is only the knowledge that the sea barrier is impenetrable," writes Lieut. Carlyon Bellairs, of the royal navy, "which will effectually prevent the expanding Teutonic, Slavonic, and Latin races of Europe from contemplating aggression on the American continent. If unable to do so singly, nothing but sea power will prevent them from trying to effect their purpose in combination."

To the credit of our own Navy men, it may be said that they long ago urged this type; long before the eastern war had proved in practice what they had so long asserted in vain. They had also insisted that small ships are bad economy, for the reason that the smaller the tonnage the greater the cost of fitting out. In illustration of this, it may be said that for their size torpedo boats are the most expensive vessels afloat.

"There was," says the admiral (Admiral Sir Cyprian Bridge), "not a single Russian ship attacked, much less destroyed, by torpedo boats until she had been seriously maltreated by the Japanese guns, and it is perfectly true that if there had not been a single Japanese torpedo craft within 500 miles of the scene of action not one of the Russian ships which were destroyed would have got away. All such probably would have been added to the number of prizes taken into Japanese ports if no torpedoes had been fired at all."

DISARMAMENT.

[From Arbitration and The Hague Court, by John W. Foster.]

In the circular letter of the Russian minister of foreign affairs of January 11, 1899, following the rescript convoking the conference, the subjects to be submitted for consideration were set forth in detail, and the first of these was as follows:

"1. An understanding not to increase for a fixed period the present effective of the armed military and naval forces, and at the same time not to increase the budgets pertaining thereto, and a preliminary examination of the means by which reduction might even be effected in future in the forces and budgets above mentioned."

In a conference with the British ambassador, following the rescript, the Russian minister of foreign affairs said that the Emperor, although deeply impressed with the desirability of a general disarmament, did not look for an immediate realization of the aims he had so much at heart, but he desired to initiate an effort, the effects of which could only be gradual.

When the conference came to consider the question, while there was much sympathy felt with the noble ideas entertained in the Czar's rescript, it was found that the subject was of a very complex character, and that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to reach any agreement which would meet the Czar's desires. The long discussion which ensued is of much interest, but I can indicate something of its spirit by extracts from the speeches of the representatives of Germany and France. General von Schwarzhoff, in the course of a discourse of some length, said:

"I can hardly believe that among my honored colleagues there is a single one ready to state that his sovereign, his Government, is engaged in working for the inevitable ruin, the slow but sure annihilation, of his country. I have no mandate to speak for my honored colleagues, but, so far as Germany is concerned, I am able to completely reassure her friends and to relieve all well-meant anxiety. The German people is not crushed under the weight of charges and taxes; it is not hanging on the brink of an abyss; it is not approaching exhaustion and ruin. Quite the contrary; public and private wealth is increasing, the general welfare and standard of life are being raised from one year to another. So far as compulsory military service is concerned, which is so closely connected with those questions, the German does not regard this as a heavy burden, but as a sacred and patriotic duty to which he owes his country's existence, its prosperity, and its future.

"I return to the propositions of Colonel Gilinsky (Russian) and to the arguments which have been advanced, and which, to my mind, are not quite consistent with each other. On the one hand, it is feared that excessive armaments may bring about war; on the other, that the exhaustion of national wealth will make war impossible. As for me, I have too much confidence in the wisdom of sovereigns and nations to share such fears. On the one hand, it is pretended that nothing is asked but things which have existed for a long time in some countries, and which, therefore, present no technical difficulties; on the other hand, it is said that this is truly a very difficult question, the solution of which would require a supreme effort. I am entirely of the latter opinion. We shall encounter insurmountable obstacles, those which may be called technical in a somewhat wider sense of the term. I believe that the question of effectives can not be regarded by itself alone, disconnected from a number of other questions to which it is quite subordinated.

"Such questions, for instance, as the state of public instruction, the length of time of active military service, the number of established regiments, the effectives of each army unit, the number and duration of the drills or military obligations of the reserves, the location of the different army corps, the railway system, the number and situation of fortified places. In a modern army all of these belong together and form the national defense which each people has organized according to its character, its history, and its traditions, taking into account its economical resources, its geographical situation, and duties incumbent upon it. I believe that it would be very difficult to substitute for such an eminently national task an international convention. It would be impossible to determine the extent and the force of one single portion of this complicated mechanism." * * *

He then proceeded to amplify the reasons mentioned and to maintain that in order to preserve the equilibrium as to armaments governments must be left free to chose the means best suited to their requirements.

Notwithstanding the support given to the Russian proposition by France, one of the most martial of the nations, and by various other governments, the objections voiced by the German delegate were too serious to be overcome. The sentiment of the members was that the conference should avoid forming majority and minority parties, and hence nothing should be put forth as its action which could not command a practically unanimous support. The most that could be accomplished, therefore, was a general expression of sentiment on the subject in the following declarations, which were unanimously adopted:

"The conference is of opinion that the restriction of military changes, which are at present a heavy burden on the world, is extremely desirable for the increase of the material and moral welfare of mankind.

"The conference expresses the wish that the governments, taking into consideration the proposals made at the conference, may examine the possibility of an agreement as to the limitation of armed forces by land and sea and of our budgets."

While there was much regret felt at the failure to adopt some initiative for the limitation of armaments, it was something gained that a public declaration by such a body was made that the present military establishments are a heavy burden on the world, which it is extremely desirable, in the interest of the material and moral welfare of mankind, should be restricted, and that it is the duty of the governments of the earth to seek to reach an agreement to that end.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURTON of Ohio) there were—ayes 93, noes 129.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio and Mr. Foss were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 103, noes 135.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, on page 71, in line 22, all after the words "United States" down to the end of line 14, on page 72, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "In accordance with the latest improvements in the construction of ships and the production of armor and armament, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to prepare plans and specifications for the best type of seagoing battle ships, carrying the most suitable armor and armanent, and to submit to Congress a general description of such type of battle ship on the first Monday in December next; and said Secretary, in preparing said plans and description, shall review and further consider what should be its displacement, what should be the form and location of its turrets, what should be the number and kind of its guns of various sizes, what torpedo tubes, if any, it should contain, to what extent electricity should be used for auxiliary purposes, and all other questions which have arisen and are now pending among naval architects and ordnance experts concerning the construction of battle ships under modern conditions; and the said Secretary shall, to such an extent as he may deem expedient, report to Congress in connection with said description his opinion upon the foregoing questions."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 71, strike out all, commencing with line 25, page 71, down to and including line 14, page 72, and insert:

"One first-class battle ship, carrying the heaviest armor and most powerful armament for a vessel of its class upon a trial displacement of not more than 16,000 tons, to have the highest practicable speed and great radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $4,400,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Three torpedo-boat destroyers, to have the highest practicable speed, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not to exceed $750,000 each.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after line 12, page 72, as follows:

"One steel floating dry dock, to be so constructed as to serve the purpose of a repair ship and capable of being propelled or towed to any place that may be necessary for the use of the fleet, or any part thereof, for such purpose, to cost not exceeding $1,250,000, of which amount the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated."

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is a violation of clause 2 of Rule XXI.

Mr. MUDD. I do not disguise the fact, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment is substantially a reinstatement, if it should prevail, of the provision in the bill that came from the committee, and it is in the nature of a committee amendment for that purpose, and I offer it by authority of the committee. Mr. Chairman, this amendment occupies a somewhat different footing under this paragraph than it did under the paragraph of which the original provision was a part. The beginning of this section reads as follows:

That for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States, the President is hereby authorized to have constructed by contract or in navy-yards as hereinafter provided.

My contention is that anything that by fair intendment can be said in pursuance of this language to constitute a part of the naval establishment or be considered a natural necessary incident thereof, is in order under this paragraph. Now, Mr. Chairman, the amendment upon its face states in effect that the dry dock shall be capable of following the fleet anywhere for the purpose of repairs to ships, and it is to be especially so constructed as to serve the purpose of repair of ships. In that connection, in addition to the observations I made the other day, I want to call attention to one decision. It is not for the Chair to inquire now whether what I state in the amendment be accurate in point of fact or not. The amendment on its face states that the dock shall be so constructed as to be in fact, a repair ship, and a ship capable of being propelled or towed to follow the fleet. Now, to read from Hind's Precedents:

Mr. TAWNEY. What page?

Mr. MUDD. It is 355 of the Manual; not the Parliamentary Precedents. Mr. Chairman, I read from the Manual, which was prepared by the same gentleman who prepared the Parliamentary Precedents, on page 355, as follows: "The admissibility of an amendment should be judged from the provision of its text rather than from the purpose which circumstances may suggest." I refer also to a decision made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] in the Fifty-seventh Congress. I think it was on page 889 of the RECORD of the Fifty-seventh Congress, first session. The present Speaker of the House, who was then chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, offered a provision for the establishment in the vicinity of Manila of a military post, including construction of barracks and quarters for officers, hospitals, etc. The point of order was made against it, and the chairman of that committee admitted that the point of order would lie. Immediately the chairman of the committee, the present Speaker of the House, changed his amendment to the following form: "For the proper shelter and protection of officers and enlisted men of the United States lawfully on duty in the Philippine Islands, to be expended in the discretion of the President, $500,000." It was admitted in the debate that the amendment was for the same purpose as the amendment that had been previously offered, to which the point of order it was admitted would lie. I will read the language of Mr. Richardson, of Tennessee, upon page 889, in which he said:

This is simply an indirect effort to carry his point and accomplish that which the gentleman could not accomplish directly.

That was admitted to be the fact, but the ruling of the Chair, which is found on page 895 and from which I read briefly, is to the following effect:

It is for the Chair to look * * * at the text of the amendment and not at the purpose of the amendment. That idea of the Chair is strengthened by rulings of former occupants of the chair.

In the last Congress, when the amendment for irrigation was proposed, amendment after amendment was ruled out of order by the then occupant of the chair, the committee understanding all the time that each preceding amendment was intended for the same purpose as the preceding was, until finally an amendment was proposed in such form that the Chair ruled it in order, holding at that time that it was the text that must govern the Chair rather than the purpose back of the amendment.

It seems to the Chair that the question to be determined here is whether this amendment as it appears, as it reads, regardless of the purpose that may be back of it, is an appropriation provided for by existing law. It is not for the Chair to determine what is the privilege of the amendment. Jefferson, in his Manual, says, "It is not for the Chair to draw the question of consistence within the vortex of order."

Mr. Chairman, I could read from several competent expert authorities to convince the Chair that the floating dry dock of the character that we are now building, and propose to build with further improvements in the future, can be fairly considered as one of the boats of the fleet, but I do not have to prove that because, according to the ruling which I have just read, if the amendment upon its face is regular and within the rule, the Chair can not look behind that into its purpose or to discover a contrary purpose, and that amendment practically is for the purpose of including in this bill a repair ship for the use of the fleet and to follow the fleet wherever it goes, and comes properly under the head of increase of the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The authorities are in harmony upon the proposition that dry docks are not an essential part of the equipment of the Navy proper. The present occupant of the chair so held a few days ago, and this amendment, the Chair thinks, is within the principle laid down by the Chair in that decision. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after line 17, page 72, as follows: "One large steel vessel, capable of lifting, receiving, and docking the largest battle ship afloat, to be so constructed as to answer the purposes of a self-docking dry dock and repair ship, to cost not exceeding $1,250,000, of which amount the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment. It is the same amendment, and offered for the accomplishment of the same identical purpose as the amendment which the gentleman offered a moment ago contemplated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is obnoxious to the rule, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and the decision of the Chair was held to be the judgment of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the contract for the construction of said vessels shall be awarded by the Secretary of the Navy to the lowest best responsible bidder, having in view the best results and most expeditious delivery; and in the construction of all of said vessels the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," as to materials for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, the notice of any proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts shall be observed and followed, and, subject to the provisions of this act, all said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, and in all their parts shall be of domestic manufacture; and the steel material shall be of domestic manufacture, and of the quality and characteristics best adapted to the various purposes for which it may be used, in accordance with specifications approved by the Secretary of the Navy; and not more than one of the vessels provided for in this act shall be built by one contracting party: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may build any or all of the vessels herein authorized in such navy-yards as he may designate, and shall build any of the vessels herein authorized in such navy-yards as he may designate should it reasonably appear that the persons, firms, or corporations, or the agents thereof, bidding for the construction of any of said vessels have entered into any combination, agreement, or understanding the effect, object, or purpose of which is to deprive the Government of fair, open, and unrestricted competition in letting contracts for the construction of any of said vessels: Provided, That the limit of cost, exclusive of armor and armament, of the battle ship Connecticut, authorized by the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, be increased to $4,600,000, and that the limit of cost, exclusive of armor and armament, of each of the two training vessels authorized by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1903, be increased to $410,000: And provided further, That the limit of cost, exclusive of armor and armament, of each of the two colliers authorized by the act of Congress approved April 27, 1904, be increased to $1,550,000.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 72, line 21, after the words "expeditious delivery," insert the following:

"Provided, That any bid for the construction of any of said vessels upon the Pacific coast shall have a differential of 4 per cent in its favor, which shall be considered by the Secretary of the Navy in awarding contracts for the construction of said vessels."

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, this is the provision that has been in nearly all naval appropriation bills for some years, and it is necessary in order to permit the institutions engaged in the building of ships on the Pacific coast to have opportunity to secure some of these contracts. This differential is rendered necessary on account of the higher price of wages on the Pacific coast and the high price of material, and the fact that freight must be paid from the East on the armor plate and all heavy material used in the construction of these ships. Heretofore, I believe, this House has pursued this policy, because it has been thought wise to maintain upon the Pacific coast, or to enable private persons to maintain plants where large ships of this kind may be constructed. As before stated, I believe that this is substantially the same provision as has been incorporated in most of the naval appropriation bills for many years.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I would state that for a number of years this preferential was allowed, but during the last few years, or since the bidding on the part of some of the shipbuilding companies on the Pacific coast, they have demonstrated that they could build as cheaply there as they can on the eastern coast. There was one case that I recall where their bid was less than that of the eastern shipbuilders. And I say that, in view of this fact, the Department has not in the last few years recommended this differential.

Mr. GILLETT of California. Mr. Chairman, in relation to this amendment I desire to say only a few words. A few years ago a differential of 4 per cent was allowed to ships built on the Pacific coast. I understand also there was a bid made independent of such a differential, for which a loss was suffered. Now, it seems to me that the policy of maintaining a navy-yard on the Pacific, a yard in which war ships can be constructed and repaired, is a wise one and should be encouraged. There are thirty-eight vessels in the course of construction to-day, as I understand it, in the United States. Of these there are but two in the course of construction on the Pacific slope. They are about completed. In a month or two the work will be done. Therefore we ask Congress at this time, considering the conditions existing there in San Francisco, to extend to the coast this favor. It is true that we can not build vessels on the Pacific coast as cheaply as they can be built in the East, on account of wages being higher there and on account of the expense in transporting material to so great a distance; but we can build as good ships on the Pacific coast as can be constructed in any yard in the world, as was evidenced by the construction of the great battle ship Oregon. But the people of San Francisco, the mechanics and laborers resting there now within their tents and huts, are seeking a job. They want employment and are deserving of it. We want to keep the mechanics and laborers of the Union Iron Works employed, and therefore we ask that we have a chance to bid on this battle ship. I do not believe that the Government will lose much in doing it, because let it once be known that this differential is given in favor of the Pacific coast, and it will force down bids on the eastern coast. Leave out of the bill the differential we ask for, and the bids will be high; but if eastern builders must bid against the coast, knowing we have the advantage in the bidding by reason of this differential, it will force their bids down, and if the Pacific coast does not secure the prize the Government will get the advantage of lower bids. We ask the Members of this House to do what has been the practice in the past, allow this differential, and give our mechanics and laborers on the coast a chance to get a job at this time, when their necessities are so great. We have only two vessels on the coast being constructed, against thirty-six now being constructed in the East. The East will furnish the material, the laborers in the East will make the material, and all that is asked is to permit our laborers to build the ship, and thus secure their share of what it costs to construct the magnificent ship which this bill calls for and which will be the greatest war ship in the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES].

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GILLETT of California. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 86.

Mr. HAYES of California. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. Foss and Mr. HAYES of California were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 78, noes 76.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment at the end of line 10, page 74.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 10, on page 74, insert: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for armor for vessels herein authorized, except upon contracts for such armor when awarded by the Secretary of the Navy to the lowest responsible bidder, having in view the best results and most expeditious delivery."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. The amendment is a limitation upon the appropriation, or so much of the appropriation as carried here for armor to be used in connection with the construction of the vessels authorized.

Mr. FOSS. I want to say to the gentleman that the amendment should be offered to the paragraph down below, I think, headed "Armor and armament." The paragraph above is exclusive of armament.

Mr. TAWNEY. I withdraw the amendment until we reach the bottom of page 74.

Mr. DUNWELL. Mr. Chairman, as a Member of this House I have the honor to represent in part that noble metropolis which comprises in its citizenship one-twentieth of the population of this great nation, and a more enlightened, broad-minded, intelligent community does not exist on the globe. It is in their name and in their interest that I desire to say a word regarding these battle ships and their construction. Within the confines of the great city from which I come is located the most important navy-yard in the United States. A few years ago it was determined by Congress in its wisdom to provide for the building of one of the new United States battle ships at that yard. Accordingly the order was issued; the yard was furnished with machinery and the other essentials of construction; a force of men the equal of any ever assembled was called together, and the great work began. It is now practically finished. The ship is named the Connecticut, after a glorious State—one of the original thirteen. There she sits on the placid waters of the bay, the pride of modern naval architecture, the grandest ship the American Navy has ever known, the noblest specimen of the shipbuilder's art now floating on the waters of the world.

Mr. Chairman, we want more ships like her. We want some of them constructed, as she has been, in the navy-yards of the United States. We do not consider that it would be wise or just or creditable to the country to permit that splendid body of American artisans to disperse, never to come together again; that wonderful machinery, procured and constructed at so much expense and with so much care, to rust away and decay.

The plant and equipment of the Brooklyn Navy-Yard are among the very best in the country, manned by upward of 2,000 of the best shipbuilders in the world.

The time allowed for the building of the Connecticut was forty-one months, and she will be in commission before the expiration of that time. Never before has this happened since our modern naval programme began.

It is claimed by some of those who oppose the Government's building its own ships that the Connecticut has cost 9 per cent more than her sister ship, the Louisiana; but, considering the average amount of time over the time limit consumed in the construction of ships heretofore built in private yards, which is fully two years, and computing the interest on the contract price of these two ships, we have these results:

Cost of Connecticut in excess of cost of Louisiana	$378,000
Interest on $8,400,000 for two years	1,008,000

It is an acknowledged fact that the construction of the Louisiana would have been delayed to the extent that every other battle ship has been heretofore, had it not been for the splendid work and hustling powers of the builders of the Connecticut.

Leaving all the various indirect benefits of this description, and they are many, out of the consideration, we claim that the vastly superior construction of the Connecticut and the fact that she will not so soon or as often need repairs, makes her worth at least $500,000 more than her sister ship.

One of the principal causes, moreover, of the increased cost of the Connecticut over the Louisiana lies in the fact that the working day in the navy-yards of the Government is eight hours long, while ten hours represents the day in private yards. The Government day is fixed by law made by the Government. Would it be just, then, think you, for the Government after fixing the working day's duration, to deprive its citizens of the privilege of working for their bread because they enjoy the benefit of this benign Government regulation regarding labor?

There can be no doubt, in my judgment, that if the construction of battle ships is continued in the navy-yards there will be a still further reduction of time consumed in their building, and, besides that, a great additional reduction in cost, and that a still further advance will be made in the perfection of their sea power.

We believe that the work is better and more carefully done, and that the difference in the merit of the work is parallel to the difference between building houses by contract and by days' work. It would be far better, it strikes me, for the Government to pursue a generous policy toward their own shops and their own men than to shut them out entirely from any competition and permit all the work of the Navy to be done by the contract labor of the private yards.

Many gentlemen on this floor are advocates of the betterment of American labor. Here is an opportunity to prove our good faith in this matter and to sustain the eight-hour day, which the Government has prescribed, by causing the building of one of the three great battle ships already provided for in one of the navy-yards of the United States.

I am willing that it be put down as a part of my creed that I believe in peace, that I also believe in a great American navy as a conservator of peace. I believe, too, that the more powerful the nation is, the more it can command peace. Our noble country is now the wealthiest and most powerful on earth and able to take the position which of right belongs to her. "Where Macgregor sits, that is the head of the table." Let us remember that and take Macgregor's place at the board of the nations, for of right it is clearly ours.

[Mr. GOLDFOGLE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to contract for or purchase subsurface or submarine torpedo boats, to an amount not exceeding $1,000,000, after such competitive tests as he shall see fit to prescribe, to determine the comparative efficiency of the different boats for which bids may be submitted: Provided, That such competitive tests shall take place within six months from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend this section by striking out the proviso, in lines 16 to 18, on page 74, that reads, "Provided, That such competitive tests shall take place within six months from the date of the passage of this act," and offer the following proviso in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the proviso, in lines 16, 17, and 18, page 74, and insert: "Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consider designs for improved submarine torpedo boats presented by any individual or corporation who may have patented or designed or built submarine torpedo boats; and if, after careful consideration, the Secretary is of the opinion that any of said designs embody features which indicate clearly the development of greater efficiency in actual service than has been or probably can be obtained in submarine boats hitherto built or in course of construction for the United States Navy, then in such case the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to have constructed by contract or in navy-yards, under such conditions as he may prescribe, one or more submarine boats upon such designs hereinbefore mentioned as fulfill the foregoing requirements as to superior efficiency; and the Secretary of the Navy is furthermore authorized to purchase said designs at such reasonable compensation as may, in his discretion, appear suitable, if said purchase is considered to be necessary for the best interests of the naval service; and in the event of said purchase of designs by the Secretary of the Navy, the designer shall specifically guarantee the Navy Department, by suitable bond or otherwise, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, against all liability for the use of any and all patents which are embodied or used in said designs."

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order on the amendment, that it is clearly legislation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Can I have order so that I can hear the gentleman's point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts raises the question of order that the amendment changes existing law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, in reference to the point of order I will state that the object of this amendment is to open wide the door of competition for building submarine torpedo boats. The section to which the amendment is offered provides that a million dollars shall be appropriated for the purchase or contract for of subsurface or submarine boats. The section further provides that competitive tests of these different boats shall be made—that is, of boats already built a test shall take place within six months after the passage of this act.

Now, the result of the passage of this section of the bill without amendment would be this: There are but two companies that build boats and have got submarine boats built to-day in the United States. One of those companies is known as the Electric Company, which builds what was formerly known as the Holland boat. The other, the Lake Company, builds what is known as the Lake boat. They both have boats that could enter this competition. But the Navy Department takes into consideration the question of speed in considering these boats; and, as I understand it, it is generally conceded that the old Holland boat, built by the Electric Company, can make 7½ knots an hour of speed, while the Lake boat, although a very useful boat for submarine diving and some other purposes, as at present built, is generally conceded to have a speed limited to 5 knots an hour; and that would be considered in the test. The effect of this section as it appears in the bill would limit the competition to the boat of the Electric Company and eliminate all other competitors. In other words, the effect of this section, if you pass it as it stands to-day, is a provision that we shall appropriate a million dollars to buy boats from the Electric Company.

Now, they are good boats; they are effective boats; I believe in building submarine boats. I believe it is an evolution in naval affairs. I believe an effective submarine boat will in the future be the greatest protection to the shores of America from a foreign enemy; but I believe it is an evolution. It is simply in its infancy to-day. I do not believe it has reached the period where it has passed beyond the experimental stage. And I believe every opportunity should be given the Navy Department and its officers to test the efficiency of such boats.

Mr. ROBERTS. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that the gentleman from Alabama is not confining his remarks to the point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am trying to explain what the section provides, and then what my amendment will provide, and see whether it is existing law or whether it is not under the amendment.

Mr. ROBERTS. Well, Mr. Chairman, the argument of the gentleman is in favor of the amendment if he gets by the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will address himself to the point of order and continue in order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am trying to continue in order, and I do not see how I can show that it is not contrary to existing law unless I can first show what is the provision of the section. But I will try to observe the admonition of the Chair.

Now, as I stated, Mr. Chairman, this provision before the committee provides for these submarine torpedo boats. It provides how this competition shall take place; and in my judgment limits the competition to one company. That being the case, and believing that we ought to open the door to a wider competition, I have prepared for the purpose of offering here an amendment that would open the door of competition wide to the world.

Now, the question of order is as to whether this amendment is applicable and germane to the section. No point of order has been made against the section of the bill. Therefore, an amendment that is germane and a limitation, a proper limitation, on the section of the bill must be in order, because no point of order has been made against the provision of the bill; and I will not, without the Chair desires me to do so, continue the argument on that point.

Mr. BOWIE. Mr. Chairman, I have another point of order—the House is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. ROBERTS. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama is clearly legislation, in that it permits and authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to purchase plans of boats. There is no law to-day allowing the Secretary of the Navy to purchase the plans of any boat. That point of order on that part of the amendment is clearly good; and if one part of the amendment is subject to the point of order, the whole amendment is bad.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to contract for the purchase of subsurface or submarine torpedo boats to an amount not exceeding $1,000,000, and provides for a competitive test to determine the better type of boat. It is probable, although the Chair does not undertake to decide that question, that the provision for competitive tests is not in order, but no point of order having been made to it, that provision is subject to amendment by any proposition that is germane to the idea of competition; and the Chair construes this amendment to mean the elaboration of that proposition, and therefore holds it in order.

Mr. ROBERTS. If the Chair will pardon me, the provision in the bill provides for a competitive test of boats, not of designs or plans, but actually constructed boats, and it seems to me that the Chair can not fairly hold that plans can be put in fairly with that language in competition with the constructed boat.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the purchase of plans may be an incident to the element of competition, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the courtesy of the committee for ten minutes to explain the amendment.

Mr. FOSS. I would like to finish this bill to-night, and I think we can do so, for we are practically at the end of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for ten minutes in discussing his amendment.

Mr. FOSS. I will not object to five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, I am entitled to five minutes.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I dislike very much, Mr. Chairman, but I think I must object. I am a member of the Naval Committee, and have not asked the attention of the House for five minutes this afternoon.

Mr. COCKRAN. That is the loss of the House.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Rather the relief of the House.

Mr. COCKRAN. It is the loss of the House, I insist.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, if the House will listen to me, I will try and explain the substance of my amendment in the five minutes that I am entitled to. In the first place, I want to say the amendment was not prepared by myself, but was prepared by the Navy Department at my request. The Navy Department is taking no part in this matter, but they prepared an amendment at my request that would open this question of competition to everybody. This amendment was prepared by the Navy Department so that competition will be open to anybody who wanted to submit plans.

Now, I understand that there are gentlemen who have boats, who desire to enter into this competition, boats that they claim will produce a speed of 25 knots an hour. I am reliably informed that one of these boats has been tested, in miniature boat, and the report is on file in the Navy Department showing a production of 22 knots of speed an hour. Now, if that is the case, and I understand it is a fact, that there is a miniature boat that has been tested that will produce 22 knots an hour, isn't it folly for this House to tie the hands of the Navy Department and say that we shall not have any competition, that you shall only buy the old boats, boats we have tried before, that have only shown a speed of 7½ knots an hour, when it is possible to produce a boat that will bring the speed up to over 20 knots an hour, that can run down a battle ship in the offing? I think it would be folly for us to make such a limitation on the bill.

The only provision in this amendment I offer, the only desire I have is to open the matter to fair competition to every one, so that everybody may have a fair test and that there shall be no monopoly in the building of these boats.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman inform the House that there is no competition in this matter?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I stated that this competition as it stands limits the competition to boats that are built and to plans and specifications as we usually build ships. My understanding is that there are but two companies that could compete within the six months. One is the Lake and the other is the Electric. I am further informed, and I believe from a reliable source, that the Holland boats show a speed of 7½ knots, and the Lake boat only about 5 knots, and as the Navy Department construes the speed as an element in the competition, it practically limits the competition to the Holland boats, and therefore there is no competition.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. And the gentleman seeks to open the door of competition wider?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. So wide that these men who claim that they have a boat—they may not have it—may enter the competition. Give them a chance to demonstrate whether they have a boat that can make 22 knots an hour.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. And the gentleman anticipates that the Government will thereby probably get a better boat at less cost?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is what I hope to do.

Mr. MUDD. I understand that there is another boat that can get ready for the test in six months.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I don't think it could.

Mr. SULZER. Why not make it twelve instead of six months?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Because it has been customary to build ordinary boats——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Alabama be extended for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I will yield one minute out of my time that the gentleman may ask a question.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know why twelve months would not be long enough.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Twelve months might be long enough, but it is customary in building ships of the Navy to take competitive plans as well as competitive boats. As a matter of fact, the taking of competitive boats is a new departure in building a navy.

Mr. SULZER. These boats can be built very quickly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the form of this amendment is not mine. It was prepared in the Navy Department. It is what the Navy Department think would bring about the proper thing.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield any longer. Mr. Chairman, there is one thing I wish to call to the attention of the committee with regard to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama. This matter of plans being submitted to the Navy Department has been thoroughly gone over in the committee, and it was decided that that was not the proper thing to do, and for this reason: When the Government started out on the development of submarine boats it advertised for plans and it got plans, and the result of that advertisement was universal disapproval by those whose plans were not accepted, and the plans that were accepted turned out to be a failure; so that the boat built under them was not a success and the parties who built it had to refund to the Government its money. In view of the trouble the Department has had heretofore in this matter of plans, the Department prefers now that we should have boats, and when anybody has an idea that is of any value it is desired that they shall incorporate that into a concrete form and bring it to the Department, and within the provisions of a bill reported by the committee there is scope enough to give the most complete competition and the widest latitude tests possible.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ROBERTS. If I can have my time extended I will, but I must decline to yield under the circumstances. If we are to go back after thirteen years of progress in the development of submarine warfare to the first principles of considering plans, then we are practically at a standstill in this important arm of national defense, and I submit that the Department should keep advancing in this matter.

I want to call attention to one point in the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama, which provides that the men submitting plans shall furnish a bond to the Government to protect the Government from any infringement suits. The gentleman says his amendment was drawn up by the Department. As a matter of fact, that amendment was suggested by the attorney of a man who has a submarine boat in his head, and he admits and has admitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs in a communication over his own signature that he was tied up in lawsuits; that he is being sued for infringements and for failure to comply with his contracts, so that if this provision were adopted the result of it would be to bring the Government into a lawsuit over certain patents which may or may not have any effect on the matter of the development of these submarine boats. I believe if anybody has a boat built we should try that boat. I want the broadest competition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] what he knows with reference to the statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama was prepared by an attorney in this city.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman asks me whether this was prepared by an attorney of another boat company.

Mr. ROBERTS. Not of another boat company.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state that an attorney in the city of Washington who wanted to come into competition in this matter presented an amendment and asked me to offer it. I told him that I would not offer it until I had submitted it to the Navy Department. I did submit it to the Navy Department. It was not satisfactory to them and they returned the amendment that I have offered—not the one the attorney presented me—as one which they said would open this question to competition, and which the Navy Department sent back to me. Now, if they had some attorney in the Navy Department who prepared this plan I do not know about it, but I received this amendment back in a letter under the signature of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. ROBERTS. May I ask the gentleman a question? Does the gentleman wish the committee to understand that the Navy Department approves of this amendment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I do not. I did not say so.

Mr. ROBERTS. Did not the Secretary of the Navy send another letter to the gentleman expressly disapproving or rather withdrawing any supposed approval of this?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not said that the Secretary of the Navy approved this amendment.

Mr. ROBERTS. That was the impression the gentleman sought to convey when he said the Department prepared it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not seek to give that impression at all. I simply said that I asked the Navy Department to prepare an amendment that would open this whole question to competition of everybody, and they sent back the amendment that I have sent to this desk, and I did not say that they approved it or that they would disapprove it.

They sent me that amendment as one that would open this question to fair competition.

Mr. ROBERTS. Now, is it not a fact that amendment was prepared by the bureau chief and not by the Secretary or Assistant Secretary?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know as to that; it came in the letter.

Mr. ROBERTS. Does not your letter expressly state so?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think not.

Mr. ROBERTS. I have a copy here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It came in the letter, and whether it was prepared by a bureau chief, an attorney in the Department, or the Secretary himself, I do not know, but it came to me from the Secretary of the Navy, and I wish the House to understand that I do not say that the Secretary is taking any active part in this one way or the other, that he is in favor of the proposition or against it, but I say he is authority for the fact that if you pass that amendment you will give free competition to everybody and not create a monopoly in passing this proposition.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to address the committee briefly, and I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the Committee on Naval Affairs is taking an extraordinary interest in the apparent attempt to shut out competition in the purchase of submarine boats. I am a good deal of a landlubber, and do not know anything about submarine boats, but I understand the application of the principle of competition, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama is to provide competition, so that the United States may buy better boats at less cost, and I do not understand how gentlemen of the committee can defend a proposition that seeks to exclude competition, to keep the Government in the clutch of a monopoly, and provide, possibly, inferior boats and increase its bill of cost for that item. I have not heard any clear explanation yet of the extraordinary attitude of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I will say that since I have been a Member of this Congress my mails have been flooded with literature pointing significantly to a state of affairs in connection with submarine boats that needs something more than a mere glossing over by this House. I believe it needs to be looked at beneath the surface; that Congress itself should conduct a little submarine investigation of this question. [Applause.] Now, the gentlemen says that the House ought not to provide a means of competition in order to give good boats at a fair price, and he bases that argument upon this fact and this fact alone, that thirteen years ago, forsooth, plans were submitted and the scheme went awry, and because there was failure thirteen years ago to provide an effective means of competition, that the Naval Affairs Committee shall turn its face forever against all plans for providing competition.

It seems to me that, after the lapse of thirteen years in the progress of time and in the march of invention, some means must have been found to provide boats better than those that were designed and constructed thirteen years ago, and the Government ought not to deny to itself the benefit of the march of science and the progress of invention. But if it follows the lead of the Committee on Naval Affairs it will do so. We ought to give to the Secretary of the Navy, what obviously he would be glad to have, the means of getting competition upon these submarine boats, so as to give the people of the United States all that they can get for their money and the very best article that that money would purchase. I say I am a stranger to the subject, but it has a most sinister aspect, it seems to me, and I say it boldly, and I ask that some gentleman give a better explanation of the attempt to exclude competition than has so far been given by the Committee on Naval Affairs. [Applause.]

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. The chief argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts is that this committee by the provision in its bill is trying to cut off competition. Now, such is not the case. When this matter was up before the committee it was understood that there was a wrangle between two institutions which make the submarine boats—that is, the Lake Torpedo Boat Company and the Electric Boat Company. We understood that the Lake Torpedo Boat Company contended that it had not heretofore had a fair chance in the competition, and the provisions of this bill were submitted to two gentlemen of the committee for the purpose of preparing it and so wording it that both concerns should have a fair chance and a square deal in the competition. At that time we did not know of any other concern in this country proposing to build submarine boats.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. May I ask the gentleman? I have understood there were no hearings before the committee on this subject. How could it be possible for them to be heard? I never heard of them asking to be heard.

Mr. GREGG. The matter was discussed—that is, the complaint of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. By whom?

Mr. GREGG. By the committee.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. But I understand that hearings were not held on the subject.

Mr. GREGG. That matter was up, and we understood that the Lake torpedo-boat people claimed that they had not had a fair show, and it was referred to two gentlemen of the committee, and they worded this provision in the bill so as to meet the criticism that had been made upon the Navy Department before.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREGG. I have but five minutes, and the gentleman can talk after I get through. It is not a question of opening up competition by this amendment at all; but the effect of this amendment, if adopted, would be to prevent the construction of any torpedo boats at all. There has sprung a "new Richmond in the field." It is the J. P. Holland Torpedo Boat Company, which does not propose to offer a boat for competition, but only plans for a boat.

The Government tried accepting plans once and got badly left. Since then its policy has been to make anybody that wanted to sell the Government a torpedo boat build a boat and present it to the Government, and the Government would then test the different competing boats and decide which one they wanted. This provision as drawn in the bill is in conformity with that adopted plan.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Just a moment.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GREGG. I have said I could not yield, and I can not. I only have five minutes, and it is so late I could not ask an extension of time. If we adopt this amendment it will be a backward step, and if we go to experimenting with plans again we will meet another failure, as we did with our first experiment, which will discourage the buying of such boats, and will, in my judgment, amount to our having no more for some time at least.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. How do you know that?

Mr. GREGG. I judge by our past experience.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. You are making a prediction.

Mr. GREGG. If these people want to build a boat, and come up and present it to the Government and have it compete with other boats, they can do it under the provisions of this bill. It is claimed that they can not build one in six months. Mr. J. P. Holland, in a letter to the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee [Mr. Foss], says that his boat can be built in six months. If they can do so why do they not build their boat and come up and compete with other boats? The fact is that they simply want to build a paper boat instead of an actual boat. They want to sell to the Government their plans—their boat on paper—and have the Government take all the chances on the boat being a success. I want us to buy a boat and not ideas as to how to make a boat.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I wish to call the committee's attention to the fact that the proviso providing for a competition of boats states that the competition must take place within six months, and not even six months from the time the appropriation takes effect, but six months from the date of the passage of the act. From the Navy reports it requires eighteen months to build a submarine torpedo boat; consequently this proviso for competition among boats provides only for a competition among boats that are practically already constructed. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words. I would like to ask the chairman of the Naval Committee what objection there can be to accepting the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]? What is the objection that swayed and governed the committee in excluding competition by Mr. Holland, who is himself the original inventor of the boat which will be built under the operation of this provision?

Mr. FOSS. I would rather the gentleman would ask the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND], who had charge of the framing of this provision. I must confess, so far as I am concerned, that I have very little faith in submarine boats, anyway.

Mr. COCKRAN. The million dollars, then, it seems, would go where the gentleman has no faith. It is evident money travels much more swiftly than faith.

Mr. FOSS. The committee, however, saw fit to put it in, and I shall stand by the action of the committee.

Mr. COCKRAN. A million dollars is a very substantial monument to faith, Mr. Chairman. Those of us who do not have that faith now, for lack of information, surely have the right to ask for enlightenment. What is the objection, I want to ask some gentleman on the committee, to giving the Secretary of the Navy discretionary power to avail himself of such improvements and inventions as may be made in this field, which is admittedly novel, by adopting the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]?

Mr. VREELAND. When the gentleman has concluded his remarks, I will answer.

Mr. COCKRAN. I have no remarks to make. I merely wanted to put a question.

Mr. VREELAND. The gentleman seems to be making remarks.

Mr. COCKRAN. I am merely propounding a question.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Does not your proviso exclude competition from everybody but two concerns?

Mr. VREELAND. I have not the floor at present. When I am recognized, I will answer the question.

Mr. COCKRAN. I have submitted the question. I have only taken the floor for the purpose of asking information.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last five words.

Mr. Chairman, it is true that I helped to frame the provision on submarines that has gone into the bill, but I do not want the House to assume too much on that account. I am not strongly attached to submarines upon their performances to date. There was no desire on the part of the Committee on Naval Affairs to shut out competition. They desired the most open and free competition. My personal wish was to turn the whole subject over to the Secretary of the Navy without reserve, and to turn over to him $500,000 or $1,000,000, and leave it absolutely at his discretion as to where it should be spent if he should think best to spend it. We have no facilities for testing submarines in our committee rooms; there are no facilities in this House for testing them. I therefore desired to turn the subject over to the Secretary of the Navy, where it could be treated upon its merits.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from New York permit a question, just for information?

Mr. VREELAND. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. What information did the committee have to justify it in fixing the limit of time to six months? That is the thing that is bothering me.

Mr. VREELAND. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG] has stated the reason why the committee finally put in the provision as to six months' time. We all remember the controversy between the Lake and Holland people a few years ago, when Members of Congress were ready to exclaim: "A plague on both your houses." We remember the recriminations that were thrown out each side, and we remember the dark hints as to what they could tell to the country if they wished. We desired to avoid that. We knew that there were only two submarine establishments at present building boats in this country. Our judgment is that if there is any other firm that wants to build a submarine boat it has ample time to build it before the time limit in this bill expires. But we were not willing, Mr. Chairman, to leave it open until another year, and for the benefit of some man who has no yard in which to build boats, who has simply plans to sell to the Government from which the Government could build a boat and test it at its own risk and its own expense. We have all received this literature from these different interests.

Mr. COCKRAN. I merely wish to ask a question. This amendment of the gentleman from Alabama does not make anything incumbent upon the Secretary of the Navy, as I understand it, but it leaves him free to accept these plans, if, in his judgment, they embody a distinct improvement upon the submarine boats now in existence. Does the gentleman's understanding of the amendment concur with mine?

Mr. VREELAND. I would say, Mr. Chairman, it is not the purpose or intention of the Committee on Naval Affairs to have the Government buy plans. None of these boats that have been bought by the Government at a large expense have been any too satisfactory. We do not want to buy the plans and the imaginations of the inventor as incorporated in the plans, but we want him to put his own ideas and his own money into that boat and present it to the Government and submit it to such tests as the Government shall see fit to prescribe. Then, if it comes up to those tests, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to pay out the money of the Government in purchasing it.

Mr. COCKRAN. On that status, if the plan for a boat is vastly superior to any now in existence and the inventor does not happen to have the means to construct that boat himself, the gentleman's policy would be to deny the Government the chance to get the benefit of it?

Mr. VREELAND. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] will acknowledge that he never met an inventor in his life who did not have plans for something superior to anything else.

Mr. COCKRAN. That is not my question. Will the country be denied the benefit of the invention even if the Government be convinced of its merit?

Mr. VREELAND. I have stated to the gentleman that we do not desire to have the Government purchase plans even if indorsed by the inventor and by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COCKRAN. But I speak of the approval of the Navy Department.

Mr. VREELAND. We want those plans to be incorporated in the vessel and that vessel tested according to tests prescribed by the Government, and then we are willing to say that the Government shall pay out a million dollars for it if it comes up to the ideas of the inventor.

Mr. COCKRAN. I will ask the gentleman this question, and see if I am correct in my interpretation of his position: However perfect the invention may be according to the plans, however satisfactory it may be to the Navy Department, the policy of the Naval Committee is to prevent the Department from getting the advantage of that invention, unless the inventor builds a boat himself?

Mr. VREELAND. That is it; unless the man who proposes this submarine were to put up his own money or the money of somebody else whom he can interest—perhaps the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN]—and test these boats before they are purchased by the Government. That is precisely the opinion of the committee.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VREELAND. I would be glad if the gentleman would permit me to complete another paragraph.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Just a simple question I desire to ask the gentleman.

Mr. VREELAND. Very well.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Suppose we bought the plans of the inventors and after accepting them, construction began. Would not the Government have the right to reject the finished work if it did not stand the test, just the same as if the Government did not buy the plans originally?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VREELAND. I ask five minutes more.

Mr. BOWIE. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER] is recognized.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I desire to offer an amendment, which I wish to have considered pending until this amendment is disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts will be recognized at the proper time to offer his amendment.

[Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] has an amendment to offer.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I offer an amendment which I desire to be pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 74, line 17, strike out the word "six" and insert the word "twelve."

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I offer this with the understanding that it is to be pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to the floor to discuss the amendment.

Mr. FOSS. I desire to move that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto end in five minutes.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer that amendment, which strikes out the word "six" in the words of the proviso and inserts the word "twelve," for this reason: I have been very much impressed with the statement of the gentleman from Texas to the effect that a competition of a paper plan is not what we want, but a competition of real boats. That, I think, is very forceful, and for that reason I would rather see that these vessels practically should be stricken out and then receive something in construction rather than pencil and paper and submit those boats to a test. But, on the other hand, I am very much impressed by the argument that six months is too short a time to give to Mr. J. P. Holland, or any other inventor, in which to prepare a boat for that sort of competition.

Mr. FOSS. I will say to the gentleman that I am willing to accept the amendment as far as I am concerned.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. On the statement of the chairman of the committee, who says he is willing to accept the amendment, I will yield the floor.

Mr. FOSS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments be closed.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments be closed.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. UNDERWOOD) there were—ayes 84, noes 90.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered. The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. VREELAND and Mr. UNDERWOOD.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 92.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 74, strike out all from line 11 to line 18, inclusive, and insert the following:

"For purchase of the even-keel submersible torpedo boat Lake $275,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and, further, the Secretary of the Navy may contract for the purchase of submersible, submarine, or subsurface torpedo boats to an amount not exceeding $725,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall, in contracting for the expenditure of this amount, provide for one cruising even-keel submersible torpedo boat to have an actual radius of action of 1,000 miles."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Armor and armament: Toward the armament and armor of domestic manufacture for vessels authorized, $15,145,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the amendment which the gentleman in charge of the bill has agreed to accept.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 25, page 74, insert:

"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for armor for vessels herein authorized, except upon contract for such armor when awarded by the Secretary of the Navy to the lowest responsible bidder, having in view the best results and most expeditious delivery."

Mr. FOSS. I understand the gentleman only seeks to get open, free, and fair competition?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is all.

Mr. FOSS. I will accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RIXEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in the very words of the last appropriation bill. That provision directs the Secretary of the Navy to cause a thorough inquiry to be made as to the cost of armor plate and of an armor plant, the report of which shall be made to Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as an independent section, after line 25, page 74, the words:

"And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall cause a thorough inquiry to be made as to the cost of armor plate and of an armor plant, the report of which shall be made to Congress."

Mr. DALZELL. I make a point of order against that that it is new legislation.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, this provision was carried in the bill which was passed about a year ago, and is the present law. When the Secretary of the Navy was before the committee he stated that he had not made the investigation, that his attention had not been called to it.

I suppose it is conceded that there is not time to make the investigation between this and the 1st day of July, and this amendment is for the purpose of giving the Secretary further time. The amendment is drawn in the identical words of the provision carried in the last appropriation bill, and is the law now. I suppose if it was proper a year ago it is proper now, especially as the Secretary of the Navy has not made that report. He has not the time to make it before the 1st of July, and this is to give him the opportunity to do what he was ordered to do a year ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule on the point of order. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment involves new legislation, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the paragraph of the bill last read. It seems to me remarkably strange that the Navy Department has not made investigation into the cost of armor plate and an armor plant, and has not made report to Congress as the law of Congress directed it to do. That law was enacted on the 3d day of March over a year ago. Over fourteen months have elapsed since that law was approved, and yet the Navy Department, one of the executive branches of this Government, has apparently treated this mandate of Congress with contempt, and ignored its provisions.

The price of armor plate is a question that has been vital in every Congress for many years. It has been charged repeatedly, and as I believe truly, that the Government has been held up by these armor-plate companies, and that these companies have charged the Government exorbitant prices. The Rohrer board some years ago reported to Secretary Herbert that the cost was less, as I recollect it, than $250 a ton. In the Fifty-sixth Congress some of us filed our views in which we discussed this question. For years we paid $545 per ton. We made a fight against it. Then the price came down about $100 a ton. Last year the Midvale Company bid $398 a ton, which was more than $50 less per ton than the Carnegie and Bethlehem armor-plate factories bid for Class A armor. With that low bid the Midvale Company got the contract for only about one-third of the armor needed—the old companies getting the balance at the higher prices. Congress, after much discussion of that question for years, writes into the statute books a requirement that the Secretary of the Navy make investigation of the cost of armor and an armor plant and report to Congress, but our law is treated, as I have said, with apparent contempt. What excuse has been given for it? What defense can any Member on the other side give for this neglect of the Navy Department? Did we not have a right to make that requirement? Were we not within our constitutional powers when we called upon an Executive Department to make this investigation and to report? Will any dispute our right to do it? Can any deny that we did it according to law? Yet this great body that holds the purse strings of the nation will remain silent at this failure to observe the law. When this law is attempted to be rewritten into the statute the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] raises a point of order against it.

It seems to me the gentleman from Pennsylvania would be glad to again write this into the law and to again call the attention of the Navy Department to this omission on its part. [Applause.] Why should anybody object to again calling for this information? Is there anybody that will say that we do not want it? Is there anybody who will say that this Congress is not entitled to have the information sought? Is there anybody who will say that these great armor-plate companies are above and beyond the right of Congress to investigate? Are they only to be considered? Are the people of this country to have no rights in regard to armor plate? I will be glad, Mr. Chairman, to hear some defense of this Department and to hear some reasons from any advocate on this floor why this requirement should not have been obeyed by the Navy Department. I shall be glad to learn the objections to this plain provision of the law and why it has been ignored. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like in reply to the gentleman from North Carolina, my colleague upon the committee, to promise here to join him in obtaining an answer from the Department to that resolution, which was appended to this bill last year. I agree with him that the Navy Department should have answered it. The only excuse for failing to answer lies in this statement, that the Secretaries have changed. Mr. Paul Morton was Secretary of the Navy when this resolution was directed to the Department. Mr. Bonaparte is now the Secretary. The law exists, and the passage of this bill will not repeal the amendment made to the bill last year. I will join with the gentleman in the request that the Navy Department answer that resolution, so that we may have the facts inquired for. [Applause.]

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to know if an amendment to the section last read—armor and armament—is now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that we have not yet passed that paragraph, and an amendment to it is in order.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say one word in response to the gentleman from North Carolina, as to the information sought to be had by reason of the resolution to which he refers. There are on file now a number of reports upon this identical subject, made by the Navy Department in pursuance of resolutions of Congress, and I have in my hand a letter which is addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations by the Secretary of the Navy, which I will read. It is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 11, 1906.

SIR: Replying to your letter of the 4th instant, in which you refer to the provision in the current naval appropriation act to the effect "that the Secretary of the Navy shall cause a thorough inquiry to be made as to the cost of armor plate and armor plant, the report of which shall be made to Congress," and request to be advised whether any investigation has been made under this direction, and, if so, that a copy of the report be sent you, I have the honor to inform you that no investigation has as yet been undertaken under the above-mentioned direction, in which, as you will observe, Congress fixed no time for the presentation of the report.

Attention is respectfully invited to the exhaustive investigations into these matters which have been made in prior years by Congress and the Navy Department. The results of these investigations are shown in the following public documents: Senate Report No. 1453, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, February 11, 1897; Senate Document No. 147, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, June 9, 1897; House Document No. 154, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, January 5, 1897; statements before the Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate, May 19, 1897; Senate Document No. 127, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, February 8, 1898; House Document No. 95, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, December 7, 1897.

Attention is further invited to the fact that since the dates of these prior investigations the Midvale Steel Company has entered as a competitor in the field of armor manufacture, and is now supplying armor at a lower price than are other companies.

Very respectfully,

CHARLES J. BONAPARTE,
Secretary.

Hon. J. A. TAWNEY,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

In addition to that, I desire to say that we have the cheapest armor in the United States that is furnished to any nation in the world. We have the best armor-plate factories in the United States that exist anywhere in the world, and there is no monopoly. On the contrary, there is very active competition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has clearly shown that the Secretary of the Navy treated the request of Congress with just sufficient respect to write a letter to the chairman of some committee referring Congress to some investigations that had taken place away back in 1897. Everybody knows that the cost of making armor plate has changed very much from that time, and that American manufacturers can make it very much cheaper now than they could at that time, and it seems to me that what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said and what he has read does not at all answer what has been said by the gentleman from North Carolina. It remains true that the Secretary of the Navy has treated a solemn resolution of request passed by this body with more than contempt. He not only has not answered it in the authoritative and official manner in which he should have answered it, but he has treated it cavalierly and as a matter that he could dismiss by writing a letter to the chairman of some committee of this House. It seems to me that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, his colleague [Mr. BUTLER], is right, and that the Secretary of the Navy owes it to the House to answer its request. The gentleman does not contend that there has been any specific reply to this specific resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after the word "dollars," in line 25, the following: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for armor for the battle ships South Carolina and Michigan to cost over $398 per ton."

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, all the armor plate which is necessary for ships under contract has been contracted for, and the contracts given to the Bethlehem and Carnegie and Midvale companies. The last contracts aggregated about 16,500 tons. On that proposition the Midvale Company bid $398 and the Bethlehem and Carnegie companies bid identically the same amount, $445.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit, he is mistaken about the last contract. The amount was 3,676 tons, and for the next to the last contract the amount was 14,420.

Mr. RIXEY. Perhaps the quantity was divided. I do know this, that there has been no good reason shown why the contract for all was not given to the Midvale Company. Admiral O'Neal, one of the best bureau officers of ordnance that we have ever had, stated that the Midvale Company was prepared to make as good armor plate as either the Carnegie or the Bethlehem companies; but the Navy Department only gave 6,000 tons of the 16,500 tons quantity to the Midvale Company, and gave the balance of the contract, about 10,000 tons, to the Bethlehem and Carnegie companies, at $55 a ton more.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit another interruption?

Mr. RIXEY. I will.

Mr. TAWNEY. The amendment which I had the honor to offer a few moments ago, and which was accepted by the gentleman in charge of the bill, I think will correct the evil of which the gentleman from Virginia is complaining, which is of not heretofore accepting the lowest bid when that bid was made by a responsible bidder, willing and capable of complying with the plans and specifications submitted by the Department.

Mr. RIXEY. I was in favor of the amendment which the gentleman from Minnesota offered, but the impression has recently gotten out that the Midvale company is now in the same combination with the Bethlehem and Carnegie companies.

Mr. DALZELL. I deny that.

Mr. RIXEY. I do not assert it as a positive fact, but you admit that the Bethlehem and Carnegie companies have an agreement on prices.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia my information, and I get my information not only from Members of Congress, but from people interested in the subject, is that there is absolutely no combination between those two concerns and there can not be under present conditions.

Mr. RIXEY. If there is no combination it would not take them long possibly to make one. Now, this fact remains: In the last two contracts the Midvale company offered to furnish as good armor plate at $398 as the Government was buying of the other companies for $445. If the Midvale company can make as good armor plate and can furnish it for $398, then we should not pay beyond that for what is needed, and this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, just one word. I entirely agree with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY] that the United States ought to get its armor plate at the very least possible cost, and there ought to be competition. And that there is a very bitter competition is a conceded fact at this time. It seems to me, with the provision that was put on this paragraph by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], that these armor-plate contracts shall not be let except after competition and at the lowest and best bids. It will be very foolish for us, purely as a business matter, to say that the Secretary of the Navy shall not be able to make a contract unless at a certain specified figure. It does not seem to be a particularly good business proposition.

Mr. RIXEY. Does not the gentleman remember that two years ago we paid this Bethlehem company and the Carnegie company $545 a ton?

Mr. DALZELL. I do.

Mr. RIXEY. We then put a limitation on that. We would not pay over $445, and this provision is simply in line with the policy that was adopted at that time.

Mr. DALZELL. It seems to me the Government is perfectly protected by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, and, as I said, it is not a good business proposition to say that the Secretary of the Navy shall not contract for armor plate unless at a specific sum named by Congress.

Mr. OLMSTED. Is it not a fact that at one time when Congress put a limit on armor plate the Secretary of the Navy was unable to get any?

Mr. DALZELL. That is true.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move to strike out the last two words. I offered the amendment requiring the Department to accept the lowest bid for armor plate, with knowledge of the fact that there is active competition between the manufacturers of armor plate in this country. And, believing that that competition must necessarily and will continue, I am satisfied the Government will get its armor plate at the lowest possible cost if we require the Department to avail itself of this competition and accept the lowest bid. I will state, Mr. Chairman, why I believe this. The Bethlehem and Carnegie companies, which now belong to what is known as the "steel trust," use the Krupp process in the manufacture of armor plate. The Midvale people use their own process, which is the only American process. The Krupp process is owned by an international trust, of which the Bethlehem and Carnegie companies are constituent parts.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Only the Carnegie.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Carnegie Company. My purpose in offering that amendment was this: I do not think that the Navy Department has treated the manufacturer of armor plate by the American process with fairness in the past, because, after giving them a contract for 6,000 tons in 1900, when it came to bid on the next contract they were refused the contract, although their bid was very much below the other bidder. Finally, the Secretary of the Navy bet the Midvale Company a thousand tons of armor that it could not complete the contract it then had. That the then Secretary said to the Midvale people, "If you will manufacture and deliver the armor you now have a contract for, you can then have a contract for a thousand tons of armor." The Midvale people accepted this condition. They proceeded with the manufacture of the armor included in their first contract. That armor made by an American company with the only known American process has proved under the most severe tests to be equal, if not superior, to the armor made with the Krupp, or foreign, process, and the Midvale people have won the bet by getting the contract for the insignificant amount of 1,000 tons.

Believing that this company can manufacture an armor equal to any manufactured in the world, and the competition between the manufacturers using these two different processes will continue, I think it is better to have the price of armor plate to be determined by competition which, in my judgment, will result in securing armor plate at a lower cost than if we fix as the limit of cost the lowest amount bid on the last contract.

Mr. FINLEY. Has the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] any doubt that the Government will be able to obtain armor plate at $398 a ton?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have. The Midvale Steel Company's last bid was $398 a ton. It was not known, however, at that time—and I will say in justification of the action of the Department—to a certainty that the Midvale company would be able to produce this armor. They have since that time produced it. It has stood the test and they are fulfilling their contract. There is no reason therefore why their bids in the future should not be considered, and if the lowest, that their bid should not be accepted.

Mr. FINLEY. I think the gentleman misunderstands my question. I asked him if he had any doubt that the Government would be able to obtain armor plate at $398 a ton?

Mr. TAWNEY. Class A armor plate at $398 a ton, and Class B armor plate at $393 a ton.

Mr. FINLEY. Then, if it is a fact that the Government can obtain armor plate, is there any good reason why it should not do so?

Mr. TAWNEY. I think there is. I believe they are capable and will be able to produce armor plate at less than $398 a ton, and if this limitation is on you will never get it for less than that amount. But if you will continue the provision and leave the matter of price to be determined between these two competitive manufacturers, you will get armor plate at a lower price than $398 a ton.

Mr. FINLEY. Just there, if that is true, is it not a fact that this limitation will prevent the Government paying more than $398 to the Bethlehem Steel Works?

Mr. TAWNEY. It would certainly prevent the Government from paying more than $398 a ton.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to close the debate on this paragraph.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before that is done, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] a question. It will not take over a minute or two. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he knows why the Secretary of the Navy did what the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY] has shown that he did, to wit, that notwithstanding the fact that armor plate was priced to him at $398 a ton, he bought armor plate from others at $55 a ton more than that? Has any explanation come from the Department about that?

Mr. FOSS. I will say to the gentleman that when those bids were made the Navy Department looked into the capacity of the plant, and at that time they gave to the Midvale Steel Company as much armor as they were capable of making.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In the opinion of the Midvale Company or in the opinion of the Navy Department?

Mr. FOSS. Of the Navy Department. The Navy Department investigated the capacity of this company.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did the Midvale Company say that that was all they were capable of manufacturing, or did they contend that they could manufacture it all?

Mr. TAWNEY. The capacity of the Midvale Steel Company plant is equal to the demand of the Government, if that company was required to furnish all of the armor plate at the present time, but it was not in 1903.

Mr. FOSS. At that time the Midvale Company had just erected the armor plant and had just gone into the manufacture of armor plate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wondered if there was any good excuse or reason for the conduct of the Department. I wanted the country to know the facts.

Mr. FOSS. There was a good reason.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Midvale Company at that time admitted it could only manufacture a thousand tons?

Mr. FOSS. In the first contract that they got the Secretary of the Navy, as I recall it, advertised for 16,000 tons, and the Midvale Company got 6,000 tons, and the 10,000 tons remaining was divided between the Bethlehem Company and the Carnegie Company. That is as I recall it now. That was done after an investigation into the capacity of the Midvale plant. The Navy Department were willing to give the Midvale Company all they could take and manufacture within the required time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did the Midvale Company bid only for 6,000 tons?

Mr. FOSS. I think they bid for more. I am not sure.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hear the suggestion here that they bid for all of it and offered to give the Department a bond to deliver it. Now, does the gentleman know whether that is true or not? And if it is true, then what reason had the Navy Department for spending any more money for armor plate than was required?

Mr. FOSS. I do not know whether that is true or not, but I do know at the time the Navy Department made a very careful investigation into the capacity of the Midvale Company to carry out their contract, and gave them what they believed they were capable of manufacturing, so as not to delay the construction of our ships.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will move that the debate on this paragraph and amendments be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss].

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. RIXEY. Division!

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suggest that the committee rise.

Mr. FOSS. I will say to the gentleman that this is practically the last paragraph in the bill; the next is simply the totals.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, all right.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 116.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill, with the amendments, to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRUMPACKER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the naval appropriation bill and had directed him to report the same back with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. ROBERTS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a separate vote on the amendment on page 15 of the bill, and I propose to ask a roll call. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that he move the House adjourn.

Mr. FOSS. I would say to the gentleman from Massachusetts——

The SPEAKER. Is there a separate vote asked for upon any other amendment?

Mr. ROBERTS. None other that I care to ask for.

The SPEAKER. Does any other gentleman desire a separate vote on any other of the amendments? If not, the question will be taken on the other amendments in gross.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of the gentleman from Illinois. The understanding was that at this stage of the proceedings a motion was to be made to adjourn.

Mr. FOSS. I am about to make the motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Speaker was about to put the question on the adoption of the other amendments. I suggest that we adjourn now and take the matter up to-morrow.

Mr. FOSS. There is no opposition to these other amendments, I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi. The previous question has been ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that; but the Chair, before I interfered, was just about to put the motion to the House on the other amendments, when I objected.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, that is what I do not want done this evening.

Mr. FOSS. Is there any objection to these other amendments?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I do not know. That is what I want to find out. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I hope the gentleman will move to adjourn now. That was our understanding. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I call for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 113.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is no quorum present.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Yeas and nays!

The SPEAKER. It does not require a quorum on a motion to adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg pardon.

Mr. PAYNE. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall now call for a separate vote on each amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. The demand is too late.

The SPEAKER. We will first dispose of the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I am still trying to ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I call for a vote on the first amendment, and following that on each amendment.

The SPEAKER. A demand for a separate vote, in the opinion of the Chair, is in time upon each amendment.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. One moment.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I renew my demand for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. One moment. The Chair is trying to ascertain the facts. The Chair takes the word of the gentleman from North Carolina that he was on his feet demanding the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The parliamentary situation now. I hope the Speaker will not forget that the demand has been made for a separate vote on each amendment.

The SPEAKER. The fact will dwell in the memory of the Speaker.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the Speaker will not forget that the demand was made after the motion had been made to adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

The SPEAKER. Both gentleman happen to be at this time out of order.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. A sufficient number——

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will it be in order for the House to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. Well, there is nothing in order, the yeas and nays having been ordered under the Constitution; but it would be——

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the roll be dispensed with, and that another vote be taken on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. FOSS. If the gentleman will just withdraw his demand for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the question. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to vacate the order for the yeas and nays, and that a vote may be taken de novo on the motion that the House adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois in charge of the bill a question. If the unanimous consent is granted which is now asked, will the gentleman himself move to adjourn?

Mr. FOSS. I will.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of the journal of the executive council of Porto Rico for the second session of the third legislative assembly—to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, a protest of Sac and Fox Indians relating to readjustment of certain annuities—to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of T. B. Norman, administrator of estate of William B. Irwin, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Insular Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17293) to authorize the leasing of the Batan Island Military Reservation for coal-mining purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4214); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17661) providing that the inhabitants of Porto Rico shall be citizens of the United States, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4215); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18206) to provide for the exemption from taxation of all bonds issued by the government of Porto Rico for the construction of public highways, bridges, and other public improvements, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4216); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CUSHMAN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19108) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Pend d'Oreille River, in Stevens County, Wash., by the Pend d'Oreille Development Company, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4217); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Insular Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5512) defining the qualifications of jurors for service in the United States district court in Porto Rico, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4218); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ALEXANDER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5533) to appoint an additional judge for the southern district of New York, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4221); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HEDGE, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 6022) to amend section 6 of an act entitled "An act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes," approved March 14, 1900, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4222); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. GRAHAM, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7548) for the relief of Mary V. Shaw, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4219); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3507) to correct the military record of George H. Keating, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4220); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. JENKINS: A bill (H. R. 19371) to authorize the purchase of portraits of certain ex-Chief Justices of the United States Supreme Court—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. HINSHAW: A bill (H. R. 19372) to authorize and instruct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay for paving the street in front of lots 12, 13, 14, and 15, in block 51, in the city of York, Nebr.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SMITH of Arizona: A bill (H. R. 19373) permitting the Secretary of the Interior to lease certain mineral lands—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. MORRELL: A bill (H. R. 19374) to prohibit shanghaiing in the United States—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. FOWLER: A bill (H. R. 19375) to increase the efficiency of the classified civil service of the Government, for the retirement of superannuated and disabled employees therein, and to create a retirement fund therefor at the expense of the employees thereof—to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. SHERMAN: A bill (H. R. 19376) to confirm the boundary line between the Creek Nation, Indian Territory, and Oklahoma—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. NEEDHAM: A bill (H. R. 19377) to create a United States court of customs appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SHERMAN: A bill (H. R. 19378) to amend section 7 of the act of Congress approved May 27, 1902—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. ANDREWS: A bill (H. R. 19379) providing for the manner of selecting and impaneling juries in the United States courts in the Territories of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SCOTT: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 156) providing for the purchase of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MILLER: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 157) permitting the waiving of the alien immigration law in the case of Anna Margaret Zeigler—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. BOWIE: A resolution (H. Res. 523) asking the Speaker to appoint a committee to investigate the existing tariff schedules—to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ACHESON: A bill (H. R. 19380) granting an increase of pension to Nancy A. Trover—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 17, 1906.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by Rev. ULYSSES G. B. PIERCE, of the city of Washington.

The Vice-President being absent, the President pro tempore, Mr. FRYE, took the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SCOTT, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal is approved.

SAC AND FOX INDIANS OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the superintendent of the Sac and Fox Indians of the Mississippi in Oklahoma remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the readjustment of the annuities of the Sac and Fox Indians of the Mississippi between those residing in Oklahoma and those in Iowa, and to adjust existing claims between the two branches in regard to their annuities, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL OF PORTO RICO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a copy of the journal of the executive council of Porto Rico, third legislative assembly, second session, January 8 to March 8, 1906, etc.; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill H. R. 395, concerning foreign-built dredges.

DISASTER AT SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I ask to have read at the desk and put into the RECORD a letter from the Acting Secretary of State, giving a translation of a note received in relation to the San Francisco disaster. It did not get into the general record. I ask that the letter of the Acting Secretary of State and the accompanying paper be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 16, 1906.

Hon. SHELBY M. CULLOM,
Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations,
United States Senate.

SIR: Referring to the President's message of May 3, 1906, I have the honor to inclose a translation of a note from the Austro-Hungarian ambassador at Washington, conveying messages of sympathy from both houses of the Reichsrath in view of the disaster which has occurred at San Francisco.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

ROBERT BACON,
Acting Secretary.

(Inclosure from ambassador of Austria-Hungary May 10, 1906.)

[Translation.]

IMPERIAL AND ROYAL AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN EMBASSY,
Washington, May 10, 1906.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: As I am informed by the imperial and royal minister of foreign affairs, the Lower House of the Reichsrath authorized its president, at the session of April 24 last, to express to the United States Government through diplomatic channels the deep-felt sympathy of the Austrian Lower House on account of the earthquake catastrophe at San Francisco.

Likewise, the first president of the Upper House requested the imperial royal premier, on behalf of said House, to convey through the minister of foreign affairs to the United States Government the expression of the warmest sympathy at this great and deeply regrettable calamity.

In pursuance to instructions received, I have the honor hereby to communicate to Your Excellency these expressions of sympathy on the part of the Austrian Lower House and the president of the Upper House, and I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to you the assurance of my most distinguished consideration.

HENGELMULLER.

His Excellency Mr. ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask also that another letter from the Secretary of State be read with reference to another government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington May 12, 1906.

Hon. SHELBY M. CULLOM,
Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations,
United States Senate.

SIR: Referring to the President's message of May 3, 1906, I have the honor to inform you that the Argentine Republic was inadvertently omitted from the list of countries which expressed their sympathy with this Government on account of the disaster at San Francisco.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant.

ELIHU ROOT.

I transmit herewith a full report of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Corporations in the Department of Commerce and Labor on the subject of transportation and freight rates in connection with the oil industry, referred to in my message of the 4th instant, it having been delayed in printing.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 17, 1906.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate House bill 12987.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the first amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended. Without objection, it will be concurred in.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I believe the first amendment is on page 1, beginning at line 7.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I desire to move to strike out the word "and" on line 8, and the words "except natural or artificial gas," on line 1, page 2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, strike out the last word on the page, the word "and," and at the top of the page, the first five words on that page, "except natural or artificial gas."

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Is an amendment to the amendment in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One has just been offered by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Is an amendment to that amendment in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I ask the Senator from Indiana to consent to a modification of his amendment. I send it to the desk and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the proposed amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Except natural gas for municipal purposes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will say to the Senator from Florida that I shall, after a moment, be very glad to accept his suggestion as a modification of the amendment which I have just moved. At the present time I wish the amendment to stand as I have offered it.

Mr. President, I do not desire to delay, and I shall not delay the Senate at all except to call attention to precisely what it is that we will vote on in voting upon this amendment. As the amendment was originally proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] it included the transportation of oil and gas by pipe lines. The question was asked of the Senator from Massachusetts, when the word "gas" had by some means or other gone out, why gas should be excluded and oil alone included in the transportation of these substances by pipe lines, and the Senator said gas ought also to be included.

Thereafter the Senate twice upon this subject voted the word "gas" into the amendment, so that the transportation by pipe line should include gas as well as oil. Thereafter the words "for municipal purposes" were added. So the Senate on this question twice voted to include the word "gas" as well as the word "oil." Thereafter a motion was made late in the day—I remember it very well—in considerable confusion, striking out the words "except for municipal purposes." Many Senators voting under a misapprehension voted for that, and when it was carried, it was found that the effect of it was to take natural gas transported by pipe lines out of the operation of this provision.

It is for the purpose of restoring natural gas to the provisions of this act, so that it will include natural gas as well as oil, that I make the motion to amend by striking out the words "and except natural or artificial gas." In that way, Mr. President, gas as well as oil will be included in the operation of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana accept the modification suggested by the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not just yet. I will do so in a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I want to address the Senate upon this amendment, and we will not be in a hurry about voting on it, I imagine, if it is to be insisted upon in this form. I have already addressed the Senate two or three times in regard to this matter. I think it is one of the most important matters connected with this legislation.

I wish to call the attention of Senators to what we have done and what we are now invited to do with respect to this kind of property interest. I have illustrated by telling of our situation at the city of Cincinnati. The interest I have in this amendment is one that belongs and pertains to that locality. I have already explained that we are just now taking steps to make a large investment of money. Five million dollars it is estimated will be required. The money is now being raised for the purpose of constructing and putting into operation a pipe line from the city of Cincinnati to the natural-gas fields of West Virginia, a distance of 274 miles, where the parties interested have acquired large fields from which they expect to draw natural gas.

That is a purely individual enterprise. It requires the amount I have indicated, because, according to the estimates of the engineers, it is found that that is the amount which will be required to put in the kind of a pipe which is necessary, a 16-inch pipe, as I am informed. The object is to expend that amount of money in order to take natural gas to the city of Cincinnati, not alone for municipal purposes, but also for manufacturing purposes, because the people engaged in manufacturing there, the people who have factories, mills, foundries, and machine shops want cheap fuel for those purposes. If when they have done that they are to be required to open the pipe line to everybody who may have natural gas to send to market, taking it to the other towns that may be along the line through which the pipe will pass; if that should be required, in addition to what they want to do for the city of Cincinnati, it will require still another pipe line, I suppose, and another expenditure of $5,000,000, so that the people who have no thought of becoming common carriers, who are simply trying to take care of their own local business, will be put into the business of common carriers against their will and be required to spend not only the $5,000,000 which their necessities require, but $5,000,000 more for a doubtful enterprise, in order that they may meet the requirements of the whim of somebody.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; if the Senator does not take too much time.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will take no time except to address to the Senator the same question I addressed to him yesterday, when he was making the same speech he is making now. Might not the same situation the Senator describes be also true of oil transported in pipe lines?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; I imagine it would be true of oil, and I do not think you have any more right to do it in the one case than you have in the other.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is the whole thing.

Mr. FORAKER. In other words, I think the individual or the corporation, because you may speak of it in either way, for the terms of this amendment are "any corporation or any person or persons"—any individual, therefore, has a right, in carrying on his business in connection with it, to make use of oil, to make use of natural gas, or to make use of water, and may at his own expense put down pipes to meet the necessities of that business. I do not think the Congress of the United States has any right to make of that man a common carrier because his pipe line happens to cross a State line.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then the Senator is not in favor of this provision with reference to oil any more than with reference to natural gas.

Mr. FORAKER. I am not speaking about oil, but about natural gas.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The only point is that you must treat both alike.

Mr. FORAKER. To treat both alike is what I am trying to do; and I say you have no right to make a common carrier out of a private individual who is transporting for his own particular business and has no thought or purpose of accommodating the public.

Now, Mr. President, we adopted this amendment (and to this I call the attention of Senators) before we had adopted the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], which prohibits any common carrier from carrying any product or commodity in which it has any interest, direct or indirect, as an owner of any kind.

Now, what will be the consequence? We spend $5,000,000 to carry our own natural gas from West Virginia to the city of Cincinnati. When we spend that money and are in a situation to serve our purposes, we are told by the Congress of the United States, "You are a common carrier and must carry for everybody except only for yourself. You can not carry anything that belongs to you." What is that except confiscation of property?

It may be that it is confiscation of oil. I leave that for the Senator to comment upon; but it is confiscation of any kind of property to do the same thing; and I want to say that it is not creditable to the Senate of the United States so to legislate. On the contrary, it seems to me it is entirely discreditable.

Now, Mr. President, just one word. It seems to me the difficulty about this is not met by the addition of the words "for municipal purposes," for that is but a very limited and restricted use. It is a municipal purpose to light the streets of a municipality, but it is not a municipal purpose to supply natural gas to citizens under private contract, to supply it to factories, foundries, and machine shops. That is not a municipal purpose. The way to remedy this is not, therefore, by adding words of that kind, for they do not help, but by adding after the word "transportation," as I suggested to the Senator from Massachusetts when he offered it, the words "for the public." The only person who is a common carrier is one who transports for the public.

It has been said that these pipe lines are organized under statutes that call them common carriers. That is true to a certain extent, but it does not necessarily make them common carriers in the sense that they have the right to exercise the power of eminent domain—certainly not outside the State of their creation, where this corporation has gone with its pipe line. To give the power of eminent domain must be a case where private property is being taken for a public use, for the use of the public generally, not for the interest of some individual or some particular locality, such as may be indicated in these instances.

Now, what is the objection to putting in the words "transporting for the public?"

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I should like very much to hear the Senator, but when he turns his face in the other direction it is impossible to do so.

Mr. FORAKER. I thank the Senator for calling my attention to the fact that I was not speaking loud enough for him to hear, for I want everybody to hear, for if there is anything about this bill I am in earnest about it is this.

It seems to me, when we adopted this amendment, we acted unwisely, if I may say that without appearing to criticise the Senate, and surely it was unwise when later on we voted that we would not only make a private pipe line a common carrier, but that we would deny to it the right to carry the very product that it was organized and constructed to carry.

The result would be as I have said, and that is all I can say, and it seems to me that is enough. If our people build this pipe line, it is for our use and for our benefit, not for the public. We do not want to go into competition with anybody else. If anybody else is to pipe gas out of that same territory, let him put in a pipe line, as we are doing.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him whether or not he has suggested any phraseology which will meet such a case as that which he now has in view?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. And at the same time not destroy the general purpose of the provision?

Mr. FORAKER. I think I have. I would be glad if the Senator from Georgia, who has the bill on the desk before him, will look at line 8, page 1, and see what I have suggested, namely, that after the word "transportation," the first word in the line, we insert "for the public," for I understand that any pipe line transporting for the public we would have the right to treat as a common carrier. But surely we have not reached the point where an individual can not have a pipe line of his own for water or for gas or for oil, or for anything else he may want it for. I called attention to the fact that this applies to persons as well as to corporations.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator if his purpose is not carried out in the phrase beginning at line 3, page 2, "who shall be considered and held to be common carriers within the meaning and purpose of this act," because in the case he mentions the company will not be a common carrier when only carrying gas for itself, and it will not be brought within the meaning of this act according to its own provision?

Mr. FORAKER. I have not heard of anybody putting that interpretation on that language. I called attention to it when the matter was under consideration a few days ago, and a different view was taken of it. It does not make it very clear, but if you were to put in the words "for the public," after "transportation," then there could not be any question about it, and I can not understand why that should be objected to. If there is anybody transporting in a pipe line of any commodity, no matter what it may be, for the public——

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio a question. He speaks of the situation at the city of Cincinnati and the purpose to connect the city with gas fields in West Virginia. Suppose his amendment should be agreed to, inserting the words "for the public," if gas should be transmitted to a reservoir, as I suppose it would have to be, and stored in that way in the city of Cincinnati and from thence transported to foundries and individual homes, would not that be a transmission for the public as much as if you transmit oil through pipes to reservoirs for sale? So how would that amendment help the Senator's case?

Mr. FORAKER. That shows the wisdom of having two or three minds directed to the same point. The Senator misapprehends what was in my mind, and what the Senator has just now expressed did not occur to me, the force of which I recognize. What I had in mind was any pipe line that is transporting for the public in the sense that it is transporting for all who bring to it the commodity which they want transported. I think that would be a common carrier under the law, and there is no objection to regulating it.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator that perhaps he could use the term "transportation for hire" or "for compensation." I think that is better than the term he suggests.

Mr. FORAKER. Anything at all which indicates that when we get our property into operation it is not to be confiscated by act of Congress will satisfy me. I am not stickling for words, but I am for the substance.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, West Virginia perhaps is more interested in the discussion of this question than any other State in the Union, and I want to say that we have a number of pipe lines that are owned by corporations and that are owned by individuals to carry and transport gas from West Virginia out of the State. We have the West Virginia Natural Gas Company, we have the Manufacturers' Gas Company, and we have a number of lines that run to Pittsburg to individual manufacturers, who own their territory, drill their own wells, and carry their own gas to their own mills.

So I say, Mr. President, that this provision which the Senator from Indiana is trying to put into the bill will be a great injustice to our people and a great injustice to the people who are taking the gas out of our State. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. SCOTT. No, sir; I do not yield. I have not the gift of language which the Senator from Indiana has, and consequently I do not want to be interrupted.

Mr. President, the fact is we can not bring the large manufacturing establishments of Cincinnati and Pittsburg into the State of West Virginia. If we could, we would be very glad to build a wall around our State and keep the gas within our own borders. But as we can not do that, we want to have all the privileges that we can possibly get, so that our people can dispose of their gas and territory to these different manufacturers, to these different companies, and get as much for it as they can. With this restriction, it will stop development, just as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] says. The Cincinnati company which is coming into the southern part of our State at an expense of $5,000,000 is not going to come up there if the privileges under which they started out to build this line are taken away from it, and I hope it will not be the pleasure of the Senate to strike out, and insert the amendment the Senator from Indiana suggests.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think the amendment as it originally stood, "excepting natural gas for municipal purposes," was the correct form, but the question of natural gas is an entirely secondary question to my mind. The question involved here is the great traffic in oil. If you put in the words "transportation for hire" or "transportation for the public," you absolutely destroy this amendment so far as its effectiveness is concerned. The method of getting the oil is, as a rule, that the Standard Oil Company or the Pure Oil Company, which are the two great carriers of oil, buy it of the well owner and carry it, and they would immediately say they were not carrying for the public; that they were carrying for themselves. That is the reason why the word "public" or "transportation for hire" put in there would immediately wreck this amendment.

My object, I state frankly, in this amendment is to bring the pipe lines of the Standard Oil Company within the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I do not see why that great corporation, with its enormous traffic in this article, should alone be exempted from the supervision and regulation of the Government. I care very little about the natural-gas feature in the amendment, but I do want to bring the Standard Oil Company somewhere within the reach of the law, and, owing to the method in which most oil is bought and handled, if you put in the words "for the public," after "transportation," you practically kill the amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Wait a moment; I should like to finish. These companies have the right of eminent domain, as I showed the other day. They are declared to be common carriers by statute in many of the States in which they operate. A letter was forwarded to me from a counsel of the Standard Oil Company hostile to this legislation, in which he admitted that they were common carriers east of the Mississippi.

Mr. President, there is no reason in the world why that corporation, with that great traffic in one of the most essential articles of use, should alone escape. They ought to be somewhere where they can be supervised and regulated. They carry oil for independent refineries. The independent refineries in other parts of the country try to get oil from their own wells or from other wells, and sometimes they will carry it and sometimes they will not; but they carry for independent refineries, showing that they are ordinary carriers when they choose to be. They hold, as it is now, the entire oil industry of the country by the throat. If there is nothing wrong, if everything is right, if they are public benefactors, they will not suffer from having the Interstate Commerce Commission look into this matter and see that the business is properly carried on. There need not be any apprehension in that regard.

Now, the additional amendment, known as the "coal-land amendment," has been brought up, and it is said it would be a great hardship on them, because they will not be able to carry their own oil under that amendment, as the railroads are forbidden from carrying their own coal, if they own the mines, for general sale. It does not prevent them from carrying the oil, I suppose, for their own use, but it will prevent them, undoubtedly, if they own the wells. Suppose it becomes necessary to separate these pipe lines and make the carrying of oil a distinct business from the production or refining of oil, is there anything wrong in that? We are about to compel the railroads to make some arrangement to get rid of their coal lands all over the country, and either sell them or put them in the hands of holding companies. Why should we be so much afraid that it is going to be a great hardship on the Standard Oil Company if they are obliged to make an arrangement that their carrying lines shall be independent and that the carrying shall be general for all the oil producers of the country?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Who has been talking about hardship upon the Standard Oil Company?

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from Ohio was talking about gas.

Mr. LODGE. I am talking about oil. I am not disturbed about gas. I am talking about the effect of the amendment the Senator from Ohio proposes, inserting the word "public."

Mr. FORAKER. I have not offered any amendment, Mr. President; I only suggested it, and what I said to the Senator aside I say to him on the floor of the Senate—leave the amendment as it is. I do not care anything about the other provision. I want to protect natural gas in the way I have indicated.

Mr. LODGE. I did not suggest that anybody had said it would be a hardship.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he will not address himself to the constitutionality of an act that brings one of these pipe lines under the operation of this law and excludes all the balance of them. I am not a lawyer, and I should like to hear from a lawyer on that subject.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me a moment?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I will in my own time answer that question and call the Senator's attention to a decision of the Supreme Court bearing on the point.

Mr. LODGE. All pipe lines owned by any company within the United States and within the Territories of the United States are made common carriers. What the Senator alludes to is a peculiar case in the Zone of Panama, an area which is under a peculiar jurisdiction and where the Government is ready to give a revocable license to anybody who chooses to lay pipe lines there. I do not care to enter into that discussion.

I took the floor to say this only because I want to preserve what I regard as the essential part of this amendment, and that is to bring the Standard Oil Company, which is the principal carrier, and the other carriers of oil within the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I think it would be a gross injustice to leave them out. Owing to the manner in which the oil business is done, I have not the slightest doubt that if you put in the words 'transportation for hire," or the words "transportation for the public," you immediately release all those lines, because their method of doing business is to buy the oil first at prices which they make themselves, because they alone are able to take it to market.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] has twice suggested that the amendment as it now stands was agreed to at a late hour in the day when there was great confusion in the Chamber.

Turning to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 4, it will be found that the debate on this amendment commenced on page 6502 and that the Senate adjourned, after it had indulged in debate covering seven pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, at the hour of 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m., having held an executive session in the meantime. It will be noted on page 6504 that on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts as amended there was a roll call and there were seventy-five Senators who responded to their names. So it is perfectly apparent that the Senate perfectly understood what it was doing with reference to this matter.

It was the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] who suggested to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] that "in order to make the purport of the amendment clear it be made to read 'except natural or artificial gas.'" Upon that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio was adopted. Afterwards the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] moved to strike out "for municipal purposes," and that amendment was likewise adopted. Then, as I have said, upon a roll call, to which seventy-five Senators answered, the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts as amended was agreed to.

I simply rose for the purpose of showing that the Senator from Indiana is mistaken when he says the Senate voted in confusion and did not know what it was doing when it adopted this amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. GALLINGER. While other Senators have declined to yield, I know the Senator ought to have a chance, and I yield to him.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to say to the Senator that he will see by looking at the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that that interpretation can not be correct for this reason: It shows that earlier the amendment was adopted which inserted "natural gas;" that then another amendment was adopted which excepted "natural gas for municipal purposes;" that the Senate had twice expressed its opinion upon this subject, and finally that they struck out "natural gas" altogether. So the Senate understood it in the first two votes but did not understand it in the last vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. That does not follow at all. It simply emphasizes what I have said, that the Senate, with great deliberation, went over this entire subject, and the fact that the Senate changed its views upon the question afterwards does not prove that the Senate did not understand what it was doing in the first place or in the latter case.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then the Senate did change its views?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly; and——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And in fifteen minutes.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the Senator from Indiana frequently changes his views.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But, Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. If he did not, I would not regard him as highly as I do, because I know he does not belong to the class who never change their views.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say. The Senate perfectly understood what it was doing. If the Senate wishes to reverse its action, that is within its competency; but it is not proper to have it stated and let it go undisputed that we acted without intelligence in adopting the amendment which the Senator from Ohio desired to have incorporated in the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire briefly to call attention to one feature of this controversy, in regard to the proposition that pipe lines carrying oil can not be placed under the Interstate Commerce Commission unless they do a general business for the public. The question principally involved in that matter has been passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States in a case which came from Minnesota. In 1893 the legislature of that State passed a law providing that all warehouses and elevators for storing and handling grain along the route of any railroad should be subject to the control and jurisdiction of the Minnesota railroad and warehouse commission. An elevator company at Lanesboro, in the southern part of Minnesota, denied the right of the State to exercise jurisdiction over that elevator, because they insisted that they were simply buying grain for their own use, for their own business; that they were not doing a general public-elevator business; that they bought grain from the farmers and shipped it to their own consignees at terminal points, and hence were not subject to public control.

The Supreme Court held that that position was untenable; that they were there occupying a position of a public market place, buying grain from every farmer who came there, weighing it, and grading it on their own scales, and therefore that it was a public business, and that the public had a right to control it.

So, Mr. President, with the oil pipe lines. The Standard Oil Company has a large pipe line running through the country. That pipe line has many feeders. Private parties build pipe lines to the trunk line to run the oil from their own wells, which are connected with the pipe lines of the Standard Oil Company, which company buys from these various small dealers. The different parties who have these feeding lines from their wells ship their oil to the trunk line. Their relation to the public is exactly the same as that of the elevator company to which I have referred in Minnesota. We have as much right to control such pipe lines as the public have a right to control that grain elevator at Lanesboro, in Minnesota. The Standard Oil Company purchases oil from the independent shipping oil owners, who have built little feeding lines connected with the trunk line of the Standard Oil Company. It purchases their oil and holds a monopoly of the use of the main line; and unless it is put under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, it can carry on its business with impunity, and practically destroy all the independent dealers and the independent lines.

If you put into the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts such an amendment as has been suggested, that these companies shall not be subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission unless they do a general business for the public, you will thereby entirely destroy the whole amendment, and will make it of no force and effect whatsoever. The amendment as it now stands is all right, and in respect to that matter should not be emasculated or changed.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. As to the question of natural gas, I have no particular interest in that, but I think the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts ought to stand in the bill unamended and unchanged.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Minnesota allow me to say a word in his time, as I can not do so in my own time?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. There seems to be a misapprehension among Senators as to why I contend that this amendment as it now stands shall remain without any change. The debate has arisen upon the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] to strike out the words "natural gas or artificial gas." I want the amendment to stand just as it now is.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, I inquire if the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] has accepted the modification I suggested?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. For the purpose of permitting the Senator from Florida to offer the amendment which he has suggested as a modification of mine, I withdraw the amendment which I offered in order that the Senator may move his amendment, because I think that his amendment is better than the one I have offered.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, on page 1, line 8, of the bill I move to strike out, after the word "except," down to and including the words "artificial gas," in line 1, on page 2, and insert the language I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 8, after the word "except," it is proposed to strike out "water and except natural gas or artificial gas" and insert "except natural gas for municipal purposes."

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, I have no interest near or remote——

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator allow me just a moment to inquire why limit the amendment which he is going to offer? Why not put in the word "manufacturing?" The great bulk of the gas taken out of our State is for manufacturing purposes.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Because, Mr. President, I want to show to the Senate that the very line sought to be excluded from the operation of this act by the Senators from Ohio and West Virginia should, in the interest of the public, be brought under the terms and provisions of the act.

I have no interest whatever, near or remote, in oil pipe lines, natural gas, or anything of that character, but I do desire to see this bill become a law in such a form as will meet the very natural and just demands of the public at large. I am in favor of having these provisions extend to every agency engaged in interstate commerce, and I see no reason whatever why in including the pipe lines of this country a natural-gas pipe line should be excepted.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. I ask the Senator what is his reason for including water pipe lines under the provision of this act?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. In consonance with my suggestion that every commodity, every agency entering into the interstate commerce of this country should be brought within the provisions of the act. That is my reason and my only reason.

I do not concede that the act applies except where the companies engaged in the business enter into the interstate commerce of the country, and where they do enter into the interstate commerce of the country I think they should be brought under the provisions of this act.

The distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], in addressing himself to this subject on Tuesday last, stated, in part, as follows:

> If when we get to the oil fields, having spent our $5,000,000, which we are having a great deal of trouble to raise——

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator will allow me to say that should be "gas fields." I was not going into oil fields.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I presumed the Senator referred to gas, but I have read the RECORD as it is. The Senator from Ohio continued:

> and which we could not raise at all if it were known that this provision would become a law, we shall be required to receive all the natural gas other people may see fit to bring to our pipe and transport it from the place in West Virginia where the gas is found down to Huntington, we will say, dump out a lot of it there for the accommodation of that city, and on to Maysville, etc.

Mr. President, I want to know what the purpose of this act is unless it be to bring these carriers into such relations with the public that the public may be served by them? If this natural-gas pipe line from the gas fields of West Virginia to Cincinnati is conveying that gas for interstate commerce, there is no earthly reason why it should not be brought within the provisions of this act.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I do.

Mr. FULTON. Do I understand the Senator to contend that he would prohibit any person from laying a pipe line for his own use exclusively?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I do not. I make no such contention. I say that when the article conveyed enters into the interstate commerce of the country the medium of conveyance——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. TALIAFERRO. The agency of conveyance ought to be brought within the provisions of this law.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not take any issue with that proposition of the Senator, but that is not this case. The case I put is one where we are not transporting an article in order to put it into the interstate commerce of the country.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Then my contention is, Mr. President, that that pipe line would not come under the provisions of this act.

Mr. FORAKER. All I want is to make it clear that it does not, and it is clear as it now stands.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. We can not make it clear, Mr. President, by inserting the word suggested by the Senator from Ohio without destroying the entire provision.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I do not want any other words. I want it to stand precisely as it stands now, but if there is to be any change I want it to be so changed that it will preserve what the Senator says already appears in the amendment.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] was correct when he stated that the Senate had already twice passed upon this question. Subsequently, under the management—the skillful management—of the Senator from Rhode Island, the Senator from Ohio, and the Senator from Montana, the position, the judgment, the expression of the Senate has been absolutely changed as it appears in this bill to-day. The question was distinctly put by the Senator from Ohio to exclude his particular pet line from the operation of this bill and the Senate as distinctly voted it down.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator referred to me in some way that I could not understand, as there was so much confusion. Will the Senator please indulge me to the extent of repeating what he said?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. It is almost impossible, Mr. President, for me to repeat what I said.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, the Senator referred to the Senator from Ohio about something, and I should like to know what it is.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I think I stated that the Senator from Ohio distinctly submitted to the Senate a proposition to exclude his pet company from the operation of this act, and that the Senate quite as distinctly voted it down, and yet we find here in the bill this morning, as it lies on the desks of Senators, the action of the Senate, taken soberly and distinctly after debate of the question, absolutely reversed on this important point.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well. I will wait, however, until the Senator concludes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to say to the Senator from Florida that there is a very great fear, and, I think, a justifiable one, that if the word "water," which he proposes to strike out of his amendment, is stricken out, it will work irreparable damage to the great irrigation works now operating and under construction in the West; and unless the Senator has some special reason why he desires that to go in, I suggest to the Senator that no harm will be done by not including that in the words to be stricken out.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] will heed the suggestion of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I will ask if that will make the amendment satisfactory to the Senator?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I prefer the words as they are in the bill upon our desks, but if the Senator's amendment is to be adopted, I do not think it can be adopted without irreparable injury to those irrigation works of which I have spoken.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think water should be excluded when used for irrigation works and other public purposes.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, I have no objection to the suggestion. Water enters so slightly as a commodity into the interstate commerce of this country that I have no objection to putting into this bill anything which, if omitted, would impose a hardship on my friends in the West—none whatever—and if the Senator desires to propose a modification of the amendment which will meet his views, I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will ask the Senator if he has any insuperable objection to excepting the word "water" from his amendment to strike out?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I will not object to that modification of the amendment, so that the amendment will read "except water and except natural gas for municipal purposes."

Mr. President, if I were a lawyer I would feel disposed to address myself to the question of the constitutionality of an act that imposes conditions upon one set of people and excepts all others in the same class of business; but, not being a lawyer, I shall content myself with speaking merely of the equities here involved. I know that the only ground upon which we can claim that this bill is a fair and proper one is to make it general in its application. I favor extending its provisions to all of the important agencies engaged in interstate commerce. It is for that reason, and that reason alone, that I have suggested this amendment, being moved to it by the fact that the Senate has already, as I said, on two different occasions voted to sustain it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. TALIAFERRO. On yesterday, Mr. President, the bill was emasculated, on the suggestion of the Secretary of War, by eliminating the pipe lines being constructed across the Isthmus of Panama.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I will, in a moment.

Mr. FORAKER. I thought the Senator's time had expired.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. To-day an effort is being made further to emasculate this bill by inserting the exception suggested by the Senator from Ohio. Mr. President, it is practically asked in this Senate to write the word "discrimination" in this paragraph of the bill. We can not afford to go before the country on a proposition to prevent discriminations when we ourselves propose to write discrimination in the law in this conspicuous manner. I hope that the Senate will go back to its original proposition, agreed to after this case was fully discussed, and place this amendment in the bill as it was before.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Florida referred to me in the course of his remarks, but there was so much confusion in the Chamber, or rather in this part of it, that I did not hear distinctly what he said. I asked him to repeat what he said. After I had been told the nature of his remarks, he did repeat in part what I am told he said. The RECORD will show whether he repeated all of it. Senators sitting about me say that the Senator remarked that, after twice defeating my proposition to have natural gas lines excepted, then later, "under the skillful manipulation of the Senator from Ohio, his pet measure was taken care of."

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. Did the Senator make such a remark or am I in error?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. My recollection is that I said "under the skillful management," but if the Reporter says I used the word "manipulation," I stand by that.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, all I wanted to know was whether or not the Senator had said it, in order that I might say to the Senator that there is no excuse whatever for him to make such a remark as that. I presented the proposition to the Senate, and it was debated very thoroughly. I want the Senator's attention, if he will honor me with it. After it had been twice voted down in the form in which I presented it, I abandoned it. Other Senators sitting about me in the Chamber, recognizing, as they expressed themselves here on the floor, that they had done an unwise thing and an unjust thing—some other Senator, without my knowing he intended to do it, offered the amendment which was adopted by the Senate by a unanimous vote. I did not know it was to be offered. I did not ask anybody to offer it. The first I knew of it, it was presented to the Senate, and when it came to a vote, without one word being said by me, it received seventy-five votes and not one vote against it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator refer, when he says it was unanimously adopted, to the vote on the pipe-line amendment?

Mr. FORAKER. To the vote on the amendment excepting natural gas.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, as a matter of fact, the exception was not adopted by a vote of 75 to nothing, but the general amendment was adopted.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, the general amendment was.

Mr. BAILEY. Including the particular amendment to which the Senator has referred; but that by itself was not adopted by a vote of 75 to nothing.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes——

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. Wait just a moment.

Mr. TALIFERRO. I understood the Senator was speaking in my time, and he might accord me an interruption.

Mr. FORAKER. I said in a moment I would grant the Senator the privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] has expired.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to say now, so that the Senator will understand, that the RECORD was handed to me by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], and my attention was called to the vote. I said, when I made the remark about a unanimous vote, that the vote had direct reference to this amendment to the amendment; but I recall, since the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] reminds me of it, that the vote probably was on the acceptance of the amendment as it now stands. This particular amendment was agreed to, as the Senator from New Hampshire now points out to me, without division.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; that was some other amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, however it may be, Mr. President, please allow me to proceed. The amendment was thoroughly discussed. The Senate certainly knew what it was doing; it was thoroughly informed, and whether it was or not, what I want to call the Senator's attention to is the fact that he is in error when he says it was due to my management or my manipulation or my anything else. I do not do anything in a surreptitious way. I do not do anything, so far as I am aware, except in the open, where everybody can see and know and understand.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. The Senator ought not——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. The Senator ought not to put words in my mouth, Mr. President, that I did not use.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator tell me what words I put in his mouth?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I said a while ago, as I recall—and the notes of the stenographer will bear me out—that under the skillful management of the Senators from Ohio and Rhode Island and Montana the action of the Senate had been reversed. Now, the Senator from Ohio disclaims, and I am entirely willing to accord the credit to the other gentlemen.

Mr. FORAKER. I knew the Senator would recall his charge, so far as I am concerned, when he was informed of the truth. As I have stated, I had no knowledge that the amendment was to be offered, and was quite surprised when it was offered. Until I heard it read from the desk I had abandoned all hope of getting the kind of amendment I thought we ought to have. Now, Mr. President, I do not want to add to the discussion of the merits of this question.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I want to understand this question in order to vote on it. I understand these gas companies to which the Senator referred are private companies, with private lines, hauling their own gas, and the contention of the Senator from Ohio is this: In the event they are not excepted, then the Elkins amendment will apply to them and they can not haul their own gas, and, consequently, can not do business. Is that the contention of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FORAKER. That is the effect of it, as I understand, taking these two amendments together.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The same would be true of oil under similar circumstances.

Mr. FORAKER. Let those who are taking care of oil look after that. I refer that to the Senator from Indiana, who has perhaps studied that feature, but it is true with us, as every man knows.

What I want to make clear is that I do not want to change this amendment. This discussion arises upon a motion made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] to strike out from the amendment as we adopted it in Committee of the Whole. I do not want that motion to prevail.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if these companies, although incorporated, are engaged only in carrying their own gas and have not exercised the right of eminent domain, then no law of Congress could make them common carriers; but if they have exercised the great right of eminent domain, then they can not be heard to say that they are engaged only in their private business, because neither individuals nor corporations engaged in private enterprises are permitted to exercise the right of eminent domain. I ask the Senator from Ohio if the particular company which he has in mind has exercised the right of eminent domain?

Mr. FORAKER. It has not—that is, not yet.

Mr. BAILEY. Then no law can make it a common carrier against its will.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me to conclude, they are only in the preliminary stages. They are just now organizing the company and raising money to put in these pipe lines. They may have to exercise the power of eminent domain before they get to the gas fields, 300 miles away, but they hope they may not.

Mr. BAILEY. Then they can not be heard to say, after having exercised that right, that they exercised it for a private purpose.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I think if the Senator will look carefully at the authorities, he will find the test is not whether they exercise the power of eminent domain, but whether or not that power is exercised in the taking of private property for what is in the language of the authorities a public use. I do not think this would come——

Mr. BAILEY. It can not be taken for any but a public use.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, there are authorities, and authorities conferred by statute, and while it is true——

Mr. BAILEY. But no statute can confer an authority on any Commonwealth in this Union to take private property except for a public use.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I remember that a case was decided in the Supreme Court of the United States within the last year that came up from Colorado—I believe the Senator from Colorado will perhaps remember about it—where there was some question whether, under the statutes of Colorado, the corporation had a right to exercise the power of eminent domain to get a strip of ground along which to dig an irrigating ditch, I believe it was, through somebody's premises.

Mr. BAILEY. That is a public use.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator says, without any trouble, that is a public use, but the Supreme Court of the United States, in deciding the case, said they would hold in that case, because of its particular facts, that it was a public use, but that the rule was not to be construed as a broad one applying to all such cases. It is a very instructive case. I do not want to stop, though, to discuss that, and the Senator will excuse me if I ask to pass on, because my time is about to expire.

What I want the Senator to understand is that I am not asking for any change in this amendment. I am simply asking that there be no change made. Leave it just as it is.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question, with his permission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I want to ask the Senator as to the intention of this proposed pipe-line interest. Is it understood that the municipality, or whoever will own this pipe line, will own its own gas wells, or will it take gas from other producers?

Mr. FORAKER. It owns its own. It has gone into that territory and acquired these gas lands and is boring its wells and making the necessary preparations for securing the gas and raising the money with which to put in the pipe lines to transport the gas.

Mr. BACON. There is no contemplation of taking the gas from other people?

Mr. FORAKER. None whatever.

Mr. BACON. No power in their charter to do so.

Mr. FORAKER. None whatever. It might become necessary, possibly in order to get the gas, to buy the gas from somebody else; but there is no purpose at any time to transport the gas of anybody except its own gas.

Mr. BACON. Very well; it will be its own gas if it buys it from other people.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. But the point to which I desire to ask the attention of the Senator is this: If they accumulate their supply of gas, not only by using the product of their own wells, but by purchasing the product of wells of others, and, after that accumulation of it, transport it through their own pipes to Cincinnati, in another State, for the purpose of distributing it and selling it out to other parties to be used for manufacturing and other purposes, I suppose the Senator would concede that under those circumstances that would certainly be interstate commerce. It would be on all fours with the case cited by the Senator from Minnesota, where the private elevator men bought from individuals the product of their grain farms and after passing it through their elevators sold it to other individuals.

Mr. FORAKER. It is gas which it supplies to its own customers at its own place of doing business. This gas will be brought to Cincinnati, turned into the pipes through which artificial gas is now supplied, this gas being substituted for artificial gas—and that is all. The Senator may call that interstate commerce or the business of a common carrier if he likes, but it does not strike me it is either. It wants to substitute natural for artificial gas. It gets a permit, it goes to where the gas is, and it transports it for its own particular purpose.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator dispute the proposition that if a municipality buys gas in West Virginia from other producers of gas, transports it through its own pipes to Cincinnati, and then sells it to individuals for manufacturing purposes that would be clearly an interstate-commerce transaction?

Mr. FORAKER. It might be; but we do not contemplate doing that. There might possibly arise in the future a contingency when they would do that. That illustrates one of the difficulties of making a pipe line like this a common carrier. Only the individuals who want to transport their own gas would construct it or put it in operation, for who knows when the gas will become exhausted? It may last one year or ten. Sooner or later we are bound to expect it will become exhausted. Then you have to take up your common-carrier pipes and do something else with them. Who will help do that?

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, this provision of the bill, while it affects directly his particular interest, is one intended to be entirely general and to affect all pipe lines used in transporting gas. Now, if there is such a pipe as that which I suggested to the Senator, where the owners of the pipe line buy gas from different producers and then transport it through their pipes to another State to be distributed to consumers, that would make a case where it would be eminently one of interstate commerce, and where, according to the spirit of the bill, as clearly set forth by the Senator from Florida, there ought to be Federal control.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BACON. If I am able to hear the Senator in the midst of the noise, I will be very happy to answer the question, if I can.

Mr. SCOTT. In what condition, if this amendment is adopted, will it leave the great steel and iron and pottery companies and others in Pennsylvania and Ohio who own their own pipe lines, control their own wells, and carry their own gas out of the State of West Virgina, for the sole purpose of manufacturing in their own factories?

Mr. BACON. I do not think they would be common carriers, and the bill would not apply to them.

Mr. SCOTT. They use the gas for manufacturing purposes.

Mr. BACON. It is for their own manufacturing purposes, as I understand. If the purpose is to get a supply of gas from West Virginia, carried through pipe lines to Pennsylvania, and to sell it to other manufacturing enterprises, that——

Mr. SCOTT. But it is for their own use. Bear that in mind. The company owns its own pipe lines.

Mr. BACON. I am endeavoring to bear it in mind, and I am endeavoring to answer the question the Senator asked me. I say that if the pipe line is exclusively the property of the manufactory using the gas, and if they only use the gas which they themselves produce in West Virginia, they can in no sense be called a common carrier. They are not serving the public in any particular. But if they are buying gas in West Virginia and transporting it to Pennsylvania and selling it to others, they are common carriers, and we have to frame the bill so as to meet all cases. If it is entirely a private enterprise, in which the production and the transportation and the use in manufacture are solely the act of one industry or enterprise, it does not fall under the provisions of this bill. It does not reach such a case at all.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I simply want to state, in view of the interruption I made a while ago of the Senator from Ohio, my construction of this statute as it appears now.

The first section of the bill as it has been amended provides in effect that the provisions of this act shall apply, among others, to any corporation or any person or persons engaged in the transportation of oil or other commodity by means of pipe lines, and that they shall be considered as common carriers within the meaning of this act. Nothing is left to the courts for construction, but the statute itself declares that any corporation, or any person or persons engaged in transporting oil by pipe lines—of course, as interstate commerce—are common carriers, and are declared to be such in this act of Congress, subject to the authority of this act, by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Now, that is the first section. When we turn to the bottom of page 5 of the print of the bill of this morning we have this language:

> From and after May 1, 1908, it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to transport from any State, Territory, or district of the United States to any other State, Territory, or district of the United States or to any foreign country any article or commodity manufactured, mined, or produced by it. * * *

We have the first section declaring these corporations common carriers. We have the amendment at the bottom of page 5, and continuing on page 6, providing that it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to this act, after 1908, to carry any commodity produced by it or owned by it, except what may be necessary for the conduct of its business as a common carrier.

There seems to be no question about that construction, Mr. President, and it is for the Senate to say whether it desires to declare a corporation is a common carrier which does not carry for the public, but solely for itself, and whether, after 1908, no corporation or person shall transport any oil or other commodity produced by itself. These are the contradictory provisions of this law, as I see it.

Now, you take the oil companies in Texas, for instance. They are not common carriers in the sense that that term has been used by the law writers and the decisions, because they do not carry for the public for hire. But they transport their own oil, for instance, from the town of Humble or the town of Saratoga or other places to the Gulf of Mexico, and load it on ships for transportation to foreign countries and ports in the United States. That may be an interstate shipment. But the pipe lines which some of the companies use to conduct the oil from the place of its production to the Gulf are not used for the public and for the carrying of oil for the public, and yet this statute as we have it now declares that they are common carriers, and that after 1908 they shall not carry oil which they have produced or purchased.

Mr. SPOONER. Except for the public.

Mr. CULBERSON. They can not carry any more of it than is necessary for their business as common carriers, and, as a matter of fact, the companies to which I have referred are not in the business of common carriers.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to ask the Senator a question, and that is this: As the effect of leaving these two provisions stand we would have absolute confiscation, would we not, of that class of property?

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not know that it would go to that extent. They might go out of the business of producing oil and go into the exclusive business of carrying oil for the public and save their pipe lines in that way.

Mr. FORAKER. But if they did not have a supply from the public sufficient to occupy them, they would be practically out of the business?

Mr. CULBERSON. Surely. That is the construction I put upon this law. It is for the Senate to say whether it desires that that law shall stand, if that is the proper construction of it.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas a question before he takes his seat.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CULBERSON. I yield the floor.

Mr. LODGE. I want to ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat, if he will permit me.

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Is it not true that, according to the provision on page 5, to which the Senator has referred, if a railroad owns coal lands, it has got to get rid of those coal lands or cease to carry the coal from the mines which it owns—that is, as a part of interstate commerce.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think so, but the difference is this: The prime business of the railroad is the carrying of freight, but the prime business of the oil companies is producing oil. That is the difference between the two cases. It is proper to drive a transportation company out of the producing business; but does it necessarily follow that it is right to drive the producing company out of the carrying business for itself?

Mr. LODGE. I confess I do not see a very broad distinction.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I agree very largely with the position taken by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], that this provision as it stands is quite satisfactory. Certainly we ought not to go further, and I submit to the Senate this proposition: We are committing to a railroad commission an enormous amount of work, if they shall take care of and properly look after and regulate the legitimate transportation business of the country. We have included in that work the matter of pipe lines, so far as they shall be carriers of oil. That was done in response to a very evident public demand. The public temper requires that character of legislation.

But, Mr. President, I have yet to hear that there is any public demand for bringing within the operations of this bill pipe lines that are engaged in the business of conducting natural gas from the field to the market. It has been argued that simply because some of these corporations are public corporations in the sense that they have been endowed by their charters with the right of eminent domain, they are necessarily common carriers. I submit that that is not necessarily true. If a corporation, for instance, is engaged in carrying natural gas or artificial gas for the purpose of lighting a city, it would be perfectly proper to empower such a corporation to exercise the right of eminent domain. It would probably be necessary for it to establish pipe lines to the gas fields in order to bring the product to the city and distribute it. Its principal business, the main purpose of the corporation, would be the furnishing of gas to manufacturing institutions or for the purpose of lighting, and it would be necessary and incidental to the main purpose of the corporation that it should establish gas lines and employ the power of eminent domain. That would not make it a common carrier. That would not be the purpose for which it was organized, and it ought not necessarily to be made or declared to be a common carrier, even assuming that we can do that. I do not undertake to say we can.

But the main thought that influences me in taking the position against any enlargement of the provisions of the bill as it is is this: This Commission will have sufficient work to do if it shall properly carry out and discharge the duties that have already been imposed upon it, and there seems to be no particular demand for including these gas pipe lines, and therefore we ought not to broaden the operation of this bill beyond what seems to be a public necessity and a demand at the present time.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the primary purpose of the pending bill is to correct certain evils which have grown up in connection with the transportation of interstate commerce. It is barely possible that abuses in connection with the oil industry have attained such proportion as to be properly grouped in that class. But my information about the extent of the gas fields is not sufficiently accurate to justify me in believing that we ought to include the piping of natural gas in this bill, for the reason that there has been no such widespread complaint about abuses in connection with interstate distribution thereof as there has been in the case of the transportation of ordinary freight by railway carriers. The natural-gas business is a peculiar one. It is highly speculative, and, as the Senator from Ohio has well said, no one can tell whether a certain field will produce for one year or ten. It is not a commodity whose extent and supply are capable of visible and definite measurement; it is not like the forests or the fields, where tonnage is perpetually to be obtained. And in the case of a gas field, unless a pipe line is constructed by the gas company itself the gas will not be transported at all.

The amendment would be bad enough if the intention was to regulate the cost of carrying gas where there were gas wells offering gas for transportation other than the ones owned by the company able to build and operate the pipe line. But there is no justice at all, in my judgment, in providing that after the 1st of May, 1908, the gas company shall go out of the business of transporting its own oil and sell out its pipe lines to an independent corporation. It might possibly be that the wells owned by the corporation that originally constructed the pipe line would be the only interest in the field. The gas company would be put in a condition in conforming to what is now known as the "Elkins amendment," where it would have to dispose of either its gas wells or its pipe line, if it could find anybody to purchase either separately, or to adopt some plan of evading the law, which is the most probable course.

I think we had better confine this bill to the correction of the evils that have been so conspicuous as to challenge the attention of the country and to demand a remedy at the hands of Congress.

As long as the provision remains in the bill depriving the common carrier of the right to haul its own products as interstate commerce after May 1, 1908, I think we ought to be careful how we include pipe lines. In our State we have some little indications of gas. What they will amount to can not now be foretold. There is no reason why in the outset the gas business should be penalized, and these people notified that after May 1, 1908, they will not be allowed to transport their own products through their own pipes. I do not think that is a rational disposition of the matter.

With respect to water, I am likewise doubtful. I believe water ought to be stricken out. Outside of the transportation of freight, as that term is popularly understood, I think the only industry that ought to be included in the bill is that of oil.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida may be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 1, it is proposed to strike out the words "or artificial gas" and insert in lieu thereof "gas for municipal purposes."

Mr. TALIAFERRO. "Natural gas."

Mr. FORAKER. Where does that come in?

The SECRETARY. After the word "natural," in line 1, page 2, strike out the words "or artificial gas," and insert in lieu thereof the words "gas for municipal purposes."

Mr. FORAKER. That is what I hope will be voted down.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I accepted the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming "except water and except natural gas for municipal purposes."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, my sole and only interest in this matter is that the principle of equality shall be applied to this legislation. We include coal within the provisions of this act, which is used for fuel and that is right. We include oil within this act, which is a product of coal and which is used for fuel, and that is right. Why should we not also include in this act gas, which is a product of oil and is also used for fuel?

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] says that he is speaking about gas, and therefore is not interested in oil. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] says he is speaking about oil, and therefore is not interested in gas. But ought not the Senate to think about both and include both within the provisions of this act?

Mr. President, not one reason has been here adduced why, as a general proposition, gas should not be included within the provisions of this act as well as oil, except the specific instance cited by the Senator from Ohio. But much as we would all like to legislate for specific instances, laws are made for general application. I do not think we ought to discriminate in favor of the Standard Oil Company; neither should we discriminate against it—this is a Government of laws and not of instances. All offenders alike should be subject equally to the reign of law. Why should we specify one and not also apply the same provision to other companies? Why should we include oil and not apply the same provision to gas, which is a product of oil and is used for the same purposes?

It was suggested here the other day that rich men should have speedier punishment than the poor. That is destructive of that equality of rights which is the heart of liberty. Let rich and poor be equal before the law. That is all that either has a right to ask. Whether a company be little or big, whether it be engaged in the business of transporting gas or of transporting oil, certainly the same general law ought to apply. All companies, little and big, all men, rich and poor, should have the same treatment.

Mr. President, it has been suggested that it would very injuriously affect certain properties, certain manufactures, and certain other business located——

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator's proposition is correct, why should not water companies be included?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Water companies should not be included, for the excellent reasons given——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Pardon me. Wait until I answer the Senator from Wisconsin first. I said there had not been given one public reason, generally applicable, why gas should not be included. If one reason, which is sufficient, which is generally applicable, could be adduced by the Senator why gas should not be included, I would not support the amendment of the Senator from Florida. But in the case of water such a public and general reason has been given. It is used extensively for irrigation purposes. That is a public reason and not a private reason, not a personal reason. It is a thing which affects great masses of people and not one or two companies. That is my answer to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FORAKER. Let me ask the Senator why, if we are not to take individual interests into consideration, we do not include common carriers by water in this bill and make this bill applicable to them?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Perhaps carriers by water should be included.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator might have made a motion to amend. He would have had the support of at least one other Senator if he had seen fit to do so. But they were left out because, by common consent, there is really no complaint about them, though I think there ought to be complaint, because they do more discriminating in freight charges than any other class of carriers.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I want to call the particular attention of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to how this question arose. I think I can show to the Senator from Florida and to every other Senator that there was not any management by the Senator from Ohio or anyone else, skillful or otherwise, in this thing. It is one of the incidents that occurs daily in legislation.

The Senator from Massachusetts offered an amendment, as to every part of which he was equally enthusiastic, which included gas. Later on, by some process, I do not know what, gas went out, and I rose and asked the question why gas should not be included as well as oil. And the answer was that there was no reason in the world. Therefore, the Senate voted to include gas. Thereafter it was thought that gas for municipal purposes should be excepted and the words "except for municipal purposes" were added. So the Senate twice voted to put gas under the operation of this bill, except for municipal purposes. Thereafter, though I am sure not by any management, but in a moment of confusion, a motion was made by some Senator to strike out the words "except for municipal purposes." And many Senators voted for that, under the impression that it struck out all exceptions. But afterwards we found it did not.

Now, as to what the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Ohio said about those votes, if the Senate was right in its first two votes upon this question, which were adopted without division, then it was wrong on its last vote upon this question. It was not wrong because it had been "managed." It was wrong because the Senate had changed its mind.

Mr. GALLINGER. It got new light.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; on the contrary, there was not one single word of debate upon the last motion which put this bill in the position in which it stands in this respect.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator thinks; he does not know.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It may be; but the confusion at that time was so great that it did not indicate that the Senate was particularly thinking about this question. If it was, I will ask the Senator how it happened that the Senate so quickly, without a word of debate, without a reason being given, in fifteen minutes changed its mind from two deliberate votes which had been taken after full debate.

So, Mr. President, that is the way this matter arose. That is the reason why——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I think if he goes to the RECORD (and it includes, I believe, a great deal more than I suggested this morning) he will find that the motion made by the Senator from Ohio was once voted down and the Senator asked for the yeas and nays and we did not give them to him. That is the record. Subsequently at the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], the words "except water and except natural or artificial gas for municipal purposes" were inserted.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Were voted in?

Mr. GALLINGER. Were voted in.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Without a division.

Mr. GALLINGER. Without a division. Subsequently the words "except water and except natural or artificial gas for municipal purposes" were again voted in.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is correct.

Mr. GALLINGER. Again, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] moved to strike out "for municipal purposes," and that was agreed to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That was agreed to without debate, and that is the vote to which I refer.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then a vote was taken on the amendment as amended, and seventy-five Senators, who, I suppose, knew what they were voting on, voted for it. That is the chronological history of this very important question, which the Senator says was adopted in confusion when Senators did not know what they were doing.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator confirms precisely what I said, except that he adds one more count to the indictment. As the Senator has shown, and as I said, the subject of gas was twice voted in without limitation as to municipal purposes, and the Senator from Ohio called for the yeas and nays; and then, on the question of voting out gas, which is the third time——

Mr. FORAKER. There was no third time about it. One vote was taken without a division. I called for the yeas and nays, and the Senate did not give me a second.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well, then, let it stand as I originally stated it and as the Senator from New Hampshire confirms it. That is, the Senate, after full debate, voted gas in without a division.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator let me interrupt him?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator sits near me, and he must know the truth of what I stated a while ago, that after the last vote was taken Senator after Senator came to me and said they voted under a misapprehension, and there was a general regret that the vote had been settled. Thereupon the amendment was offered which was adopted without a division.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course that is true if the Senator says it is; but let me tell the Senator what my experience was. After the final vote, which reversed the first two votes of the Senate and which was had without debate, whereas the first two votes were had with debate, several Senators came to me, or, rather, we engaged in talk, and we all agreed that we had voted under a misapprehension and did not know that we were voting to strike out natural gas. But the fact remains that twice the Senate voted this matter in without a division, after full debate, and then they voted it out without debate and without a division.

Mr. President, as I said at the beginning, I now close by saying that I have no interest at all in supporting the amendment of the Senator from Florida, except only the interest of seeing the rule of equality applied to this law. When I see a Senator rise and give a general public reason why any subject should be excluded from a law, I should be then willing to vote for the proposition, but until I do hear such a reason I shall be compelled to support a proposition which includes gas which is used for fuel as well as oil which is used for fuel, as well as coal which is used for fuel. Why should coal, why should oil, be included, and why should gas, which is merely a form of oil, be excluded? I have yet to hear one public and general reason why this exclusion should be made.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will excuse me a moment, I desire simply to ask him a question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator referred to me as equally enthusiastic. I favored his amendment and do now, and I shall vote for it because I think it is just, but when he said I was equally enthusiastic I think he must have forgotten the day this debate occurred. I will merely quote one sentence, and I repeated it many times. In answer to the Senator himself, I said:

> I will say to the Senator from Indiana that I agree with him entirely as to the soundness of his proposition, but I do not desire to hamper this amendment with any unimportant points.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well. I am willing to agree that the Senator was and is unequally enthusiastic. That is all. The reason why I made that remark was merely because I felt that, in the Senator's flaming indignation against the Standard Oil Company transporting its products, he was somewhat cooling toward the transportation of natural gas, which is a product of oil.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the words "for municipal purposes" were used, would the Senator vote for it?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly. That is the amendment of the Senator from Florida, and I withdrew my amendment because I thought the amendment of the Senator from Florida was much better.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I wish to suggest to my friend from Indiana that every objection to the amendment would be cured if he put at the end of the provision——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senator from Arkansas speaking in this own time or in the time of the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I am only calling attention to the fact that every objection to the amendment would be removed by making an addition to another clause, by inserting at the end of the matter that appears in the first paragraph on page 6, "provided that this provision shall not apply to carriage by pipe lines of commodities other than oil." That would relieve from the condemnatory provisions of that part of section 1 these gas and water lines. They would be permitted to carry on their own business, but would be subject to regulation as to price for carriage of other business.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator send his amendment to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas is not in order. He has already addressed the Senate on this amendment.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in reply to the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio with reference to the decision he referred to. That decision was made in a case that came up from the State of Utah and not from Colorado.

Mr. FORAKER. I was going to so state to the Senator. I sent to the Library and got the case, and I found it was Utah instead of Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. It is one involving a principle very well established, as asserted by the Senator, in our part of the country. In the arid regions we have an entirely different law from that in the eastern country or in what we call the "rain belt." The Supreme Court of the United States in several cases have recognized the difference, and have recognized the fact that the law is different in Colorado, Montana, and Utah from what it is in New York and Pennsylvania. There is there no doctrine such as exists in Pennsylvania and New York of riparian ownership or riparian rights.

The constitution of Colorado, California, Utah, and, I think, of all the Western States, provides, in substance, that the water of the streams belongs to the States and is to be kept and used for public use. So we have a different condition as to the right of eminent domain from what they have in a State where the water is sought, perhaps, to be taken for a mill race or something of that kind. When the western country was settled, we found a law there which probably had existed for a thousand years in the settled portions, taking New Mexico, where there had been a settlement and where proper irrigation had been in use for untold ages. We found not a written law, but an unwritten law, with reference to the use of water. We have applied that in the western country and the courts have sustained that rule.

The constitution of California provides that the right of eminent domain may be exercised in the case of ditches and various other things, and the courts, both at home and the United States Supreme Court, have held that that applies to an individual case. If a man has a farm and chooses to bring water on it and his neighbors object to his crossing their land, he can cross that land, although nobody is to use the water except himself. They have declared that the use of water for irrigation purposes is a public use. I have before me three decisions of the Supreme Court (I am not going to read them in the few moments I have) recognizing that to be the law, in which the court says in distinct terms the law is entirely different in the arid region from what it is in the East.

The Senator from Indiana says, I think, that the water companies should be included. If the Senator from Indiana were at all familiar with the conditions, he would never have made that statement.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator entirely misunderstood me. I said that a general and public reason had been given why water should be excluded from the operation of this act, and I said that if a reason equally strong, equally public, and equally general could be given for gas I would also vote to exclude that. The Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. TELLER. I certainly misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes, indeed.

Mr. TELLER. I supposed he said that water ought to be included.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not at all, but the exact reverse. I said that a general and public reason had been given why it should be excluded from the operations of this act.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. The junior Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] objected the other day to the terms used here, and we excepted water because he thought it might interfere with the irrigation of our arid region. I agreed with him in that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I presume the Senator understands that water is excepted under the bill?

Mr. TELLER. I understand that; but I did understand the Senator from Indiana to say that he thought it ought to be included, and therefore I wanted to say a few words on that subject.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. TELLER. Now, Mr. President, I want to say merely a word about these private companies. If I build a railroad to a forest and haul the logs to a mill and have them converted into lumber, and that is the only use I put it to, I do not believe that I can be made by an act of Congress a public carrier.

We have, I will venture to say, in the State of Colorado, the same in Utah and the same in Montana, several hundred railroads and tramways and bucket lines, sometimes 3 or 4 miles long and sometimes even less. In the State of Washington, going up the Snake River, you will see these bucket lines bringing wheat from the high table-lands down to the river. The people who produce the wheat own the lines. The people who produce the ore that is transported over the lines own the lines. Even if they have the right of eminent domain given to them by the constitution of their States, as we do have, they can not be made public carriers. You can only make a public carrier when in fact it becomes a public carrier. If the city of Cincinnati wants to build a pipe line for her own use to bring gas or to bring water, it does not make any difference which, there is no reason on the face of the earth why we should declare it a public carrier, and, in my judgment, it would be a futile act if we attempted it. We can not do it.

I have heard it stated around here in the last hour that there are two things which must be determined: First, does the concern, whatever it be, whether individual or corporate, do interstate business? If it does, and does it for the public, then it is a common carrier.

I have heard it stated that they would become common carriers if they had exercised the right of eminent domain. That I deny, Mr. President, for the right to exercise eminent domain depends not upon our authority, but upon the authority of the State that gives them their existence. As I said, our Constitution and our statutes confer upon individuals, when engaged in mining or in irrigating or in farming, the right to condemn land, because the country could not be habitable unless that right were given.

The case the Senator from Ohio called attention to arose upon a conflict between a farmer who wanted to carry water across another man's land to his own, where the whole question involved was only $40. This shows that at times it is impossible to secure the right of way by any fair method. Recognizing that fact the Supreme Court of the United States declared in three cases I have on my table, and I could produce half a dozen more, that under those conditions the State had a right to declare that it was a public use, and the right of eminent domain could be exercised by the individual for his individual use and his individual benefit and nobody else's.

Mr. ELKINS. I should like the attention of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO], who proposed this amendment. I ask the Senator from Florida if his amendment confines the exception to gas for municipal purposes?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. It does.

Mr. ELKINS. What do you mean by the words "for municipal purposes?"

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I will let the Senator define that.

Mr. ELKINS. I should like to ask the Senator if that means the cities themselves having the gas or allowing a company that brings the gas there to light the cities and to furnish gas as fuel for domestic purposes—that is, to the people—for light and fuel, but not for manufacturing purposes?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I take it "municipal purposes" means the material that is paid for by moneys arising from the taxation of the people of the municipality.

Mr. ELKINS. Would not the Senator be willing to allow the use of gas, under his amendment, for domestic purposes—that is, for furnishing heat and light to the people?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. The object of the amendment is to get gas to the people for their domestic consumption at reasonable rates.

Mr. ELKINS. Will the Senator accept as an amendment the words "domestic and municipal purposes?"

Mr. TALIAFERRO. No, I can not, because it would leave the monopoly in the hands of the carriers of the gas; and I desire that the demands of the public shall be served by competitors who will deliver the goods at reasonable rates.

Mr. ELKINS. In connection with the selling of gas for domestic consumption, the words "domestic consumption" have a definite meaning—they mean for lighting and heating purposes, but not for manufacturing purposes. By using the term "for municipal purposes" it might be construed that it will apply only to cities and towns; that they could buy gas for their own use and for public use, but could not allow domestic consumers to have it for purposes of lighting and heating.

Now, Mr. President, on this point of gas for manufacturing purposes, it is a very close question in my State. We are a large gas-producing State. The people of West Virginia are apprehensive and much concerned because States adjoining are taking gas out of the State and using it for manufacturing purposes, for the reason that this helps build up manufactures in Pittsburg, Toledo, and Cleveland and discourages manufacturing interests in the State of West Virginia, where the gas is produced. The legislature has tried, but in vain, as it did in Indiana, to find some way to prevent the exhaustion of gas in West Virginia by pumping it out of the State into these adjoining States.

To the extent that this amendment might be a help to West Virginia, I would favor it, but I do not want to do anything that will build up the manufacturing interests of Pennsylvania and Ohio with gas taken from West Virginia, if I can help it.

Mr. KNOX. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. Is it the desire of the Senator to cut off all commercial relations between West Virginia and the other States of the Union?

Mr. ELKINS. Not at all; and the Senator knows it is not. I am glad to have his State a purchaser of our commodities, all things being even; but I would rather use our gas to build up our manufactures than to allow his State to build up manufactures with West Virginia gas.

Mr. KNOX. I presume the great desideratum would be to move Pittsburg into West Virginia.

Mr. ELKINS. If we could it would be the greatest blessing that ever fell in the pathway of West Virginia. We can not very well extend the line of West Virginia to take in Pittsburg. If we can conserve the gas of West Virginia for the use of our own people, it will be helpful in building up plants and factories in our State, and in the interests of West Virginia this is what I desire.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator from West Virginia a question?

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator see any reason why this law should apply to oil taken from West Virginia to Pittsburg and should not apply to gas taken from West Virginia to Pittsburg?

Mr. ELKINS. I do not see any. I suppose it ought to apply equally to both commodities, because they are of general use, and gas is quite as important and essential in manufacturing as oil. It is more so, perhaps, in the manufacturing of steel and iron products.

Mr. SCOTT. May I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. What would he do with the companies, now, that own their own pipe lines, their own oil drills, their own wells, and carry the gas to Pittsburg for manufacturing purposes? Does he propose to make them common carriers?

Mr. ELKINS. I do not believe you can legislate a fact. I do not believe you can legislate the Shoreham Hotel a common carrier. If pipe lines are owned by private individuals for their own use and for transporting their own gas and oil, they are not and can not be made common carriers.

Mr. SCOTT. My colleague has made a provision that where coal is owned by a railroad company and the railroad is owned by the same party they must be separate. Now, would he separate the pipe lines from the manufacturer, from the man who owns the product?

Mr. ELKINS. If a man or corporation owns its own pipe line and did not condemn the right of way, but acquired it by purchase, and is transmitting gas through his or its own pipe line, built with his or its money, I do not believe Congress can make the man or corporation a common carrier.

While I do not wish to do injustice to any pipe line in West Virginia or elsewhere, yet I do not wish in any way to aid or facilitate the taking of gas from West Virginia to build up manufacturing interests in other States. I want to preserve and save the gas of West Virginia to build up factories in West Virginia. As I understand it, the pipe lines of West Virginia, both for transporting gas and oil, are owned by corporations that transport only their own products and not those of producers. The Standard Oil Company purchases the gas of all other producers and then transports it to the market through its pipe lines. The people of West Virginia receive every day in the year about $30,000 from the sale of oil. None of our oil producers transport their oil, as I understand it.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I wish to say a word. I know we are anxious to get a vote, and I am going to say but a few words.

In my opinion, the argument made by the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has not yet been answered. The senior Senator from Texas stated the case in such a way that I am not able to get over it.

Now, what does the senior Senator from Texas say and what does this bill say? This bill makes every corporation engaged in the transmission of oil a common carrier. Every private corporation transmitting its own oil or transmitting its own gas is made a common carrier by the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

When you take the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], which has been adopted, that amendment provides that no common carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall transport its own products. Now, taking the two together, what do they mean? Taking the two together, Mr. President, they mean that every corporation engaged in transporting oil or gas from one State to another, if acting for itself and not for the public, under a strict construction is closed down.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That applies as well to oil as to gas, does it not?

Mr. CLAY. I concede that. I am not arguing against the amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Therefore, no matter what the point of the senior Senator from Texas may have been, this amendment, on the principle of equality, should go in. The argument of the Senator from Texas does not militate against the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CLAY. I can understand well why a railroad, a common carrier engaged in the carrying of all classes of freight, ought not to be permitted to haul its own products in competition with another shipper. A corporation organized for the purpose of doing business exclusively for the public and not for the purpose of going into a private business should not be permitted to transport its own products in competition with the shipper. But now you have these pipe lines, constructed for the purpose of transporting gas and oil, placed under the provisions of this act. They were organized and constructed for the purpose of hauling gas and oil for the respective companies and not for the public.

I do not believe that the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia, which prevents the common carrier from hauling its own product, should apply to a private company engaged exclusively in hauling its own oil or gas.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAY. In one moment. After thousands and millions of dollars have been invested in private concerns, and the money invested at a time when no such law was in existence, you come along now and pass a law practically confiscating their property. Now I will yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I understand the Senator's proposition to be that a carrier, a railroad, ought not to be a producer.

Mr. CLAY. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. And that a producer, as the Senator from Texas tersely put it, may properly be a carrier. What I want to suggest to the Senator is that this amendment makes the pipe lines and the oil companies subject to all the provisions of the bill. If the Senator thinks there is an injustice, the place to remedy it is on page 5, at that amendment, and not at this one. To change this one would take them out of the bill altogether.

Mr. CLAY. I agree with the Senator, and I was coming to that proposition.

Mr. LODGE. The exception comes in there.

Mr. CLAY. I was coming to that proposition. I was coming to the proposition that the provision inserted in the bill by the Senator from West Virginia providing that carriers engaged in interstate commerce shall not transport their own products in competition with shippers ought not to apply to pipe lines constructed for private use and not engaged in doing business for the public.

I believe a proviso of that kind ought to be adopted. I am perfectly willing to see it adopted to the amendment on page 5; but clearly to my mind we make them all common carriers. The private company, engaged in transporting its own oil or gas through pipe lines constructed at its own expense, should not be deprived of the privilege of transporting its own oil or gas. These lines are used for no other purpose, and if they can not be used for this purpose then they must be abandoned. The rule should be different for railroads, because they exercise the right of eminent domain and were chartered to do business for the public. The railroads should not be permitted to engage in mining and selling coal or any other commodity, because, in the distribution of cars, they will discriminate against independent shippers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO]. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays are refused, and the amendment is rejected. The question is on concurring in the amendment as amended.

Mr. BACON. I hope the amendment as amended may be read, so that we will know exactly what it is.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was amended yesterday.

Mr. BACON. I understood the Chair to state as amended, and for that reason I desired that it should be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was amended by adding at the end of line 6, page 1, the words stricken out yesterday on the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. LODGE. The question is on concurring to the amendment made in Committee of the Whole as amended.

Mr. GALLINGER. As amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was amended by striking out the words moved yesterday by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. TELLER. We struck out what provision?

Mr. LODGE. We struck out the Panama provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, after line 4, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, agreed to insert:

> The term "common carrier," as used in this act, shall include express companies and sleeping-car companies.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senate desire to have read the next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole on page 4, after line 8; which was read four times yesterday?

Several SENATORS. Oh, no!

Mr. GALLINGER. I understood the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] had a modification of that amendment which he proposes to offer, and he is not now in the Chamber.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am sure the Senator from Texas has a modification of that amendment which he desires to offer, and, as has just been stated, he is not now present.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am informed that the Senator from Texas has prepared a modification of that amendment, and I hope he has done so. I am sure we do not want to adopt the amendment as it now stands.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Texas desires to modify the amendment, I am sure.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the amendment may be passed over.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, in order that this amendment may be passed over until my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON] returns to the Chamber, I will occupy the floor upon a matter apart from this.

Yesterday I called the attention of the Senate to an attack upon me which had appeared in certain newspapers. That attack was based upon an allegation that ex-Senator Chandler had addressed to the President of the United States, or to some member of his official family, a communication impeaching my fidelity to the cause of railroad regulation. Immediately after I had concluded what I then said to the Senate I addressed to ex-Senator Chandler a letter, a copy of which I will ask the Secretary to read from the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., May 16, 1906.

Hon. WILLIAM E. CHANDLER,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Partisan Republican newspapers are charging that you have at some time written a communication to the President, or to some member of his Administration, impugning my good faith with reference to the pending railroad rate bill. I would thank you to send to me a copy of any communication which you have made to the President, or to any member of his Administration, and which could possibly have been made the basis of any such charge.

Very respectfully, yours, J. W. BAILEY.

Mr. BAILEY. I will now ask the Secretary to read the matter which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The game of the railroad Senators is to support BAILEY'S amendment and induce him to agree to a broad right of review. What that is to be is not certain, but the prinicpal object is to "beat him"—meaning the President. Mr. TILLMAN, however, considers himself as acting with the President to pass the review clause with the minimum amount of court power and will not enter into any such game.

APRIL 11, 1906.

Mr. LOEB: Please hand this to the President privately. I am hearing an important case all day to-day, but could see him if he wished to see me at 1 o'clock.

WILLIAM E. CHANDLER.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, Mr. President, I ask the Secretary to read the letter of Mr. Chandler, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SPANISH TREATY CLAIMS COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., May 16, 1906.

Hon. J. W. BAILEY,
United States Senator.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of to-day, and I inclose to you a copy of a memorandum sent by me to the White House on the morning of Wednesday, April 11. I think the memorandum was not dated, but my retained copy is dated April 11. I did not therein give the President any assurances as to your attitude relative to the so-called "game," because I had not seen you and did not feel authorized by anything Mr. TILLMAN had then said to give any assurance in your name. At 9.15 p. m. I saw Mr. TILLMAN and talked with him fully, and he then told me that neither he nor yourself were entering into games with the railroad Senators, and at 9.30 I saw the President and told him what Mr. TILLMAN had said and that he need have no apprehensions on the subject. I inclose to you copies from my diary. April 13 I saw Mr. Moody, and again on the 14th, and arranged with him to see Mr. TILLMAN and yourself on the next day, Sunday, the 15th.

Yours, truly,

WM. E. CHANDLER.

Mr. BAILEY. Now I ask the Secretary to read the extract which I send to the desk from the diary of Mr. Chandler.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the paper will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

[The diary.]

April 11, at 9.15 p. m., saw Senator TILLMAN at Colonial about railroad rate legislation. At 9.30, at White House, saw President Roosevelt alone upstairs. Talked of railroad rates and many other things for more than an hour. He was very gracious. At about 10.30 to Colonial with TILLMAN until 11.45.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I now wish to call the attention of the Senate for a moment to the genesis of this slander. In the New York Tribune of yesterday there appears this statement:

One of the disquieting rumors which found circulation on the Democratic side of the Chamber to-day was that Senator TILLMAN had written ex-Senator Chandler that he sorely mistrusted the sincerity of Senator BAILEY'S methods; that he suspected the Texan of treating with Mr. ALDRICH, but that he, TILLMAN, was keeping a close watch on his Texas friend and would not give him any opportunity to "sell out to the conspirators." It was even rumored that Mr. Chandler had left this note in the hands of the President, and that it might at any time be forthcoming, to the chagrin of the Senator from South Carolina and the discomfiture of the Senator from Texas.

When the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] very promptly and very properly branded that, the New York Tribune of this morning modified its lie in some small particulars. It declares now that—

It is a further fact that a copy of the memorandum alleged to have been signed by Mr. Chandler—

Nothing about one signed by Senator TILLMAN now, but—signed by Mr. Chandler, which is printed above, has been circulated among Democrats in the Senate, and it was on this copy that the Tribune correspondent's assertions were based. Democratic Senators who exhibited the memorandum maintain that the original, signed by Mr. Chandler, is in the possession of the President.

Mr. President, I have made diligent inquiry of Senators on this side to find, not if one of them had been circulating that statement—because not one of them would be base enough to circulate behind the back of an associate a paper intended to reflect upon his honor or his good faith. No matter what may be my relations, personal or political, I believe—indeed, I know—that every Senator on this side is an honorable man and would scorn to circulate in secret a document calculated to reflect upon one of his associates; but I have made inquiry and, so far as I have been able to learn, no Democratic Senator had ever seen a copy of this paper until to-day. I did not know until this morning that Senators on that side had seen it, but I say now that the President showed it to a Member of the House of Representatives in the presence of a Senator on that side yesterday. If it is desired, I can call the name of the Senator on that side in whose presence the President himself read it.

Now, Mr. President, if there had never been another word written or spoken by ex-Senator Chandler except this memorandum, there is not a syllable in it that justifies the statement that he impugns my good faith. He says:

The game of the railroad Senators is to support BAILEY'S amendment and induce him to agree to a broad right of review.

He does not say that I was playing that game; but I will say that the railroad Senators, as he calls them, played it very successfully with some other folks. They played it so successfully that they secured their broad review without having to accept an anti-injunction amendment.

More than that, Mr. President, the ex-Senator, in this statement, does not impeach the honesty of even those whom he calls "the railroad Senators." He does not say they were trying to serve the great corporate and special interests concerned. He says their "principal object is 'to beat him,'" meaning the President. That is an object with which I ought to have keenly sympathized; but I did not at that time. I repeat that this document imputes no unpatriotic purpose to even the men whom he describes as "railroad Senators;" and he says their "principal object" was to beat the President.

But, Mr. President, suppose that this document had charged that Senator BAILEY was playing the game with the railroad Senators and that Senator BAILEY intended to give them the right of a broad review even without his anti-injunction amendment, would it lie in the mouths of these people to assail me with a statement like that? Does not the Senate know, and does not the country know, that on last Saturday the President denounced one statement of ex-Senator Chandler as an unqualified and deliberate falsehood, and yet on Monday the President's friends were circulating a slander against me, based upon a grossly distorted statement made by him.

Suppose Senator Chandler had charged me with disloyalty to this cause, could men of decency and of honor have quoted him in support of that charge after they had denounced him as bearing false witness? I leave the country to pass judgment on the conduct of men who denounce a witness when he speaks contrary to their recollection and in forty-eight hours invoke the statement of that same witness to assail the good faith of an honorable gentleman.

Mr. President, I also leave it to the country to say whether the President of the United States treated that memorandum as an impeachment of my good faith. It was dated on the 11th day of April, and on the 14th day of April, only three days afterwards, I was urged to attend a conference arranged by the President of the United States with the Attorney-General of his Cabinet. Does it seem possible that a President, distrusting the good faith of any man, would invite that man to confer with his law officer respecting the very measure upon which his good faith was questioned? It passes my belief. To invite a Senator to a conference while distrusting him and conceal from him that distrust is an act of hypocrisy which can not be fitly described. The President did not consider that memorandum as any impeachment of my good faith; and the proof that he did not is that, with it before him, and through the very man who sent it to him, and within three days, he asked me to confer with his Attorney-General upon a vital legal question. It is inconceivable that a President, with the proof before him or with what he regarded as proof before him, or even with a suspicion in his mind, would permit his Attorney-General to transmit to me the form of an amendment upon which his friends and our friends were expected to unite. I have no words to express my contempt of a man who treats with others whom he suspects of treachery. Only traitors do that.

The morning paper contains a statement from the correspondent whose story I denounced on yesterday. It does not seem to have disturbed him much, because he says that I denounced the President and practically overlooked him. I suppose he regards it as being overlooked to be denounced as an unqualified, deliberate, and malicious liar. In this statement he says:

In the very outset of the negotiations he was conducting Chandler prepared and left at the White House a written memorandum for the benefit of the President. I have not the text of that memorandum before me, but, quoting from memory, it says.

"Quoting from memory." He must have seen it. Where did he see it? Let the answer come from others. He did not see it in my hands, because I had not seen it until within the last two days. He did not get it from Chandler. Who else had it? It is addressed to Loeb, with a request that it be submitted to the President.

Again, he says:

I know I am correct in the statement that during the course of the negotiations William E. Chandler, who since has accused the President of falsehood, made an oral report either to the President himself or to some one representing him, which was much more specific.

How does he know it? Where did he learn it? From whom did he receive the information? Was it from the man to whom it is said Chandler communicated it? I leave the country and the Senate to say.

Mr. President, I know the fortunes of war. I know that whenever circumstances happen to place any man in the forefront of the battle he must bear its brunt; and I make no complaint that I was compelled to bear my part in this controversy. I know that war means killing, and I cheerfully accept the chances of it. If it be civilized warfare, no murmur shall ever escape my lips; but in this century of civilization and progress, when the gospel of a "square deal" is upon the tongues if not in the hearts of men, our political adversaries ought at least to fight with the common fairness of the prize fighter—they ought not to strike below the belt.

I have in my time made many mistakes. I have in my time been accused of many things. My enemies delight in describing me as rash, headstrong, intemperate in speech and action, and, unfortunately, they too often have good reason for that description. My friends complain that sometimes I am arbitrary and dictatorial; and many times I concede the justice of their criticism. I have made many mistakes of judgment. I have done some men wrong, but when I became convinced of it, thank God, I have always had the manliness to acknowledge it and to tender my apology. But amongst all the accusations that have been made against me, no man ever before imputed to me a lack of candor, or charged me with duplicity; and no man ever shall and escape my denunciation. When a man so accuses me, it matters not where I am or who he is, I will write the "liar" across his forehead, so that in after years all men may know him and all honest men may shun him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment known as "the pass amendment." Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], I think, has not offered his substitute. It was, I think, agreed that that might be passed over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over. The next amendment will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, beginning with line 25, the following paragraph was inserted as in Committee of the Whole:

From and after May 1, 1908, it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to transport from any State, Territory, or district of the United States to any other State, Territory, or district of the United States or to any foreign country any article or commodity manufactured, mined, or produced by it or under its authority or which it may own in whole or in part, or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect, except such articles or commodities as may be necessary or used in the conduct of its business as a common carrier.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I regard this as one of the most far-reaching and important amendments that it is proposed to incorporate in the bill now under consideration. The words in the bill that have just been read are a substitute for the original amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I have not bothered myself, Mr. President, about coupling my name with any provision of this bill. There is not in it any so-called "Tillman amendment;" but I think that a brief recital of the facts would make it permissible for me to claim as much credit or discredit—whichever it may turn out to be—for the idea involved in this proposition as any other Senator.

While it is known as the "Elkins amendment"—although the language is not that of Mr. ELKINS, it having been prepared by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]—I recall the fact to the attention of Senators that on the 24th of February, the evening after the majority of the Interstate Commerce Committee had intrusted this bill to my keeping, to be reported without amendment, in an interview given out to the newspapers, I declared that it was not my purpose to be made a clown of in any effort to cast ridicule upon this proposed legislation; that if Senators who had charged me with this duty had any such purpose I would not lend myself to it, and that I would endeavor, in every way possible, to secure a practical and good railway rate law. I further stated that there were two important amendments which I wished to see incorporated in the bill. One of these was the idea embraced in this amendment, to wit, the divorce of the business of transportation from the business of production—to make a public carrier a public carrier and nothing else.

The other was a provision to compel interstate-commerce roads to give connections by means of switches or other appliances, so these little branch lines could gain access to the markets. That idea had been discussed and pressed with great earnestness by the Senator from West Virginia in committee, and I am perfectly willing that he should claim the paternity of it. But, so far as this other proposition is concerned, I think it never would have received the attention it has in the eyes of the people of the country and that the Senator from West Virginia himself never gave it the serious consideration which he afterwards did until I presented to this body the memorial of the Red Rock Fuel Company, pointing out the iniquities and outrages perpetrated on that corporation by the Baltimore and Ohio, and also followed, as it was, by the letter from the governor of West Virginia, Mr. Dawson, proclaiming the fact that the State of West Virginia was absolutely at the mercy of the three railroad systems entering it, so far as getting to market was concerned.

Then Senators will recall that day after day for a week or more every morning I presented in this Chamber and had read letter after letter from various coal producers, pointing out the absolute helplessness of the independent operators because of the fact that the Pennsylvania road and the Baltimore and Ohio road and the Chesapeake and Ohio road and the Norfolk and Western road absolutely dominated the bituminous and the anthracite coal fields of the two States of Pennsylvania and West Virginia, and that their property was being confiscated. So much for the genesis of this proposition.

But my attention has been called to the fact that the amendment that is incorporated in the bill as it stands, which it is proposed to concur in, does not cure the evil.

I have here a communication from a gentleman engaged in coal production, and he points out that this amendment would not prevent the ownership of coal properties by the ownership of stock in coal companies; that it would not prevent the control of coal companies by officials of railway companies; that it would not touch the ownership of railroads by coal companies or the common ownership of railroad companies and coal companies. Here is a letter prepared by an independent coal operator, in which the scheme by which this amendment can be evaded is elaborated and pointed out in detail. I have not time to read it, but I ask to have it incorporated in my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 15, 1906.

Hon. B. TILLMAN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SIR: So far as I have read the debates on the rate bill now before the Senate, you fail to touch one of the most important points in the railroad discrimination. As a rule the railroads do not own coal mines, but the principal owners and managers of railroads do. Let me illustrate in my crude way:

Suppose Cassatt, Murray & Co. own a big railroad. Suppose the same men—Cassatt, Murray & Co.—own large bodies of coal lands contiguous to this railroad; that the same Cassatt, Murray & Co. organize a coal company to mine coal and give it the name of the Susquehanna Coal Company. Suppose the Susquehanna Coal Company leases the land of Cassatt, Murray & Co. for the purpose of mining coal for market and pay a royalty, and that the railroad gives preference to this coal company in furnishing cars. You will readily see that a suit under the proposed Elkins substitute will not hold water. Nobody knows this better than the author of the substitute.

It seems to me that what is necessary is to frame an amendment requiring the railroads to prorate cars in proportion to the capacity of the operating coal companies. For instance, suppose A, B, and C are coal operators and competitors; that A's capacity is 100 tons of coal per day; that of B 50 tons, and C 25 tons. You will see that A needs twice as many cars as B, and that B needs twice as many cars as C. Suppose, however, that the railroad company owned by Cassatt, Murray & Co. agrees to furnish cars in proportion to the capacity of the competing companies as above and that cars have been sent to the yards for C, the smallest producer; A learns this, and as he is covetous to the last degree and has more money than C, who has limited means, he (A) bribes some switchmen (as is constantly done) to run C's cars on to A's tracks, and he does so. The railroad company can claim that it has no such knowledge; that it ordered cars sent C as requested.

One of the things that should be done, so it seems to me, is to so frame an amendment compelling equitable prorating of cars and compel the car accountant of the railroads to keep a separate set of books for coal cars, which should at all times be open to the inspection of the public, showing the number of coal cars owned by the railroad or used by the railroad, where they are at any and all times, and to make the railroad responsible if some switchmen should make a mistake, intentionally or otherwise, and run C's cars onto A's tracks.

As a Republican who always votes the Republican ticket, let me suggest that you consult some expert railroad or coal man, when you will find that the above is the way the railroads operate coal lands; not the companies, but the owners of the railroads, own the lands and practice such subterfuges as I mention above.

Very respectfully, D. J. ROBERTS.

The penalty of a car accountant for making a false entry of coal cars should be imprisonment.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, there are differences of opinion among able lawyers whom I have consulted, and I have before remarked in the Senate that this question is so perplexing and has so many ramifications and there are so many complex conditions, so many methods of evasion, that it is difficult, without a long and well-guarded enactment, to accomplish what we are trying to do without overdoing it and perpetrating great injury and wrong in certain instances. I have prepared what appears to me to be a much stronger and more efficacious provision, which I send to the desk and ask to have read as a substitute for the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment agreed to as in Committee of the Whole it is proposed to insert the following:

After May 1, 1908, it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to engage in the transportation of interstate commerce, if such common carrier shall at the time be interested, directly or indirectly, by stock ownership or otherwise, in the article or property which is the subject-matter of such commerce, or if it be interested at the time, directly or indirectly, by stock ownership or otherwise, in the mines or factories producing such commerce; or if at the time any officer, director, agent, or employee of such common carrier be interested, directly or indirectly, by stock ownership or otherwise, in the business of buying or selling such article or property which is the subject-matter of such commerce, or in the mines or factories producing the same; or if at the time stockholders owning more than 10 per cent of the capital stock of such common carrier be interested, directly or indirectly, in the business of buying or selling such article or property which is the subject-matter of such commerce, or in the mines or factories producing the same.

This section shall not prevent a common carrier from mining coal or carrying articles or property for its own use or for the use of its officers, directors, agents, employees, or stockholders.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" have it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CLAY. Let me ask the Senator a question. Does he ask for the adoption of this amendment in lieu of the amendment already adopted?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCCREARY. I ask that the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina may again be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will again be read.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina demands the yeas and nays on the question of agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. For the present I will withdraw that request. I desire to say a word in regard to the amendment. Having spoken on the original amendment, I now wish to mention some of the reasons why I want to substitute this.

It is easy to see that the provision which is now in the bill, while very broad, is also very loose; and while it is a step, and a very long one, in the right direction, and will undoubtedly do a great deal of good, the amendment which I have now offered may be too drastic. I had hoped, however, that we could incorporate this in the bill, knowing that in conference an important matter like this, so far-reaching in its consequences, would be very carefully considered, and every right and interest protected and guarded that it is possible to protect. But it is very clear to any man who thinks that if the officers of a railroad are permitted to own a mine, or if the railroad itself is permitted, through ownership or joint ownership or some other subterfuge or trickery, to have an interest in a coal mine, there will inevitably be favoritism in dealing with that coal mine and transporting its product, and that it will be impossible, without some drastic provision like this, to prevent the evils which every person recognizes.

Now, then, feeling that possibly this may be too strong, but expecting that it would be modified in conference if it be found to be dangerous, I offered it. It shows what I am trying to do. As I said, we have taken a long step forward. It may be wiser to wait a while and let the courts interpret the provision already in the bill. But, recognizing that the Senate will not vote this measure in, I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays; I do not withdraw the amendment, but leave it as it is, already voted down. I want to ask the Senate to incorporate in this provision, in line 7, page 6, after the word "indirect," the words "by partnership, stock ownership, or by any arrangement whatsoever." Thus the broad provision in regard to the public carrier being prohibited from transporting anything which it produces, will be broadened and more particularized by the words I have used. I will repeat them. After the word "indirect," in line 7, on page 6, insert the words "by partnership, stock ownership, or any arrangement whatsoever."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "noes" have it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will have to ask for the yeas and nays on that, because if the Senate is unwilling to put that in, it might just as well strike out the whole provision. I honestly believe you can not only run a freight train through this provision so far as the law goes, but there are holes in it through which you might drop the Washington Monument.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this amendment the Senator from South Carolina demands the yeas and nays. Is there a second?

Mr. CULBERSON. May we have the amendment again stated?

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 7, after the word "indirect," it is proposed to insert "by partnership, stock ownership, or any arrangement whatsoever;" so that, if amended, it will read:

Or produced by it or under its authority, or which it may own in whole or in part, or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect, by partnership, stock ownership, or any arrangement whatsoever, except such articles or commodities as may be necessary or used in the conduct of its business as a common carrier.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a second to the demand of the Senator from South Carolina for the yeas and nays?

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senate could vote on it again, it might adopt the amendment. I ask for a division.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, if it is in order, I should like to make a few remarks in reference to this amendment, as it would destroy practically every industry in the State of Washington if it should be adopted. I reserved the right to offer to this paragraph of the section when the bill reached the Senate an amendment providing that it shall not have application to timber or the manufactured products thereof. I might just as well present the amendment now, and my remarks with reference thereto, if it is proper. I move to amend the section, in line 4, page 6, after the word "commodity," by inserting "other than timber and the manufactured products thereof."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can not offer the amendment now.

Mr. PILES. I will discuss the question anyway.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will say to the Senator from Washington that, so far as I am personally concerned, I am perfectly willing and anxious to except any industry. I mentioned the other day that there were lumber roads that had been built by the owners of the trees, and unless they had been allowed to build their own railroads, the lumber would never have gotten to market. I am perfectly willing to except lumber and its products.

Mr. PILES. That is all right.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am after coal and coke, two of the necessaries of life.

Mr. PILES. A few words on the question of coal. I do not know what the conditions are in West Virginia that may call for drastic legislation of this character, but the State of Washington is one of the great coal-producing States of this Union. We are engaged in producing coal largely by small railroads. It is true that the great transcontinental railroads own coal mines in our State, and have owned them for a great many years, for the simple reason, I suppose, that private individuals did not see fit to engage in the coal-mining business to a very large extent in the early history of the State of Washington. The railroads acquired coal-mining properties and developed those properties to a very large extent. But, on the other hand, there are private persons and companies engaged in mining and transporting coal in the State of Washington.

Mr. President, I know, for instance, in my own home city, in the early history of that country the people turned out en masse for the purpose of constructing, or aiding in the construction, of a little line of railroad—which is now some 38 miles in length—to the coal mines, in order that they might have some product to send to market and get ready money into that new country. That road exists to-day, and to my personal knowledge its stock is, or was, owned by another transportation company. It is run in connection with a steamship line, and it carries freight and passengers for hire for the people living along the line of the road. But the transportation of outside freight is a mere incident to its business. The principal business of that road is to carry the coal mined by its stockholders up in the mountains down to the city of Seattle, and there it is transported by steamers to California and other domestic ports, where it is sold. That steamship line is indirectly, at least, interested in that railroad. Is it the intention of Congress to put that railroad out of business? Is it the intention of Congress to put that steamship line out of business? I think not.

Mr. President, that is but one incident. Many more might be cited. That road is doing nobody any injury. It and the mines which it reaches employ hundreds of men in a great and beneficial industry. The steamship line operated in connection with it is engaged in building a great commerce. Shall this railway company, this steamship company, and other companies conducting great industries on similar lines be put out of business? That is exactly what will be done if the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina is adopted, because it provides, in effect, that the steamship line shall not own any stock in the railroad company, and the railroad company shall own no stock in the steamship line, and if such ownership shall exist it will be unlawful for the steamship company to transport from the State of Washington to the State of California, for instance, the coal carried by the railroad company to the city of Seattle for transshipment.

But let me go one step further, Mr. President. In the development of the great Pacific Northwestern country we have opened up the most magnificent forests in the world. We have done it by building great logging railroads into the forests. We are not logging in that country with horses and wagons or oxen. We are logging by means of railroads. Those railroads, running from 5 to 40 or 50 miles back into the forests, necessarily penetrate the valleys. People to a certain extent have settled in those valleys and have builded for themselves homes. Their little freight, as a matter of accommodation more than anything else, and some passengers, are carried by the logging railroads. Those logging roads own sawmills on tide water, or the mill companies own the logging roads. The roads take the timber to the sawmills, where it is sawed into lumber. The mill companies own their own schooners, both steam and sail. When the timber is sawed into lumber it is transported on these schooners to all parts of the maritime world.

If, then, these little logging roads can not own stock in the sawmills, or the mill companies can not own stock in the logging roads or own such roads outright, the great lumber industry, which employs in the woods 30,000 men alone, and which employs in the woods and in the mills and in the various industries connected with the manufacture of lumber in the State of Washington alone upward of a hundred thousand men, and has an annual pay roll of something like $60,000,000, will be seriously retarded if not wholly destroyed.

Mr. President, I think it is time for Congress to call a halt. We came here to enact legislation upon this great question which would be beneficial to the people. The people of this country have had one object in view, if I understand them aright, and that is to create some tribunal before which they can appear and submit their grievances. Every man in this country has a right to go into court and complain of any man who does him an injury, or with respect to whom he assumes that he has a grievance. The shippers of this country came to the conclusion that they were entitled to have some forum before which they could present their grievances with reference to the railway rates in this country. And finding they had none, except that afforded by the common law, which was worse than nothing, they wanted Congress to enact a rate law, and that was all they wanted in this bill, in my judgment. They did not want Congress to indict the great industries of this country. They did not want Congress to stifle the energies and the industry of man; and I protest in the name of the great Pacific Northwest against the injustice that is about to be inflicted upon those people, and I hope the Senate will not permit the amendment to prevail.

Mr. McLAURIN. Before the Senator from Washington takes his seat, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. PILES. Certainly.

Mr. McLAURIN. If the words I shall read were inserted after the word "carrier," in line 1, page 6, would they not meet the objection of the Senator from Washington?

whose principal business is common carrying.

It seems to be the desire of the Senate to prohibit common carriers, whose principal business is common carrying, from engaging in the business of mining, but not to prohibit producers from providing their own means of transportation for their freight when they make the transportation business incidental to their main business. It seems to me if the words "whose principal business is common carrying" were inserted just after the word "carrier," in line 1, page 6, it would meet the objection of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. PILES. "Whose principal business is that of an interstate-commerce carrier." Is that what I understand the Senator to say?

Mr. McLAURIN. The words I would suggest are "whose principal business is common carrying."

Mr. PILES. I think that would greatly benefit the amendment as it now stands; it would make it a great deal better; but I want to insert the word "interstate"—"whose principal business is that of an interstate carrier." But I think that this amendment should be defeated altogether. It is too large a question to be dealt with in this way. In my judgment too much mischief may be done by the enactment of this proposed law at the present time.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment, which was adopted by such a large majority when the bill was under discussion in Committee of the Whole, is to make a start toward divorcing production and transportation. I think the amendment is drawn as mildly as it can be and accomplish anything.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] makes an appeal here that logging roads in his State shall be excepted, or that, on account of their being handicapped so much by this amendment, it should not go into the law. If I understand the Senator's position, and if these logging roads are owned by lumber companies and incidental to their business, the law would not apply to them; or, if I understand, if these are intrastate logging roads or private roads they do not come under the operation of the law, nor are they interstate carriers.

Mr. PILES. Will the Senator pardon me for a moment?

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. PILES. It is provided that this bill shall be applicable to carriers partly by rail and partly by water. I have endeavored to demonstrate that these logging roads are carrying partly by rail and partly by water, and it is not only interstate, but it is foreign commerce.

Mr. ELKINS. Which company owns—the steamship company, the lumber, or the railroad company?

Mr. PILES. One company owns the logging road and the sawmill and the steam schooners.

Mr. ELKINS. Which owns?

Mr. PILES. One company.

Mr. ELKINS. Which is the owning company?

Mr. PILES. I do not recall. In some cases it may be the lumber company, and in others it may be the railway company.

Mr. ELKINS. That is the very thing which produces the confusion here. If the lumber company owns this little line of railroad, 20 or 30 miles long, as an incident to its business, then this proposed law does not apply.

Mr. FLINT. I will answer by saying that one company organized under the laws of the State of California is engaged in the business of milling and also of operating a railroad and conducting a steamship line.

Mr. ELKINS. Those are very extraordinary powers to give to one company.

Mr. FLINT. Under the laws of our State——

Mr. ELKINS. Why do they not take in banking?

Mr. FLINT. They can do everything in my State but banking.

Mr. ELKINS. Here is a great——

Mr. PERKINS. I will state to the Senator, if he please, that in Alaska there are now projected a number of corporations which propose to develop the iron, the copper, the galena, and other mineral resources, and that same company will own the vessels which will transport the ores from Alaska to Tacoma.

Mr. ELKINS. Senators may get up and talk about these cases on the distant frontiers. What I wish to do is to correct the abuses which have grown up; to provide that railroads shall not engage in business in competition with shippers on their lines; that railroads shall not own thousands of acres of coal lands, and mine the coal and ship it over their own lines to market and freeze out and crush independent operators and individuals; that they shall not seize and become owners of whole sections of States, and monopolize the business of mining and shipping coal, when they are organized and incorporated to only transport freight and passengers. If railroads can engage in the coal, coke, lumber, and iron-ore business, it will be only a question of time when they will drive out of business all other shippers of these commodities. The fact is the people do not want and will not permit railroads to engage in business in competition with their own shippers.

This is the main question. If incidentally during production and transportation it works injustice to small enterprises or to large ones, like those alluded to in California, Washington, and Oregon, the great principle contended for should not be prevented from becoming law because it might injure some smaller interest.

Mr. President, I insist that this amendment has due regard, so far as it can, to the rights and interests of all railroads and all producers. The question is, Will Congress permit the coal interests in the States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia, and other States to be turned over to the railroad interests? Unless we provide some remedy of his kind, that will be the result.

I do not agree with the suggestions made by the Senator from California and the Senator from Oregon or the Senator from Mississippi. I think the Senate acted wisely when it passed this amendment, and I hope that it will remain a part of the law and be adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been demanded on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], and the Secretary will call the roll.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FLINT. I understand that the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington is accepted by the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. TILLMAN. I have no right to accept.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is to an entirely different part of the section from that to which the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina is offered.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that my amendment may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 6 of the bill, line 7, after the word "indirect," insert "by partnership, stock ownership, or by any arrangement whatsoever."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. McLAURIN (when Mr. MONEY's name was called). My colleague [Mr. MONEY] has a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I will let this announcement answer for the day.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. SMOOT (when Mr. SUTHERLAND's name was called). My colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is unavoidably absent from the Senate to-day. If he were here, he would vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 23, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—23.

Berry	Culberson	Hansbrough	Rayner
Burkett	Dolliver	La Follette	Simmons
Carmack	Foster	Latimer	Stone
Clark, Mont.	Frazier	McLaurin	Taliaferro

Burrows	Hale	Martin	Warren

So Mr. TILLMAN's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to the pass amendment, which was laid over in his absence. It is now before the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, it is not my desire to provoke any additional discussion on this subject——

Mr. STONE. The amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment was just voted on, and——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been disposed of.

Mr. STONE. But the amendment itself has not been agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been concurred in. That question will be taken up after this amendment is disposed of.

Mr. CULBERSON. I was proceeding to say that I have no desire to provoke additional discussion on the subject of a free pass, and I do not believe the Senate would be glad to have it done. I have, however, redrafted the amendment as passed by the Senate, including every subject which was acted on by the Senate, but I think it is in better form, avoiding repetitions, etc. If I may submit it in this form now, I ask leave to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the matter inserted as in Committee of the Whole, beginning on line 9, page 4, insert:

No carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall hereafter directly or indirectly issue or give any interstate free ticket, free pass, or free transportation for passengers except to its officers, agents, employees, surgeons, physicians, actual and bona fide attorneys, and members of their immediate families; to ministers of religion, inmates of hospitals and charitable and eleemosynary institutions; to indigent, destitute, and homeless persons, and to such persons when transported by charitable societies or hospitals, and the necessary agents employed in such transportation; to inmates of the National Homes or State Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and of Soldiers' and Sailors' Homes, including those about to enter and those returning home after discharge under arrangements with boards of managers, and female nurses that served during the civil war; to ex-Union soldiers and sailors and ex-Confederate soldiers; and to owners and care takers of live stock when traveling with such stock or when going to point of shipment or returning from point of delivery: Provided, That this provision shall not be construed to prohibit the interchange of passes for the officers, agents, and employees of carriers, and members of their immediate families, nor to prohibit any carrier from carrying passengers free with the object of providing relief in cases of general epidemic, pestilence, or other calamitous visitations, nor prevent such carrier from giving free or reduced transportation to laborers transported to any place for the purpose of supplying any demand for labor at such place. Any carrier violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall for each offense pay to the United States a penalty of not less than one hundred nor more than two thousand dollars. Jurisdiction of offenses under this provision shall be the same as that provided for offenses in an act entitled "An act to further regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States," approved February 19, 1903, and any amendment thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Is the amendment open to an amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is now open to amendment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I offer an amendment to come in after the word "dollars," line 4, page 5.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota offers an amendment to the amendment just agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It comes in immediately after the penalty clause in the amendment agreed to. It extends it to the person accepting the pass. That is the purport of my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the words "two thousand dollars," at the end of the penalty clause, insert:

And any person, other than the persons excepted in this provision, who uses, or who solicits or accepts for himself or other person, any such interstate free ticket, free pass, or free transportation shall be subject to a like penalty and fine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I desire to offer an amendment. After the words "ministers of religion," where it occurs, I move to amend by adding "local and traveling railroad secretaries of the Young Men's Christian Association."

Mr. HALE. I move, in addition to the words to be inserted on the motion of the Senator from Iowa, to insert "all football and baseball players."

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I do not seek to antagonize the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. I shall vote for that, because I think it ought to be in, and in addition to that I want these other deserving and popular persons to have the benefit of passes.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, there may be hidden in the suggestion of the Senator from Maine a very fine form of humor, although I do not think it lies upon the surface of it. There are in the United States 300 Railway Young Men's Christian Associations. The secretaries of those associations are giving their time practically without reward to help to serve the great body of railway employees of the United States.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. I have understood that those secretaries are employees of the railroad companies. The members of the association are, and they are, too, as I have been informed, so that they are already embraced in the term "agents and employees."

Mr. DOLLIVER. The members of the associations are employees of the railroad. The traveling secretaries are not employees of the railway, but give their entire time to serving their fellow-employees in matters of very great importance, not only as to their physical, but to their intellectual and moral life. I regard the provision as more important and more practical even than the exception made in favor of clergymen, who are traveling oftentimes not upon the business of their parish.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, I move my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert after the amendment just agreed to the words "football and baseball players."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McLAURIN. I move to insert after the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Following the amendment agreed to on motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], it is proposed to insert:

Widows and orphans.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. McLAURIN. I will have to ask for the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. After the words "civil war," almost in the middle of the amendment, I move to add "or war with Spain." There is no reason why that should not be included. This is in good faith.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "civil war" insert the words:

Or war with Spain.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In view of the fact that the amendment is again being loaded down with cumbersome provisions which were added yesterday, and which the Senator from Texas today tried to change and reduce, I offer an amendment which I move as a substitute, and which contains the simple limitations which were first had without all these conditions. I offer it as a substitute for the entire amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment intended to be proposed insert the following:

That no carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall hereafter, directly or indirectly, or by any device, give free transportation, except to the officers, agents, and employees, attorneys, physicians, and surgeons of the carrier issuing the same, and members of their immediate families, to ministers of religion and inmates of hospitals and eleemosynary and charitable institutions and indigent sick persons.

Provided, That said carrier of interstate commerce may, by arrangement with other carriers of interstate commerce, provide for free transportation of its bona fide employees, officers, agents, attorneys, physicians, and surgeons, and their families, over the lines of such other carriers in connection with said free transportation over the lines of the carrier providing said free transportation.

Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent such carrier from giving free or reduced transportation to laborers transported to any place for the purpose of supplying any demand for labor at such place.

Any carrier violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall for each offense pay to the United States a penalty of not less than one hundred nor more than two thousand dollars.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole is at the bottom of page 5, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

From and after May 1, 1908, it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to transport from any State, Territory, or district of the United States to any other State, Territory, or district of the United States or to any foreign country any article or commodity manufactured, mined, or produced by it or under its authority or which it may own in whole or in part, or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect, except such articles or commodities as may be necessary or used in the conduct of its business as a common carrier.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I move that the amendment be amended by inserting after the word "commodity," in line 4, on page 6, the words "other than timber and the manufactured products thereof."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, in line 4, after the word "commodity," it is proposed to insert "other than timber and the manufactured products thereof."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it; and the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. PILES. I move to further amend the amendment by inserting, on page 6, line 1, after the word "carrier," the words "whose principal business is that of a common carrier."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. [Putting the question.]

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us understand that, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By the sound the "noes" have it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I object to having amendments run through in that way.

Mr. GALLINGER. So do I.

Mr. LODGE. This is a very important amendment; and I think we have some reason to discuss it. I do not even know where it is proposed to insert it in the bill, owing to the way it has been hurried through.

Mr. ELKINS. The amendment was proposed to be inserted on page 6, line 1.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think that even the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] in regard to timber was carried.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment was declared to be carried.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to have it pointed out where the last amendment is to come in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 1, after the words "common carrier," it is proposed to insert "whose principal business is that of a common carrier;" so that as proposed to be amended the amendment will read:

From and after May 1, 1908, it shall be unlawful for any common carrier whose principal business is that of a common carrier to transport from any State, Territory, or district of the United States., etc.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I understand that amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was declared to be rejected by the Chair——

Mr. ELKINS. Yes; it was declared to be rejected by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By the action of the majority of the Senate.

Mr. CLAY. I am sure the Senator from West Virginia will accept the amendment which I now offer, as the words I propose were in the amendment as it was originally drawn. In line 8, on page 6, after the word "necessary," I move to strike out the words "or used in" and insert "and intended for its own use."

Mr. ELKINS. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia can not accept the amendment. The amendment must be acted on by the Senate. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 8, it is proposed to strike out the words "or used in" and to insert "and intended for its own use."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] particularly to the question which seems to be raised by the section as it now stands. It might work serious injury to those who are owners of pipe lines. I know very little about pipe lines, but that is evidently growing to a large business. The first section of the bill as it has been agreed to provides that:

Any corporation or any person or persons engaged in the transportation of oil or other commodity, * * * shall be considered and held to be common carriers within the meaning and purpose of this act.

The provision at this time before the Senate forbids any common carrier transporting any commodity of its own manufacture or production, unless it be carried for its own use in the conduct of its own business. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] says that will include coal. To be sure, it will include coal; and that may be very well. I have voted for the provision to exclude railroad companies from engaging in the mining of coal; but where a company is engaged in the production of oil, is it desirable to forbid that company to transport its oil, even though it be not for the purpose of using it in the business of transportation, but to forbid it transporting its oil to its reservoirs for sale or for refinement or for whatever it may be?

Mr. ELKINS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. STONE. Yes; but I have asked the Senator a question.

Mr. ELKINS. Has the Senator an amendment prepared to offer there?

Mr. STONE. I had prepared an amendment as a tentative proposition; but I am not sure whether or not it ought to go in. My amendment is to add, at the end of this provision, after the word "carrier," in line 9, on page 6, this proviso:

Provided, That this provision shall not apply to any corporation, person, or persons engaged in the transportation of oil or other commodity by means of pipe lines only.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I understand the amendment, it is to except the oil pipe lines from the operation of this amendment, and that is all.

Mr. STONE. Yes, sir; that is all. That is the purpose of it—that is to say, to except them from the operation of the pending amendment, which would forbid them from transporting through their own pipes their own production.

Mr. LODGE. I do not believe in excepting them, but I do not want to take the time of the Senate in discussing the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri offer that amendment?

Mr. STONE. Yes, sir; I do offer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 9, after the word "carrier," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That this provision shall not apply to any corporation, person, or persons engaged in the transportation of oil or other commodity by means of pipe lines only.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri if, in his judgment, it is in the power of Congress to prohibit a pipe-line company, conducting a business of its own, from transporting its product if it does not transport it for hire, but simply transports its own product? Can a declaration made by Congress that such parties shall be common carriers make them common carriers when, in fact, they are not?

Mr. STONE. I have not believed, Mr. President, that the pipe lines constructed by a company or an individual, for use solely in his or its own business, or for the transmission of his or its own product and used for that only, would be subject to the provisions of this proposed law. But the first section of this bill does provide that all pipe-line companies engaged in carrying oil or other commodities from one State or district to another shall be considered common carriers.

Mr. MALLORY. What I wanted to inquire of the Senator was, would a declaration by Congress to that effect make them common carriers if, in fact, they were not common carriers; if they were simply carrying their own products at their own expense, and were not engaged in transporting oil for hire?

Mr. STONE. But suppose they are common carriers?

Mr. MALLORY. That would alter the case.

Mr. STONE. Suppose they are common carriers—that is to say, they construct a line of pipes and may carry for hire under the provisions of this law—they having exercised the right of eminent domain, become common carriers; is it the purpose of the law to forbid them transporting their own products through their own pipes?

Mr. BACON. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that I think he misreads this sentence and altogether misconstrues it. I do not understand the first part of the first section to declare that all corporations so engaged are common carriers. The words are words of limitation, not of a declaratory character at all. The reading of it is this:

That the provisions of this act shall apply to any corporation or any person or persons—

Leaving out now the intervening words—who shall be considered and held to be common carriers.

What corporation and what person? Such corporations and such persons as shall be decided to be common carriers. It does not say that all persons and all corporations so engaged shall be common carriers; but it says they shall be deemed to be within the provisions of this act if they are held to be common carriers—such of them as are held to be common carriers. I repeat, the words are words of limitation, and not words of declaration.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I care nothing whatever about the amendment; and as there seems to be a disposition to disagree to it, I will withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to the amendment is withdrawn; and the question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. I move to amend, on line 25, page 5, by striking out the word "eight" and inserting "ten," so as to make the date there "May 1, 1910."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 25, it is proposed to change the date from "1908" to "1910;" so as to read:

From and after May 1, 1910, it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. That has been voted down once by a yea-and-nay vote.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment as amended.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to strike out the word "eight" and insert "nine." It will be remembered that on a vote of the Senate "1911" was once placed in the bill, and again "1909."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 25, it is proposed to change the date "1908" to "1909."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" have it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was rejected.

Mr. PILES. I now move to amend, on page 6, line 9, after the word "carrier," by inserting the following:

Provided, That the Interstate Commerce Commission may by order except from the provisions of this section any carrier whose principal business, in the opinion of the Commission, may not be that of a common carrier.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 9, after the word "carrier," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the Interstate Commerce Commission may by order except from the provisions of this section any carrier whose principal business, in the opinion of the Commission, may not be that of a common carrier.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator how the Commission is to determine what is the principal business? Is it to be determined by the quantity of business? Is it to be determined by the net profits of any particular character of business? What basis would the Senator lay down for the purpose of determining whether one business is the principal and the other merely collateral to it? Sometimes they may be even. One may be greater one year and another may be greater the next year; and so it may be in any particular month. It seems to me that the Senator is trying to get something in there that would be so vague that it would destroy itself.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I admit that there may be cases where it would be difficult for the Commission to determine with accuracy the principal business of the company; but a great injustice is going to be done to some of the great industries of this country if this provision of the bill carries as it now stands. Take, for instance, the company I mentioned a while ago, which will give a perfect answer to the Senator's question.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I make a suggestion to the Senator right there?

Mr. PILES. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I listened to the argument of the Senator and I confess that it did not appeal to me, because in the case which he gave if the railway is owned by anyone, it is owned by the stockholders, while if the stockholders own the railroad, the stockholders also own the lumber or the timber in just the same proportion that they own the railroad, and it would be the simplest thing in the world——

Mr. PILES. Suppose the carrier owns the stock.

Mr. McCUMBER. It would be the simplest thing in the world if it were among ten persons, each holding a tenth, that each of those ten persons would own one-tenth of the lumber industry, and form another corporation. Therefore, it is really unnecessary to make any exception to this rule.

Mr. PILES. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. PILES. Suppose the stock of one company be controlled by another carrier?

Mr. McCUMBER. Then this does not touch it if it is owned by another carrier.

Mr. PILES. But the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, to which I was addressing myself a few moments ago, does.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] has pointed out, it would be impossible to find a basis for such decisions as this. I think there is also another very fundamental objection. I do not think we ought to put it in the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to exempt one company from the law if it chooses to say that its principal business is not in its opinion that of a common carrier.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The SECRETARY. Beginning in line 10, page 6, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, adopted the following amendment:

Any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall promptly, upon application of any shipper tendering interstate traffic for transportation, construct, maintain, and operate upon reasonable terms a switch connection with any private side track which may be constructed to connect with its railroad, where such connection is reasonably practicable and can be put in with safety and will furnish sufficient business to justify the construction and maintenance of the same; and shall furnish cars for the movement of such traffic to the best of its ability without discrimination in favor of or against any such shipper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer an amendment to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 6, after line 20, in the amendment already read, it is proposed to add the following:

If any common carrier shall fail to install and operate any such switch or connection as aforesaid, on application therefor in writing by any shipper, such shipper may make complaint to the Commission, as provided in section 13 of this act, and the Commission shall hear and investigate the same and shall determine as to the safety and practicability thereof and justification and reasonable compensation therefor, and the Commission may make an order, as provided in section 15 of this act, directing the common carrier to comply with the provisions of this section in accordance with such order, and such order shall be enforced as hereinafter provided for the enforcement of all other orders by the Commission other than orders for the payment of money.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the amendment to which I propose the amendment read by the Secretary is, I think, an important one, and if it is important, it certainly is worth while to add to it an enforcing provision. Such a provision is absent from the amendment under consideration. All that my amendment proposes to do is to provide for the enforcement of the amendment heretofore adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. May I have that amendment stated again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated.

The Secretary again read Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin is in the nature of a penalty clause to be attached to this particular paragraph of the bill. We have a general penalty clause that covers every infraction of the provisions of the bill, and it seems to me it is needless to add a penalty clause to each section.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I think this amendment ought to be adopted. I thought of providing a penalty clause and thought also of the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, but I can see no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no necessity for it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I interrupt?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will regard the question as an open question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The amendment which I have offered is not a penalty provision at all. It is simply an enforcing provision, without which the paragraph is defective. I know the view that is entertained by the Commission with respect to that paragraph—that it would be inoperative unless such a provision be added to it.

Mr. NELSON. I think the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is right. His amendment is needed in order to give force and effect to what may be called "the switch amendment" of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin gives the Interstate Commerce Commission power directly to act in the premises, and I think the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia is incomplete without the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin. I think the amendment to the amendment ought to be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 6, after line 20, to insert:

It shall be the duty of carriers engaged in interstate commerce to give equally good service and accommodations to all persons paying the same compensation for interstate transportation of passengers.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Before leaving section 1, I desire to offer an amendment to the pass amendment, or the substitute of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] as finally adopted.

After the word "families," in line 5 of the substitute amendment which was finally adopted, I move to add the words which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment has been agreed to in the Senate and is not open to amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But it is a part of this section, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE. That does not make any difference.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I supposed until we passed the section it would be open to amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would hold otherwise.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then I do not offer my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be stated.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 7, line 4, after the word "shall," to insert "file with the Commission created by this act and."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 7, line 6, after the word "showing," to insert "all."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 7, line 7, before the word "transportation," to strike out "the."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 7, line 7, after the word "transportation," to strike out down to and including the word "route," in line 9, and to insert:

Between different points on its own route and between points on its own route and points on the route of any other carrier by railroad or by water when a through route and joint rate have been established.

Mr. LODGE. In order to make that amendment conform to the rest of the bill, I move to insert after the word "railroad," in line 11, the words "by pipe line."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 11, after the word "railroad," it is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting the words "by pipe line."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. What is that amendment?

Mr. LODGE. I will say to the Senator from Ohio it is simply to make applicable to pipe lines on joint routes the same requirement for schedules of rates, etc., to be kept open to inspection, that is made in regard to other carriers.

Mr. FORAKER. At what point in the bill is the amendment to come in?

Mr. LODGE. In line 11, after the word "railroad," to insert "by pipe line."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There should be a comma after the word "railroad."

Mr. LODGE. Insert a comma after the word "railroad," and then after that the words "by pipe line."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 16, after the word "separately," strike out the word "the" and insert "all."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 7, line 17, before the word "icing," to insert "storage charges."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on line 18, after the word "require," to insert "all special privileges or facilities granted or allowed."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 7, line 20, after the word "part," to strike out "of" and insert "or."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 7, line 21, after the word "charges," to insert "or the value of the service rendered to the passenger, shipper, or consignee."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, was, on page 7, line 24, after the word "be," to insert "kept."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, was, on page 8, line 4, after the word "inspected," to insert:

The provisions of this section shall apply to all traffic, transportation, and facilities defined in section 1 of this act.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, was, on page 8, line 23, before the word "and," to strike out "established" and insert "filed."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, was, on page 8, line 25, after the word "days'," to strike out "public notice" and insert "notice to the Commission and to the public, published as aforesaid."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, was, on page 9, after line 12, to strike out, beginning with the word "And," in line 13, down to and including the word "force," in line 21.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, was, on page 9, after line 21, to insert:

The names of the several carriers which are parties to any joint tariff shall be specified therein, and each of the parties thereto, other than the one filing the same, shall file with the Commission such evidence of concurrence therein or acceptance thereof as may be required or approved by the Commission, and where such evidence of concurrence or acceptance is filed it shall not be necessary for the carriers filing the same to also file copies of the tariffs in which they are named as parties.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, was, on page 10, beginning with the word "Every," in line 5, to strike out down to and including the word "same," in line 10.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, was, on page 10, line 10, after the word "Every," to strike out "such."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, was, on page 10, line 11, after the word "carrier," to insert "subject to this act."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, was, on page 10, line 14, after the word "party," to strike out, beginning with the word "And," down to and including line 21 on page 11.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, was, on page 12, beginning with the word "If," in line 3, to strike out down to and including line 4 on page 13.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 13, after line 4, to insert:

No carrier shall, unless otherwise provided by this act, engage or participate in the transportation of passengers or property, as defined in the first section of this act, unless the rates, fares, and charges upon which the same are transported by said carrier have been filed and published in accordance with the provisions of this section; nor shall any carrier charge or demand or collect or receive a greater or less or different compensation for such transportation of passengers or property, or for any service in connection therewith, between the points named in such tariffs than the rates, fares, and charges which are specified in the tariff filed and in effect at the time; nor shall any carrier refund or remit in any manner or by any device any portion of the rates, fares, and charges so specified, nor extend to any shipper or person any privileges or facilities in the transportation of passengers or property, except such as are specified in such tariffs.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 13, after line 21, to insert:

That in time of war or threatened war preference and precedence shall, upon the representation of the President of the United States of the need therefor, be given, over all other traffic, to the transportation of troops and material of war, and carriers shall adopt every means within their control to facilitate and expedite the military traffic.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 14, after line 2, to insert:

That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to further regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States," approved February 19, 1903, be amended so as to read as follows:

"That anything done or omitted to be done by a corporation common carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce and the acts amendatory thereof, which, if done or omitted to be done by any director or officer thereof, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or person acting for or employed by such corporation, would constitute a misdemeanor under said acts or under this act, shall also be held to be a misdemeanor committed by such corporation, and upon conviction thereof it shall be subject to like penalties as are prescribed in said acts or by this act with reference to such persons, except as such penalties are herein changed. The willful failure upon the part of any carrier subject to said acts to file and publish the tariffs or rates and charges as required by said acts, or strictly to observe such tariffs until changed according to law, shall be a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof the corporation offending shall be subject to a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $20,000 for each offense; and it shall be unlawful for any person, persons, or corporation to offer, grant, or give, or to solicit, accept, or receive any rebate, concession, or discrimination in respect to the transportation of any property in interstate or foreign commerce by any common carrier subject to said act to regulate commerce and the acts amendatory thereto whereby any such property shall by any device whatever be transported at a less rate than that named in the tariffs published and filed by such carrier, as is required by said act to regulate commerce and the acts amendatory thereto, or whereby any other advantage is given or discrimination is practiced. Every person or corporation who shall offer, grant, or give, or solicit, accept, or receive any such rebates, concession, or discrimination shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $20,000: Provided, That any person, or any officer or director of any corporation subject to the provisions of this act, or the act to regulate commerce and the acts amendatory thereof, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or person acting for or employed by any such corporation, who shall be convicted as aforesaid, shall, in addition to the fine herein provided for, be liable to imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of not exceeding two years, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. Every violation of this section shall be prosecuted in any court of the United States having jurisdiction of crimes within the district in which such violation was committed, or through which the transportation may have been conducted; and whenever the offense is begun in one jurisdiction and completed in another it may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined, and punished in either jurisdiction in the same manner as if the offense had been actually and wholly committed therein.

"In construing and enforcing the provisions of this section, the act, omission, or failure of any officer, agent, or other person acting for or employed by any common carrier or shipper, acting within the scope of his employment, shall in every case be also deemed to be the act, omission, or failure of such carrier or shipper, as well as that of the person. Whenever any carrier files with the Interstate Commerce Commission or publishes a particular rate under the provisions of the act to regulate commerce or acts amendatory thereto, or participates in any rates so filed or published, that rate as against such carrier, its officers or agents, in any prosecution begun under this act shall be conclusively deemed to be the legal rate, and any departure from such rate, or any offer to depart therefrom, shall be deemed to be an offense under this section of this act."

Mr. LODGE. I desire to offer an amendment to the paragraph which has just been read. In line 11, page 15, after the word "shall," I move to insert the words "knowingly and willfully."

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I have had very little experience in the law, but what little I have had, in one instance had to do with those very words. When they were inserted, the difficulty of proving that it was willfully done destroyed the opportunity to inflict punishment. I think the Senator will emasculate and practically take all the backbone out of our effort to stop this vicious and infamous business of giving rebates if he undertakes to put those words in. I hope he will not insist upon the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it seems to me merely just to put in those words. On page 14, where it is a mere question of a fine for not publishing tariffs and rates, it is required to be a willful failure, and on page 15 we propose to inflict—very properly, as I regard it—the punishment of imprisonment. To provide that the officers controlling a railroad shall be held and put in prison for, perhaps, the mere error of a subordinate a thousand miles away—a mere mistake—would be an injustice that nobody would wish to embody into law. This is the usual provision.

Mr. WARNER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts let me call his attention to the fact that on page 17, line 8, where it is only a fine, the act is required to be knowingly and willfully done?

Mr. LODGE. I was going to call attention to that. When we come to deal with that portion which applies to the carrier, to the other party to the transaction we want to end, in the amendment as introduced by the Senator from North Dakota and carried, the words "knowingly and willfully" are put in. Now we require that, and require it properly, where it is proposed to impose a fine alone upon the shipper, and yet, as it stands, we would impose imprisonment upon the officer of any railroad whether it was through intention or whether it was a mere accident. It seems to me that it would be grossly unjust to leave out those words.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to call the Senator's attention to one other feature in this matter, and that is that these penalties apply to all kinds of discriminations. The law specifies simply an unlawful or unjust discrimination. That presupposes that there may be some character of discrimination which is not unjust, and the line of demarcation between the just and the unjust is one which will have to be determined by the court in nearly every instance. Therefore a person might act in the very best of faith, supposing that he is conforming entirely to our requirements, and yet, being unable to know what the court may hold in the matter of an unjust discrimination as against a just discrimination, he would be held guilty and punished, although he did it unknowingly and not willfully. For this reason alone, it seems to me, the words should be put in.

The Senator from South Carolina will understand, of course, that every man is presumed to intend that which naturally flows from his acts, but when the act itself is not of a criminal nature, "willfully" or "maliciously" or "intentionally" ought to be included.

Mr. FULTON. I should like to suggest to the Senator that the words "knowingly and willfully," if inserted, should be inserted after the word "solicit," so as to qualify the words "accept or receive" and also qualify the word "discrimination." The reason I suggest that is this: It is impossible, it seems to me, that a carrier should offer or grant rebates without knowing it or should offer or grant terms other than those named in its schedules without knowing it. It might be possible that one would accept or receive a rebate, it might be possible that a discrimination would be made, without it being done knowingly.

Mr. LODGE. I think it is perfectly possible that a clerk at some distant point might give a mistaken rate; but a man can not very well solicit a discriminatory rate without knowing it. We apply it to the whole. I do not see why we should be so very tender to the shipper, and then take this exceptional course established or published in the schedules without knowing it. toward the officers of the roads.

Mr. FULTON. Here is the distinction. The shipper may accept or receive a rebate or a rate other than that which is established or published in the schedules without knowing it. That might be possible. But that a representative of a transportation company could offer or grant a rebate without knowing it, it seems to me is practically impossible.

The clerk or the agent at the distant point, to whom the Senator refers, has the schedules before him and knows what the published and established schedules of rates are, and there could not be any reason or any chance for him to make a mistake. I think, however, the words "knowingly and willfully" might properly be inserted after the word "solicit," between that and "accept," so as to read, "knowingly and willfully accept or receive any such rebates, concession, or discrimination," etc.

Mr. LODGE. It covers not only rebates, but concessions, discriminations, and every sort of infraction of the orders of the Commission. I prefer to have the question taken on the amendment at the point I offered it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 11, after the word "shall," insert "knowingly and willfully;" so that if amended it will read:

Every person or corporation who shall knowingly and willfully offer, grant, or give or solicit, accept or receive.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I favor the adoption of the amendment that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has offered. I do not rise, however, to speak to that, but only to put in the RECORD something I did not have at my command when I was speaking upon this amendment a few days ago. There was a good deal of discussion as to how it came about that in the enactment of the Elkins law the provision of imprisonment for violations of the interstate-commerce act was eliminated from the statute. I said in that connection that I understood that the Interstate Commerce Commissioners had recommended in their official reports that we abolish the provision for imprisonment, and I said, in addition to that, that at the time of the hearing before the Interstate Commerce Committee members of the Interstate Commerce Commission who appeared before the committee recommended that imprisonment be abolished.

There having been some dispute of that proposition, I have taken the trouble to look it up, and I now have here, which I send to the desk, the report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of the House of Representatives, made on the Elkins bill—Senate bill 7053—a report made February 12, 1903. It is a report which embodies in part the testimony of both Mr. Knapp, Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and Mr. Fifer, who was at that time a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and who appeared in that capacity. I ask the Secretary to read first what is marked on page 3, an extract from the testimony of Mr. Knapp, and then to read from the following page the extract that is marked from the testimony of Mr. Fifer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested, if there is no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

Hon. Martin A. Knapp, Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, said:

* * * * * * *

"It is idle to suppose that you can apply criminal remedies in the state of the criminal law for the correction of such abuses. It does not happen; it will not happen. But I believe that if the corporation could be indicted, if the officials, the subordinate officials, the competitors, or their representatives, or anybody having knowledge of the transaction could be examined before the Commission and compelled to disclose the facts on which the corporation was liable, then the corporation could be indicted and mulcted with a fine. Until that can be done, and corporation carriers be subjected to large pecuniary losses as a result of these offenses, not much will happen to correct them in the way of criminal remedies.

"Mr. STEWART. Do you not think that imprisonment in addition to a fine would have a good effect?

Mr. KNAPP. No, Mr. Stewart, I do not. While I regard these offenses as involving, in many cases, a very high degree of moral turpitude, and I think there are more serious wrongs against order and the inalienable rights of the citizen than burglary or larceny, still we have to take the facts as they are and public sentiment as it exists, and in view of that it is my judgment that punishment by imprisonment instead of being an aid is a hindrance. It is a thing which operates against getting information necessary to convict.

Mr. STEWART. Do you think a fine, however large, would deter these large corporations?

Mr. KNAPP. Yes; and then there is another reason. You can not do anything to a corporation except fine it, and it does not quite satisfy the sense of justice to say that the real offender shall only be fined, while some paid subordinate in lesser degree may possibly go to jail. Now, I believe that if we could get this law in shape where it would be practically feasible, and in many cases comparatively easy to prove the offense against the corporation, and that corporation could be held to pay a large fine, it would not be simply the pecuniary loss, but the publicity—the fact that the railroad had been indicted and compelled to pay a large fine—would operate as a powerful deterrent, and I do not think we shall get along very far in preventing rate cutting by criminal methods until you gentlemen change the law in that regard.

* * * * * * *

Hon. Joseph W. Fifer, a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, said:

* * * * * * *

"Now, how are you going to prevent, how are you going to stop, these violations of the act which are made criminal? You have been told by my colleagues that there is no penalty denounced against the carrier by the law, and that is true. Gentlemen, these violations are what the law calls malum prohibita, and I care not what certain individuals may think of it, mankind generally hold that the same moral turpitude does not attach to an act of that kind as does to a crime, which is malum in se, such as burglary and larceny, crimes in the absence of all law.

"And you can see, bearing that in mind, what a great difficulty confronts the Commission when it undertakes to enforce the criminal features of the act. Many statutory prohibitions, acts that are made misdemeanors by a statute, a short time ago were no offenses at all. Yesterday the act violated no law; to-day it is made a penal offense, and the offender is subject to a heavy fine and a term in the penitentiary.

"These men have friends; they have standing in the community. The whole community may know that they have at different times violated the law, but they have just as many friends as they had before. They are not ostracised in society; and you undertake to convict one of them and you meet great difficulties. Now, what should be done? Judge Knapp has told you, and in that I agree with him, that the corporation itself should be made subject to indictment, and upon conviction it should be punished; of course, it can not be imprisoned; it loses no caste in society, and every person who is cognizant of the facts can be compelled to testify and there is no immunity; and you know, as practical men, under those circumstances you can get testimony and you can get conviction, and if the penalty is large enough, fixed by the law, it will be just as much of a deterrent as the other, and the testimony will be easily acquired."

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I put that in the RECORD, as I have already indicated, only for the purpose of showing authoritatively and conclusively how it came about that the Interstate Commerce Committee reported a bill favoring the abolition of imprisonment. It was not, as it has been stated in this Chamber during the progress of this debate, at the request of any railroad. I never heard of any request of that nature. But it was upon the recommendation made in their reports, as I understood those reports at the time and understand them now, and upon the recommendation orally and before the committee in the form in which it has just been read at the desk of different members of the Interstate Commerce Commission that that action was taken. It was taken not until after we were satisfied, by what those charged with the duty of enforcing the law told us, that it had become a practical impossibility to enforce the law. That action was not taken until they had satisfied us of that by the representations they made to us.

I stated some days ago, when this amendment was under discussion, that I was one of the last members of the committee to agree to the abolishment of imprisonment, not that I doubted what they said to us, but because I thought it was bad policy under all the circumstances. I did not doubt what they said, because they had knowledge and I did not have knowledge, and I thought I could understand how they might have had the experience and might have reached the conclusions and the opinions of which they were giving us the benefit. But, however, all that may be the sentiment abroad in the country, as it is here in this Chamber, is of such a character that I think we should restore that provision. Therefore I voted for it when the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] offered the amendment some days ago. But I have an idea that the result of practical experience under it will prove to be just what those Commissioners said it was when it was in force before. It will be, to employ the language of Chairman Knapp, a hindrance instead of a help.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, whatever controversy there was between the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and myself with respect to this matter relating to the position taken by the Commission in its reports made to Congress, I asserted that no recommendation could be found in the reports of the Commission for the abolition of the penalty of imprisonment for violations of the interstate-commerce law. I maintain that is so. The Senator from Ohio some days ago submitted to me the document, extracts from which he caused to be read. It has been found that two of the Commissioners, in the many times the Commissioners have been before the committees of Congress testifying with respect to these matters, under examination made the statements which have just been read.

It is a fact, however, that the reports of the Commission made to the Congress have emphasized their position, as a body, that the penalty of imprisonment should not be abolished. It is a further fact that in one of their reports they cite the persistency of railroad companies in urging before the committees of Congress the abolition of imprisonment as a penalty.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as I remember the matter, during the entire time that the imprisonment clause was in the law there was but one conviction, and that of a subordinate, who perhaps ought not to have been punished with any great severity. In view of that fact, and in view of the further fact that the Interstate Commerce Commissioners had testified before a committee of Congress, as I was aware, that in their judgment it was not desirable to retain that clause in the law, I voted against inserting it in the present bill. It is true the minority that voted against it was not very large, the distinguished Senator from Alabama and I constituting the minority.

I have not changed my mind about it. I believe it is, to use a somewhat common phrase, "a water haul" at best; that it will not result in the better enforcement of the law. But the Senate has decided otherwise, and of course the Senator from Alabama and I bow gracefully to the decision of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask that the amendment be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 11, after the word "shall," insert the words "knowingly and willfully," so that if amended it will read:

Every person or corporation who shall knowingly and willfully offer, grant, or give, or solicit, accept, or receive any such rebates, etc.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am afraid we are about to make a serious mistake when we make it a crime or a misdemeanor for a shipper to accept a rebate, because if the carrier which gives a rebate commits a crime and the shipper who receives a rebate commits a crime, the Government is left without a witness against either, except under the most extraordinary circumstances. The shipper can never receive a rebate until after the carrier has paid it; and if we exempt the shipper from criminal prosecution, then the Government can indict the carrier and summon every shipper to court to testify about the transaction. But when you summon a shipper and put him on the witness stand, if, in accepting the rebate he has committed a crime, he has a right to seal his lips; and I do not believe that the fine which this bill imposes upon him is a sufficient deterrent to compensate the Government for the loss of the shipper's testimony.

My own opinion is that it would be better to strike out that part of this law which penalizes the act of the shipper, so that the Government may have the right to summon him to the trial of an indicted carrier and compel him to bear witness to the transaction. We have agreed that a mere fine is not adequate to the correction of the evil, and we are restoring the penalty of imprisonment. Yet while we are strengthening again the law against the carrier we are defeating convictions under it by closing the mouth of the very men upon whose testimony the conviction could be secured.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. Under the law now, as I understand it, you can call the shipper. The fact that it is a misdemeanor and he participated in it is no reason why he can not be compelled to give his testimony. The only thing he does is to secure immunity.

Mr. BAILEY. The Supreme Court has said you can do that, but the Senator from Pennsylvania will agree with me that that is a very doubtful decision. Assume that the decision makes the law; I do not believe that it meets the purpose and intention of the constitutional protection. The Constitution does not say that a man shall not be compelled to bear witness against himself unless the Government grants him immunity. But the court, with the help of Congress, has added that qualification which our fathers did not make.

The Senator from Pennsylvania knows better than I do, because his experience in the courts was longer and more varied than mine, that it frequently happens that out of one transaction and the knowledge procured by the prosecuting officers upon that trial comes a knowledge upon which other prosecutions may be based, not a prosecution relating to the very transaction under judicial examination, but other transactions, and the immunity does not go as far as the Constitution intended the protection to reach.

The shipper owes the public really no obligation. The carrier's obligation is to transport every man and to transport every man's property for a fair compensation, and to transport every man and every man's property for the same compensation as he charges everybody else for a like service. But the shipper is under no such obligation to the public. I do not question the power of Congress to denounce as a crime the conduct of a shipper who accepts rebates, but I do believe that the penalty against the shipper will interfere with the Government's successful prosecution of the carriers——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Texas yield for a question?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Could not both purposes be accomplished by converting the proceeding against the shipper who wrongfully receives a rebate into a civil action?

Mr. BAILEY. That is true; and I should very well like to see that. I was going to suggest that we make it a crime to solicit a rebate from a railroad. Then when one of these overgrown combinations tells a railroad traffic manager that unless it is given a rebate it will give its shipments to some other railroad, the railroad manager would have some inducement to tell the district attorney that he was satisfied that this corporation is securing rebates. The district attorney will ask: "Why are you so satisfied?" and the answer will be: "Because they told me that if I did not give them rebates they would ship over the other line."

That is not conclusive, but it is sufficient to put the district attorney upon inquiry. I would like to follow the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas, which is, in some measure, covered by an amendment proposed the other afternoon by the Senator from North Dakota, and couple with that a provision making the solicitation of a rebate an offense. Then you can use the carrier's testimony against the soliciting shipper and you can use the shipper's testimony against the rebating carrier. You would, in my opinion, do more practical good in that way toward the accomplishment of the end which I assume we all desire than by this provision.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think the Senator is a little ahead of the time, possibly, in the argument upon this proposition, as we have not quite reached it, but inasmuch as he has raised the question, I wish to say to the Senator that I believe the object is not so much to punish some one as to secure a certain result, the absolute elimination of the rebate business or any other special discrimination.

I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that where one single dollar has been obtained in rebates by the solicitation of the railroad companies one thousand dollars have been extorted from the railway companies by the great corporations or trusts. They, therefore, are the principal criminals in this transaction.

I do not wholly agree with the Senator from Texas in the annunciation of the doctrine that the shipper owes no public duty whatever.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. A rebate could not be obtained without soliciting it, and therefore the mere solicitation of it would be as much a crime——

Mr. McCUMBER. But it might be offered without any solicitation.

Mr. BAILEY. I have never known anybody to hunt somebody else to give them something unless the other people were asking for it. There may be such philanthropists as that engaged in the railroad business, but I am not aware of it. I think they never part with any of their earnings except for the purpose of increasing the earning in time to come. So it seems to me that if you punish the solicitation rather than the acceptance you enable the Government to use both witnesses, whereas otherwise you can use neither of them without violating what, in my opinion, is a sound view of the Constitution.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator will agree with me in the statement that the usual method by which rebates are secured is that a great corporation, having an immense amount of shipments, goes to a railway and says to that railway, "We have a sufficient amount of business which, if taken away entirely from your company, would cripple you to a great extent. We wish to get some advantage over our adversaries, and unless you can give us a rebate sufficient to make it an object to us to ship over your lines we can immediately ship over any other line between the great fields of production and the fields of consumption." The railway company, through its agent, its traffic manager, desiring to protect the railway against the loss of this business, is practically compelled to accept the proposition or solicitation, or, in better words, the extortion, on the part of the great trust. I think I could name five of the great trusts in this country which to-day are receiving in rebates yearly more than two and a half million dollars.

Now, if we strike directly at the root of this evil, at the guilty party, by any process, we then will accomplish a great deal more than we will to strike at the party from whom the extortion is made. If we were to excuse either, I would far rather excuse the railway company and get after the great corporations that enforce the rebate; and I am certain that the result would be far better.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator has reached a point which I intended next to suggest. If we are going to punish them at all and thus deprive the Government of the benefit of their testimony, let us put them in the penitentiary, just like you do the railroad officers.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is very much easier, Mr. President, to collect a sum of money than it is to send a man to the penitentiary. Sometimes the collection of a large sum of money by a great corporation is more effective than the penitentiary sentence of some one who is simply the unimportant agent of that company. You are striking more directly at the heart of the company when you compel it to pay back thrice over the sum that it has received.

Mr. BAILEY. That is precisely the same argument which has been made against restoring the penalty of imprisonment against the carrier. If it is good as against the shipper it must be good as against the carrier.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is no doubt but that it has its good points.

Mr. BAILEY. My belief is that if these five great companies have been collecting two and a half million dollars in rebates, the fine of a few thousand dollars is a mere bagatelle to them.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Then put the officers who collect it in the penitentiary, and we will at least relieve the country of their depredations for a time.

Mr. McCUMBER. But if they have collected $3,000,000 and are compelled at the end of the year to pay back $9,000,000, that will be the last of rebates, so far as these corporations are concerned.

Mr. BAILEY. But if we are to judge by the size of the fines that have been heretofore imposed, the fines provided in this bill will, I hardly think, compel any five corporations or any 500 corporations to pay $9,000,000. If imprisonment is the sovereign remedy, let us apply it to both.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator directed his argument, as I understood it, to the proposition which was contained in the amendment I offered and was adopted.

I agree with the Senator. In my opinion it would be better to make a civil action out of it, and make it a forfeiture to the Government; and then in a civil action let the Government recover three times the amount and make the limitation fully six years.

I have drawn an amendment to that effect, and I will offer it when we reach that point. It differs from the other only to the extent of making it a civil action, making the forfeiture inure to the benefit of the Government, so as to make it the proper party to the action, and providing that whenever the Attorney-General has reason to believe that such rebates are being accepted he may bring the action in the proper court to recover three times the amount.

A similar bill has already passed the House. I do not think it is as good, because it divides and subdivides it into about four different characters of actions—one where it is knowingly done, one where it is done through inadvertence, and there is another division which I have not in mind at the present time. But I think the reports of the press of the conutry, which to some extent I believe represent the sentiment of the country, will justify me in the assertion that nothing will reach more directly toward this evil than an immense fine—not imprisonment, but an immense fine—by a civil or criminal action, and preferably a civil action against those great trusts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 11, after the word "shall," insert "knowingly and willfully."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, also insert, beginning with line 8——

Mr. GALLINGER. Throughout the bill the phraseology, where it says "An act to regulate commerce and acts amendatory thereof," is the usual phraseology, but on page 15, in two instances, line 5 and line 9, it says "the acts amendatory thereto." I move to insert the word "thereof" instead of the word "thereto" in those two cases. It is simply to preserve uniformity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 5, strike out "thereto" and insert "thereof," and in line 9 strike out "thereto" and insert "thereof."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment as amended.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I listened to the discussion just had between the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], which seems not to have resulted in any direct proposition as the amendment stands. It is clearly intended to reach shippers as well as carriers and I concur in the view that it ought to reach shippers as well as carriers. There has been some doubt expressed, however, both in and out of the Senate, as to whether the phraseology here does include the shipper. With a view of putting that beyond doubt, I offer an amendment. After the word "corporation" in line 11, page 15, I move to insert a comma and the words "whether carrier or shipper" and a comma.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 11, after the word "corporation," insert a comma and the words "whether carrier or shipper" and a comma.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. On line 17, page 16, let the word "thereto" be stricken out and the word "thereof" be inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, line 17, after the word "amendatory," strike out "thereto" and insert "thereof."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I desire to take advantage of the situation just for a moment to make a statement.

On the 21st of March I proposed, expecting to offer it later, an amendment to the pending bill in the shape of a separate section prohibiting corporations engaged in interstate commerce from contributing to campaign committees. Since that paper was prepared the Committee on Privileges and Elections, April 27, 1906, reported favorably a bill unanimously, which accomplishes, if it passes, what was designed by the amendment to which I have referred. I therefore desire to state at this time that I will not offer the amendment as I had otherwise intended to do, and will ask that the bill reported favorably from the Committee on Privileges and Elections may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

The bill referred to is as follows:

A bill (S. 4563) to prohibit corporations from making money contributions in connection with political elections.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any laws of Congress, to make a money contribution in connection with any election to any political office. It shall also be unlawful for any corporation whatever to make a money contribution in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice-Presidential electors or a Representative in Congress is to be voted for or any election by any State legislature of a United States Senator. Every corporation which shall make any contribution in violation of the foregoing provisions shall be subject to a fine not exceeding $5,000, and every officer or director of any corporation who shall consent to any contribution by the corporation in violation of the foregoing provisions shall be subject to a fine of not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I move to amend the pending amendment made as in Committee of the Whole by inserting, after the word "the," in line 9, on page 16, the words "willful and intentional;" so as to read:

In construing and enforcing the provisions of this section, the willful and intentional act, omission, or failure, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, line 9, before the word "act," insert "willful and intentional."

Mr. MCCUMBER. This is simply in conformity with the other amendment that was accepted of like words on the previous page. I simply call the Senate's attention to the fact that in this section the act or omission of an officer or agent who is the mere employee of the company to do any certain act makes the company itself absolutely liable. In other words, not even a willful act, not even an intentional omission, but the slightest omission, on the part of one of the officers would hold the balance of the officers liable, because all officers having knowledge afterwards are made a party to any of these offenses. It seems to me that in constructing a criminal statute we ought not to convict one person upon the unintentional omission at least of another person.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, that is a most dangerous amendment. Under it it will be almost impossible to convict any corporation. Unless you can show that an employee of a corporation has done any of these acts willfully and intentionally you can not make the corporation guilty. It is entirely different from the other case, where the question was as to convicting an employee of the corporation. In that case it was proper enough to require that the act should be willful and intentional, but to inject this qualification here practically renders it impossible to convict any corporation, because it will always have the excuse that the employee did it unintentionally and not knowingly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota to line 11, on page 16, the clause "acting within the scope of his employment." This shows that in this case an employee would necessarily be acting willfully and maliciously and knowingly, and, therefore, I hope the amendment to the amendment will not be adopted.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, after line 23, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted the following:

That section 10 of said act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, be amended by adding thereto the following:

"Any person, corporation, or company who shall deliver property for interstate transportation to any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this act, or for whom, as consignor or consignee, any such carrier shall transport property from one State, Territory, or District of the United States to any other State, Territory, or District of the United States or foreign country, who shall knowingly and willfully, by employee, agent, officer, or otherwise, directly or indirectly, by or through any means or device whatsoever, receive or accept from such common carrier any sum of money, or any other valuable consideration, as a rebate or offset against the regular charges for transportation of such property, as fixed by the schedules of rates provided for in this act, shall be deemed guilty of a fraud, which is hereby declared to be a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction within the district where such offense was committed, in addition to any other penalties provided by this act, be subjected to a fine equal to three times the sum of money so received or accepted, and three times the value of any other consideration so received or accepted, to be ascertained by the trial court; and in the trial for such offense, all such rebates or other considerations so received or accepted for a period of six years prior to the commencement of the action may be considered, and the said fine shall be three times the total amount of money or three times the total value of such considerations so received or accepted, as the case may be: Provided, That the foregoing penalties shall not apply to rebates or considerations received prior to the passage and approval of this act."

Mr. MCCUMBER. I offer what I send to the desk as a substitute for that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

Mr. MCCUMBER. It is from line 24, on page 16, to line 6, on page 18.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to substitute for the remainder of section 2, beginning in line 24, on page 16, and ending in line 6, on page 18, the following:

Any person, corporation, or company who shall deliver property for interstate transportation to any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this act, or for whom, as consignor or consignee, any such carrier shall transport property from one State, Territory, or district of the United States to any other State, Territory, or district of the United States, or foreign country, who shall knowingly and willfully, by employee, agent, officer, or otherwise, directly or indirectly, by or through any means or device whatsoever, receive or accept from such common carrier any sum of money or any other valuable consideration as a rebate or offset against the regular charges for transportation of such property, as fixed by the schedules of rates provided for in this act, shall, in addition to any penalty provided by this act, forfeit to the United States a sum of money three times the amount of money so received or accepted and three times the value of any other consideration so received or accepted, to be ascertained by the trial court; and the Attorney-General of the United States is authorized and directed, whenever he has reasonable grounds to believe that any such person, corporation, or company has knowingly or willfully received or accepted from any such common carrier any sum of money or other valuable consideration as a rebate or offset as aforesaid, to institute in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction a civil action to collect the said sum or sums so forfeited as aforesaid; and in the trial of said action all such rebates or other considerations so received or accepted for a period of six years prior to the commencement of the action may be included therein, and the amount recovered shall be three times the total amount of money or three times the total value of such consideration so received or accepted or both, as the case may be: Provided, That the foregoing penalties shall not apply to rebates or considerations received prior to the passage and approval of this act.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think this bill would be very materially improved if that amendment should be adopted. It goes about the business of punishing the shipper who solicits and accepts rebates in the same businesslike way that he goes about the matter of getting the rebate. It is by making civil action the remedy by which the penalty is to be recovered, instead of a criminal prosecution. We thus get rid of the troublesome question of venue. In criminal prosecutions it is necessary to establish the fact that the rebate was received within a limited territorial jurisdiction.

Then, again, we escape a rule of law that is frequently resorted to for the purpose of defeating justice, and that is that in the prosecution of a criminal action the guilt of the defendant must be established by proof that shows this to the jury beyond a reasonable doubt, while in a civil action, such as is provided for in the pending amendment, the case of the United States can be made out by a preponderance of the testimony offered.

We also escape another rule of law; and that is that persons who are indicted for an offense can not be compelled to testify against themselves, whereas in a civil action either the plaintiff or the defendant may be called as a witness at the option of the other.

It presents a remedy more effective, and therefore a more desirable way of doing what we are seeking to do. I express the hope that there will be no opposition to the amendment on the part of those who believe that the shipper who solicits and receives a rebate should himself be punished. It is only a matter of method, and I think it so far preferable to a criminal prosecution that the mere statement of the difference between the two is all that it is necessary to say about it.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, this proposed substitute introduced by the Senator from North Dakota, as well as the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole, ought not to be in the bill. If Senators will examine the bill, commencing on line 2, page 17, and extending down to the end of line 6, on page 18, they will find that it is substantially covered by the reenactment of the so-called "Elkins law," so far as the penalty is concerned. I call the attention of Senators to the fact that the penalty provided is much stronger and greater. On page 15 you will find this provision:

> Every person or corporation who shall offer, grant, or give, or solicit, accept, or receive any such rebates, concession, or discrimination shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $20,000.

What is the penalty provided in the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], and also in the substitute offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]? It is just three times the amount of the rebate given in a single case. That rebate may be only fifty or sixty dollars in a single case and you fine the man three times that amount; whereas in the preceding paragraph the fine is from $1,000 to $20,000. The preceding paragraph covers the whole case, and the penal provisions are much stronger and better. Therefore, Mr. President, that entire amendment should be rejected.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. May I ask the Senator from Minnesota a question?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The substitute offered by the Senator from North Dakota, and not by myself, provides that all rebates received within six years may be included in a single civil action.

Mr. NELSON. You can not include them all in one indictment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. We are not going to do so. It is not proposed to indict anybody. The remedy prescribed is by means of a civil action.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is evident that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] was not in the Chamber or that he did not hear the reading of the substitute. The substitute provides for a civil action instead of a criminal action, and fixes the statute of limitations at six years. It provides for three times the amount of any money received and three times the value of any discrimination in favor of the shipper for a period of that many years. It is not at all inconsistent with any other provision in the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Then it is an entire substitute for the amendment beginning on page 17, commencing with line 2?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is.

Mr. NELSON. Does it only relate to civil actions?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is all.

Mr. NELSON. Then I have no objection to it.

Mr. KEAN. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that it follows very much the line of a bill already passed by the House of Representatives and now before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 19, line 20, after the yord "reasonable," to strike out the words "and fairly remunerative."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am glad the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is in his seat, because he can possibly give me some light on a question that is causing me a good deal of uneasiness. It has been suggested to me that the words "in its judgment," in lines 19 and 20, on page 19, might possibly render this bill unconstitutional, as involving the delegation of legislative power to the Commission. I should like to have the Senator tell us what his opinion is about those words, and whether or not, in his judgment, they ought to stay in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I do not feel that I am sufficiently familiar with the law upon this subject to give the Senator a complete answer; but I will say that, in my judgment, those are essential words to be retained in the bill. They constitute a part of the judicial-review provision which is found in the next section, and it is the opinion of many of the best lawyers with whom I have come in contact that those words ought to be retained. I think it would be very harmful to strike them out, and I hope the Senator from South Carolina will not insist upon doing so.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I am not insisting on striking them out; I have not even moved that they go out; but I want to get some good advice from some source, because if this bill shall fail and the Supreme Court shall declare that those words destroy its constitutionality, I want the responsibility to rest on those who put them in the bill and who wish to keep them in it. The bill had those words in it when it came from the other House, and I understand there is a very strong and urgent desire on the part of those who have agreed to the recent compromise arrangement that has obtained on the other side of the Chamber, that they shall stay in. But there must be some good reason for their staying in; and if the constitutionality of the bill shall be destroyed by their remaining in, I want the responsibility to rest where it will belong. I want to move to strike them out simply on the ground of lack of constitutionality.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I am quite sure that those words are of value in this bill. If we are to have the Commission do what we intend by this bill it shall do, namely, to fix a maximum rate which shall have the force and power of a statute, I think those words are essential; and I fear very much that to strike them out would simply put the Commission in a position where it could only establish or recommend a rate which would be reviewed in all its details by the court. Therefore I hope that the words will not be stricken out, and that the Senator will not move to strike them out.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, those words were in the bill when it came from the other House about three months ago.

Mr. ALLISON. They were.

Mr. TELLER. I have interviewed a large number of Senators who are friends of this bill, and I have never succeeded in getting anybody to tell me in what respect the words to which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] refers were desirable. They have all given me the same statement the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] now makes, that in their judgment those words are desirable, but they fail to say why. Will the Senator from Iowa now tell us why he thinks they ought to be there, and what their office is?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I believe their office is to give the Commission the power to establish just and reasonable rates—the power to say what a just and reasonable rate is.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I merely want to ask the Senator a question. I raised the point the other day when I stated that I considered we were very close to the danger line on that proposition. I wish to say to the Senator that it seems to me that we have fixed a standard. That standard which Congress has fixed, and up to which the Commission must measure all its ideas, is the requirement that the rate fixed must be just and reasonable. That is our standard. It is the Congressional standard, if I may use those words.

Mr. ALLISON. It is our standard.

Mr. McCUMBER. All the Commission can do is to exercise its judgment in accordance with this standard. Is there not danger, if, in another section fixing the order, you say that the Commission shall exercise its judgment, instead of the judgment of Congress, that you have conferred the rate-making power upon the Commission instead of that power being exercised by Congress itself?

I do not believe, if I may interrupt the Senator, that the courts will give any meaning to the words "in its judgment;" but if they do give any meaning to them at all, if they say they mean what they say, then, according to my judgment, this bill would be absolutely unconstitutional because it would transfer the rate-making power from Congress to the Commission; and if they do not give it any meaning whatever, then what is the use of those words being there?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Commission must exerices its judgment whether those words are in or out of the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. But must it not exercise the judgment of Congress, and not its judgment?

Mr. ALLISON. When the Commission has exercised its judgment, or its will, or its opinion, or whatever you may please to call it, as respects the particular case before it, it becomes then the judgment of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment adopted as in Committee of the Whole will be stated.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, before we pass from section 3, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I will not undertake to debate it, but I will call the Senate's attention to its character and the purpose I have in presenting it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, after line 4, it is proposed to insert as an independent paragraph the following:

The Commission shall determine, from investigation and hearing appropriate to the inquiry, the proportions of the entire traffic of any carrier whose rate or rates has been challenged in the manner provided in this act which pertain to interstate and intrastate traffic, respectively, and when said relative proportions of said traffic are so ascertained the Commission shall consider, in fixing a just and reasonable rate under the provisions of this act, the revenue derived from intrastate traffic as part of the gross income of said carrier and make due allowance therefor in establishing the basis for prescribing said just and reasonable rate.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, this amendment is intended to give to the Commission the power to correct a defect that has been disclosed by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. In the case of Smythe v. Ames, a case that involved the validity of the action of the railway commission of the State of Nebraska, the court said that, in fixing a State rate, it was not competent for the commission to take any notice of the fact that the carrier was also engaged in interstate business, and that the State rate must be fixed with reference to State business. I take it for granted the same rule will apply when the Interstate Commerce Commission proceeds to fix a rate on interstate business. It is obviously unjust to leave out of view the fact that carriers are engaged in carrying both kinds of commerce. There is no reason why there should not be an ascertainment of the relative proportions in volume of the traffic carried by a carrier, so that when the Interstate Commerce Commission proceeds to fix a fair rate for that part carried as interstate commerce it shall know the entire income and the entire business done by the carrier. The valuation and the volume of business are the two principal factors in the problem of fixing rates, and there is no reason why there should exist any doubt on that subject. I believe the Commission ought to be authorized to determine, as one of the preliminary subjects of the investigation, the amount of interstate business done by the road and the amount of State business done by it, so that in fixing its rate notice may be taken of that circumstance and that it may be given such weight as it is legally entitled to have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. On page 19, lines 19 and 20, I move to strike out the words "in its judgment."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, in lines 19 and 20, it is proposed to strike out the words "in its judgment."

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, a few moments ago I asked the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] a question in regard to these words in order that I might get some light on the subject, which, as I have said, I have been for some time trying to get. It is not to be presumed that these words are in the bill for nothing; and we ought to have somebody tell us what they are in for. It is not enough for the Senator from Iowa or some other Senator to tell us that he thinks the words are important. Why are they important? What influence are they to have? In the common language of the country, "What figure do they cut?" Do they mean anything? If they do not mean anything, good legislation requires us to strike them out. I think I know what some Senators on the other side think these words mean. Some of them contend that they will take the question whether or not the rate is a proper rate out of the hands of the courts.

Now, I do not know whether that is what they mean, but if it is, then it is equivalent to saying that the rate shall be final and complete and that the court shall not interfere with it. Do the Senate of the United States want to say that? If they do, let us say it affirmatively. It will be just as safe to say that the court shall not interfere with the rate as to put in something that may be construed by the court into saying that. If the court should believe that that is a declaration that the court can not consider the question, I have not much doubt what will become of the rate bill. I know we hear it stated—it is in the air—that in the great compromise which took place the other day the words "and fairly remunerative" should go out and the words "in its judgment" should not go out. I think I heard something stated on the other side equivalent to that the other day, that that was a thing to be left in. I am willing to leave it in if anybody can show that it will be beneficial to this bill. I am willing to leave it in if anybody can show me that it is not dangerous to leave it in the bill. I believe it to be dangerous, and until I can hear from somebody—with all these constitutional lawyers we have here, cornfield lawyers and all kinds of lawyers—until somebody can suggest some reason why it is there, it seems to me we ought to strike it out. I will wait.

Mr. DOLLIVER rose.

Mr. TELLER. The junior Senator from Iowa is on his feet. Perhaps he can tell me what it means. If he will not take too much time, I will be glad to have him do so.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I will not undertake to do it on terms of that sort.

Mr. TELLER. I will give him all the time I have if he will just tell us what the purpose of it is.

I do not want him to say "I think it is important." I want to know why it is important. I want to know what is the object. I want to know its office—what its effect is, or what the Senator thinks it will be.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, taking the floor, then, in my own right, I will state, in a brief way, what are the import and significance of these words. I feel a little delicacy, after all that has happened, to intrude into the domain of constitutional law. At the same time I think I will be pardoned if I point out briefly the line that separates two schools of constitutional thought in respect to this matter. One is represented in a bill introduced in the Senate some time ago by the honorable Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. It will be perceived that this question arises twice in section 4 of the House bill—first, in connection with the condemnation of the rate complained of and, second, in connection with the fixing of the rate that is to be observed in the future. In both these cases the House bill confides a discretion to the Commission. As to the rate complained of, it says if it shall be the opinion of the Commissioners that the rate is unreasonable, they shall condemn it; and as to the rate fixed by the Commission, it says they shall determine and prescribe what will be, in their judgment, a reasonable rate.

Now, the opposite school of opinion is illustrated in the bill introduced by the Senator from West Virginia. It says:

That whenever any rate, fare, charge, or regulation established by any common carrier or carriers for any transportation or other service subject to the act approved February 4, 1887, entitled "An act to regulate commerce," or any act amendatory thereof, shall be unjust and unreasonable or otherwise contrary to law, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have power, after granting a full hearing to the carrier or carriers affected, to make an order directing the carrier or carriers to modify such rate, fare, charge, or regulation, etc.

And as to fixing the rate the bill says:

But the Commission shall not have power to modify any rate, fare, charge, or regulation established by the carrier or carriers to a greater extent than shall be necessary in order to remove the injustice and unreasonableness or unlawfulness thereof.

It will be perceived, therefore, that if the court hold that the Commission made an error in fixing the rate or in condemning the existing rate, the power of review carries with it full control of the very questions that the Commission has examined into.

The opposite notion is embodied in this bill; that the condemnation of the existing rate shall be in the discretion of the Commission, the words "in their opinion" carrying that idea; and in the fixing of the new rate, the theory of the House bill is that the Commission shall determine as well as prescribe, and the words "in its judgment" carry out that idea. An idea similar to that——

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Is there not a distinction between "in their opinion" and "in its judgment?"

Mr. DOLLIVER. I think there is no difference. The honorable Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], introducting an amendment to this bill, evidently was of opinion that the power of Congress over the rate only authorizes the Commission to fix a rate just and reasonable in fact, for on March 21 he introduced this amendment, beginning after the word "what," in line 19, on page 10, to strike out all down to and including the word "prescribed," in line 5, on page 11, and insert the following:

A rate or charge which shall afford a just compensation to the carrier or carriers for the service or services to be performed and a regulation or practice which shall be just and reasonable. The rate or charge, regulation or practice so determined and prescribed shall be the only lawful rate or charge, regulation or practice, and the carrier or carriers shall not thereafter demand or collect any other rate or charge or follow any other regulation or practice.

On the same day the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] submitted the following amendment:

Insert the following:

"Any carrier or person, or corporation, party to such complaint, and dissatisfied with the rate or charge, regulation or practice so established and prescribed, may file a bill against the Commission in any circuit court of the United States for the district in which any portion of the line of the carrier or carriers may be located, alleging that such rate or charge will not afford a just compensation for the service or services to be performed, or that the regulation or practice is unjust and unreasonable; and if upon the hearing the court shall find that such rate or charge will not afford a just compensation for the service or services to be performed, or that the regulation or practice is unjust and unreasonable, it shall enjoin the enforcement of the same: Provided, however, That no rate or charge, regulation or practice prescribed by the Commission shall be set aside or suspended by any preliminary or interlocutory decree or order of the court. Said proceedings shall have precedence over all other cases on the docket of a different character, and the court shall have power to make orders to secure the attendance of persons from any part of the United States, and the existing laws relative to evidence and proceedings under the acts to regulate commerce shall be applicable. Either party to said proceeding shall have the right to appeal directly to the Supreme Court of the United States, and such appeal shall have precedence in said Supreme Court over all other cases of a different character pending therein."

Now, therefore, it will be perceived that the authority of the Commission granted in these amendments is to fix a rate which shall be a just compensation to the carrier for the service performed and reasonable, and whether they have done it or not is made a question for the courts.

Following that idea, the amendment of the honorable Senator from Texas as to review confides in the court the exact jurisdiction that his amendment had already confided to the Commission. I will not discuss the question whether the review that is provided for in his amendment is broad or narrow, but I will say that it does not take a very great lawyer to perceive that the jurisdiction which his amendment gives to the court is exactly the same jurisdiction that he gives to the Commission and is conveyed in exactly the same language.

Now, in drafting this bill the framers of it, I will say, were guided very largely by the speech delivered at Pittsburg by the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] on the 3d of November, a speech which reads almost like a judgment from the Supreme Bench. His notion evidently was that the Commission ought to have the discretion to prescribe the rate, for he says:

The Commission should have the power, if it finds the complaint well founded, to declare what shall be a just, fairly remunerative, and reasonable rate or practice to be charged or followed in place of the one declared to be unreasonable.

He does not say the Commission shall have authority to fix a just and reasonable rate, but to declare what shall be a just and reasonable rate to be followed in the future; and adopting the principle laid down in that speech, the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, who, without disparagement to anybody else in this Chamber, is looked upon as one of the most careful and learned of our lawyers, introduced a bill, section 4 of which is as follows:

SEC. 4. That whenever, after full hearing upon such complaint, the said Commission shall determine that any existing rate or rates or practice whatsoever affecting the same, or any regulation or practice whatsoever as aforesaid, relating to any of the aforesaid services or transportation or incidents thereto, to be unjust, unreasonable, or unjustly discriminatory, or unduly preferential or prejudicial, or otherwise in violation of any of the provisions of this act or the acts named in section 1 of this act, it shall be the duty of the Commission to declare and order what, in its judgment, will be a just, reasonable, and fairly remunerative rate or rates, charge or charges, practice or regulation to be charged, imposed, or followed in place of the rate or rates, charge or charges, regulation or practice declared by it to be unjust, unreasonable, unjustly discriminatory, or unduly preferential, under the provisions of any act referred to in section 1 hereof: Provided, That when the Commission shall order a rate reduced such reduced rate shall be the maximum to be observed by the carrier, and when the Commission shall order a practice to be changed its order shall be observed by the carrier.

The House bill was not probably drawn after the language of the Senator from Pennsylvania, but it was drawn after a statute of the State of Massachusetts, and I refer to the statute, which is contained in the second volume of the revised laws of that State, page 1034, giving to the commission of that State power to fix the milk rate. I read only that part of it which involves this idea:

SEC. 247. Upon the petition of one or more persons who desire to forward milk by the can over any railroad or any portion or portions thereof, the board of railroad commissioners, after notice to the railroad corporation and a hearing, shall ascertain and compare the tariff established as aforesaid for milk by the can with the rate or price charged or received as aforesaid for milk in large quantities over such railroad or such portion or portions thereof; and if the former is, in the judgment of the board, unreasonably high, as compared with the latter, the board shall revise said tariff and shall fix such rates for milk by the can as in its judgment are fairly proportionate to the rate or price for milk in large quantities, including in both cases the same care and preservation of the milk and the return of the empty cans, as aforesaid; and shall notify the corporation in writing of the rates by the can so fixed over such railroad or such portion or portions thereof; but milk received by one railroad corporation from another shall not be considered as received at the point of junction of the two roads in comparing and fixing as aforesaid rates for milk by the can tendered at such point of junction.

Mr. FORAKER. Let me ask the Senator, if I do not interrupt him, what is the effect of their doing that? Does that rate go into operation without——

Mr. DOLLIVER. Yes, without any appeal; and the penalty for its violation is $5 per can.

Mr. FORAKER. Does the railroad commission of Massachusetts make rates in the way indicated?

Mr. DOLLIVER. They make the milk rate only. I have no doubt that that statute was carefully drawn. If we desire to say that the Commission shall not deal with a rate at all unless it is in fact unreasonable and unjust, that leaves the question open to the courts to say whether the Commission ought to have acted at all or not. That is avoided in this bill by giving discretion to the Commission to find whether the rate is unreasonable.

If we desire that the Commission shall simply be clothed with the power to fix a just and reasonable rate, and we put it in that language, it may be contended that we pass directly to the courts the whole question whether they have complied with the statute. The object of this bill is to confide in the Commission a discretion, first, as to the condemnation of the existing rate, and, second, as to the rate which shall take its place; and we fail in that purpose by merely striking out the words "in its judgment," because the whole sentence would be left there, which obviously confides a jurisdiction and discretion to the Commission. It says they shall determine and prescribe. By striking out the words "in its judgment," in my opinion you do not reach the seat of the constitutional difficulty at all, because you have still left there the power in the Commission to pass upon that question, to determine it and to prescribe the rate.

I do not want the words "in its judgment" stricken out, because the country has come to believe that it is a part of the backbone of the new section 15. With that discretion vested in the Commission, it makes very little difference what jurisdiction you give the court, because the opinions of the court are almost uniform that they will not review a discretion confided to an administrative board, except where there has been abuse or the finding is in conflict with constitutional rights.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is the Senator prepared to declare, as a constitutional lawyer, that those three words will not vitiate the constitutionality of this bill?

Mr. DOLLIVER. As I said in opening, I have never posed as a constitutional lawyer, but I have sought counsel of great constitutional lawyers upon that question, including the Attorney-General, and I rest with confidence in his opinion in respect to that. His notion is that these words are perfectly consonant with sound constitutional principles, and I will add that the experienced lawyers on the Commission, for there are very excellent lawyers on the Interstate Commerce Commission, are unanimously of the opinion that those words ought not only to be preserved in the bill, but that they are entirely consistent with the constitutional limitations which we are bound to observe.

Mr. TILLMAN. All I want to be sure of is that there shall be no danger of this provision being destroyed by the Supreme Court as being unconstitutional. If the Senator and his friends are content to take the responsibility of letting them stay in, on the plea that they narrow the court review, and then the Supreme Court declares them unconstitutional, all right; I am satisfied.

Mr. DOLLIVER. If the Supreme Court decides that Congress can not confide that discretion to the Commission, but that its power is limited to requiring the Commission to fix a just and reasonable rate, passing over to the courts the question whether they have done so or not—if this bill is found unconstitutional upon that ground, it will simply indicate that the whole scheme of undertaking to manage this business by a commission is impracticable, and will drive every one of us to the position which has been so ably defended by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], that we ought to go directly to the courts without the intervention of the Commission at all.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, it has not been my intention to make any observation upon this proposed amendment to strike out of the bill the words "in its judgment," but it seems to me that I am constrained by the references that have been made by the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] to some of my public utterances upon the subject, to at least explain that they have no relation whatever and were not intended to have any relation to the proposition whether these words should remain in the bill. It was perfectly obvious, from the reading of an extract from the short remarks I made in Pittsburg—which, by the way, were confined to fifteen minutes, and were at the tail end of a Pittsburg banquet, and, of course, are not to be regarded as a man's most solemn utterances—that they indicate no predilection for the use of those words.

However, it gets pretty close home when the Senator reads from a bill which I prepared and submitted to the Senate in which those words are found, and which, without explanation, would indicate that in my judgment they should remain in the bill. But I think I have a sufficiently adequate explanation for their appearance in the bill which I proposed.

The Senate will remember that when that bill was presented on the 22d day of February, I stated to the Senate the purposes which I entertained, and as it is all contained within a few lines I will read:

> Mr. President, it has been very generally reported, and it is the fact, that I have recently, upon request of different persons interested in the rate-regulation measures now pending before the Senate, submitted my views as to a provision which I deem essential to the certain constitutionality of the bill passed by the House of Representatives. I presented my views by taking out of the bill which I now offer section 5, and that section can not be thoroughly understood independent of its context. It is not my expectation that the bill which I now introduce will receive any further consideration from the committee than they may choose to give it as throwing light upon a provision for review in the courts of the action of the Commission, and if it is of any assistance in that direction I shall be more than satisfied.

The sole purpose that I entertained and expressed at that time in submitting the bill at all was to throw some light upon the proposition of a court review and not with any idea of indicating my views as to the power of the Commission.

The circumstances under which that bill was put together the night before its presentation were these: I had been invited to express my notions of a court review, and I had done so by taking out of the loose leaves of some notes I had made in the nature of a bill this fifth section and had submitted them to the gentleman who had made the inquiry of me. It was not twenty-four hours until I read in various newspapers that I entertained certain views in relation to court review which were not the ones I really entertained, and not the ones which were indicated upon the paper I had submitted.

I therefore felt that it was just to myself that I should let the public know, through the presentation of a bill, exactly what my views were upon that subject; and having been gratuitously arraigned as a railroad Senator I thought it was also just to myself that I should submit my entire work in connection with this bill, so that it might be obvious that I had been laboring upon the side of the public as well as laboring upon the side of the great carriers that are to be affected by this measure, in respect to providing what I regarded as an essential provision—the insertion of a court review.

I instructed one of my clerks to put the manuscript together. He had a short time before been in consultation with the secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission upon some little details of this bill, and from the secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission he had received the suggestion that the words "in its judgment" ought to go into the section of the bill which I was preparing. That never came under my eye until this bill was printed and read in the Senate, and I would have corrected it then, except that I had limited the purpose for which I had presented the bill, as I have already explained to the Senate, to throwing light solely upon the question of court review. So, without saying whether I believe they should or should not be inserted in the bill, I want it emphatically understood that if any harm comes to this bill by reason of their presence I must not be held accountable because of anything I have said heretofore.

Mr. President, that seems to make it essential for me to say what I think about the insertion of those words in the bill. I could not stop at this point and be entirely frank with the Senate nor fair to myself. I do not see that they perform any useful function at all. If they mean anything at all, they endanger and jeopardize the bill. If this legislation is going to be sustained in the Supreme Court, in my opinion it is going to be sustained upon the proposition that this is not a delegation of legislative power to the Commission, but that it is the enactment of a rule, with power conferred upon the Commission to apply it to particular cases as they arise.

The Supreme Court has stated time and time again, and has stated very recently, that when you undertake to delegate legislative power to an administrative body you undertake to do that which you have no power under the Constitution to do; and it seems to me it would be flying in the face of that decision and inviting disaster to write into this bill the very thing the Supreme Court has indicated we can not lawfully insert in it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Before the Senator from Pennsylvania resumes his seat, I will ask him whether he does not recognize the fact that such a criticism as he has just made is not removed by the elimination of the words "in its judgment," but that it inheres in the whole sentence, "shall determine and prescribe what will be a just rate."

Mr. KNOX. In reply I will state that I do not think the broad question of power is free from doubt. I have indicated to the Senate that, in my judgment, Congress possesses the power to enact a rule and delegate the application of that rule to an administrative body. But it is a close question, and you are treading too close to the other side when you weigh this bill down with words which would seem to me to indicate that legislative discretion is intended to go with the conference of this power.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania answer me a question before he sits down? Does the Senator consider that if these words are left in, the breadth of the court review is at all narrowed? Has not the court the same power, and will it not exercise the same power without them as it would with them?

Mr. KNOX. I do not see how it affects the court review provision at all.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], referring to an amendment which I offered to the bill, tells the Senate, I understand, that the amendment which I offered was as broad as it could be made. Did I understand the Senator correctly?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I said that the jurisdiction conferred upon the court was conferred in exactly the same language as the jurisdiction conferred upon the Commission, and without saying whether it was broad or narrow I said that the court could exercise over the order of the Commission exactly the same jurisdiction that the Commission exercised over the railroad rate.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa loses sight of the fact that under no form of language which can be devised will it ever be possible to prevent the courts from determining whether a given rate affords the carrier a just compensation for its service.

The Senator from Iowa also overlooks the fact that my amendment imposed upon the carrier the necessity of proving a negative in the court—a negative, it is true, which was susceptible of proof; and yet a negative is always difficult to prove. Under the amendment which I offered no order of the Commission establishing a rate could ever be set aside until the carrier had established to the satisfaction of the court that the rate afforded less than a just compensation for the service.

I would like for the Senator from Iowa to tell the Senate if he thinks that under the language of this bill the court can be prevented from condemning a rate which affords the carrier less than a just compensation for its service.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I think that under this bill the court will deal only with the order of the Commission. I believe that to be the intention.

Mr. BAILEY. But what is the order? The order establishes a rate. Does the Senator mean that the court can not inquire into the justice and reasonableness of the rate?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I think that the court will inquire into the whole question, but will not disturb the order of the Commission unless it finds that the rate fixed is so unjust and so unreasonable as to be a violation of property rights in a constitutional sense.

Mr. BAILEY. That is very general, and everybody will agree to it. Certainly I would not disagree with it. But what are the property rights guaranteed by the Constitution? Let us be a little more definite. The one property right guaranteed by the Constitution which relates to this question is that the carrier shall not be compelled to render a service without the shipper pays a just compensation. I provided that the carrier might go into the court, might allege that the rate was not a just compensation, and when the carrier had demonstrated to the satisfaction of the court that the rate was not a just compensation for the service, then the court could enjoin it. Neither the Senator from Iowa nor any Senator in this body will contend that under such a state of facts it is within the power of Congress to prevent the court from condemning such a rate.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Does the honorable Senator from Texas contend that he gave any other jurisdiction than that to the Commission?

Mr. BAILEY. Absolutely none as to the rate. The only other jurisdiction which I gave to the court was over practices and regulations—and, mark you, that in a large degree was copied word for word from this bill itself—the only difference between the regulations and practices for which I provided was that they should be "just and reasonable," whereas the Hepburn bill provided that they should be "just, fair, and reasonable."

Mr. DOLLIVER. But, Mr. President, the honorable Senator omitted from the word "what," in line 19, on page 10, everything down to and including the word "prescribed."

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. DOLLIVER. So that the authority which he gave the Commission was to prescribe a rate or charge which shall afford a just compensation to the carrier. Then in his next amendment, as I understand it, he provided that the carrier complaining of the order could go into the court alleging that such a rate or charge will not afford just compensation for the service or services to be performed, and that the court should hear that question; and my notion was that he passed over to the court the exact question which had been within the jurisdiction of the Commission. I got at that solely because it seemed to be in the same language.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senator forgets that the Commission establishes the rates with the best lights before it. When those rates are once established by the Commission, under my amendment the carrier had to affirmatively show to the court that they denied to it a just compensation for the service. Not only so, but while the Commission was not limited by the ordinary rules of evidence, when you reached the court it was limited; and therefore it required an incomparably stronger case in the court to condemn an order of the Commission than it could ever have required in the Commission to establish the order. Now, what the Senator has in his mind is that I omitted the words "in its judgment."

Mr. DOLLIVER. And the words "shall determine and prescribe."

Mr. BAILEY. I think I used the words "shall determine and prescribe," but whether I did or not, the Senator forgets that in addition to the authority to the Commission I sought to avoid the very doubtful question which the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] says exists—the question as to the power of Congress to delegate to the Commission the right to fix the rate; and I went further, after charging the Commission, an administrative body, with the power to establish and prescribe the rate, I provided that the rate when so established and prescribed should thereafter be the only lawful rate. So that the carrier, coming into the court to attack the rate which they were required to charge, attacked not the Commission's rate, but the rate established by Congress upon the ascertainment of the Commission. I am by no means sure that I escape the difficulty, if difficulty there be, even in that way, but it is certain if that difficulty can be escaped I thus escaped it.

My own opinion is that the words "in its judgment" either mean nothing or they are fatal to this bill. It is my opinion that the very purpose for which they are inserted here, if considered by the court to be their object, will invalidate this section of the act. The purpose for which they were inserted was to prevent the court from saying whether this was a just and reasonable rate. If the Supreme Court of the United States shall determine that these words were inserted in the bill for the purpose of denying to the judiciary the right and power to examine into the justice of the rate, they will hold this section unconstitutional, precisely as they held the Minnesota law unconstitutional.

In that case the supreme court of Minnesota declared that the purpose of the legislature, plainly manifested in the act itself, was to make the rates established by the commission conclusive and final and to prevent a judicial inquiry into their justice or reasonableness. The Supreme Court of the United States, accepting the construction placed upon the Minnesota act by the supreme court of that State, said that a law which denied the carrier the right to inquire into the justice and the reasonableness of the rate deprived it of its property without the due process of law, and therefore was null and void; and they will hold this law to be null and void if they are compelled to hold that it was the purpose of Congress to place the order of the Commission beyond judicial investigation.

I omitted those words for the additional reason that they seemed to me plainly and expressly to import a delegation of legislative power. The Senator from Iowa knows as well as I do that there are numerous cases in the States where the enactments of State legislatures have been held void because they contained these very words in one case and very similar words in other cases. With a grave doubt, and that doubt made graver by recent intimation of the Supreme Court in the Northern Securities case, I thought it wise to guard against every danger. Until the decision in the Northern Securities case in which the court expressly declared that it had never decided the question as to the power of Congress to fix railroad rates, I had been in the habit of accepting it as reasonably well established that we could create a commission and through it regulate railroad rates.

In case after case coming up from the various States the court had employed language that seemed to place that power of Congress beyond the realm of doubt, and yet, when in the Northern Securities Company's case it was urged that if the Federal Government saw fit it could protect the public against such combinations for prescribing railroad charges, the learned justice who delivered the opinion, answered that argument by saying that the court had never yet decided that Congress possesses the power to prescribe railroad rates and fares.

In a still more recent case it seems to me there was a direct and distinct intimation that legislative power could not be delegated in this way, and we are thus admonished that every safeguard should be thrown around this law and every dangerous word and phrase should be eliminated from it.

I feared that if the words "in their judgment" mean anything they are full of danger, and if they are not dangerous then they are meaningless, and for that reason I left them out of the amendment which I drew.

Mr. President, I regret that the court did not adhere to the old doctrine first laid down in Munn v. The State of Illinois, that the fixing of a rate was a legislative function, and that the appeal was to the ballot box and not to the court, because I believe as firmly as I do in my own existence that the right kind of a commission is better qualified to establish a just and reasonable rate than any court ever yet organized or any court which ever will be organized in the history of this Republic. I therefore do not feel that it would either be dangerous or unjust to the railroads to commit that question to the Commission without judicial review.

But in case after case the court has kept receding from the doctrine of Munn v. The State of Illinois until in one of the latest cases, reported in 176, the justice who delivered that opinion said the idea that these rates can be fixed and judicial examination excluded can not be tolerated. Every time they have spoken on the subject in the last twenty years they have increased the emphasis with which they have asserted the right and duty of the courts to inquire into the justice and the reasonableness of the rates.

If it should happen that we put useless and fatal words into the body of this act and thus destroy it, no man can foresee the result. What are called the "conservative" Senators are just as anxious to pass a constitutional bill as we are. I believe that even the railroads themselves want to make this bill constitutional, because they realize that this is probably the mildest bill that any Congress will ever pass again; and they apprehend that if this act should be declared invalid and a new appeal taken to the country upon this question a more drastic law would be the consequence. Therefore, the railroads themselves want this law made valid.

As for my part, I want it made valid not only because it is our duty to make it so, but also because I fear that if the Supreme Court should hold it unconstitutional the people would lose hope and interest, and all effort at restraining the avarice of the common carriers would be abandoned. I remember how it happened with the income tax. If I had been told before the Supreme Court condemned that law that the people would accept that decision patiently and would make no effort, either in the way of a constitutional amendment or otherwise, to escape from it, I would have told the man who said it that he little understood the temper of the American people. Yet when, in our platform, we ventured to complain in respectful language against that decision the country condemned us for criticising it instead of the court for making it, and the demand for an income tax, just and wise as I know it to be, has passed from our political discussions.

I fear that if a similar fate should overtake this law in the court a similar fate would overtake it in the great forum of the people, and therefore I beseech its friends to take no chance of making it invalid.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I had nothing to do with putting these words ["in its judgment"] in this bill, but I have heard reasons assigned for their presence here. There were two general reasons assigned, neither one of them good, in my opinion. The first reason assigned was that spoken of by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], when he said the purpose was to make it clear—I am not trying to quote his exact language—that the Commission was to determine, according to its discretion, what the rate should be that they would prescribe to take the place of the rate that was condemned. The other reason the Senator from Iowa did not mention, but it was given to me as a reason, aside from that which he did mention, for the presence in the bill of these words. It was in the minds of the men who put these words in the bill, as I was told, that they were trying to follow the rule laid down in the case of Field against Clark.

Now, how unlike this is to that case will occur to every Senator the minute I cite it. In that case the President was to ascertain a certain state of facts, and when he ascertained a certain state of facts to exist, he was to issue his proclamation, which the Supreme Court held was merely an administrative act, and when he had performed that administrative act the legislation of Congress, conditioned upon the performance of that admistrative act by the President, was to go into effect.

It was said by gentlemen who explained this provision to me that they were not giving to the Commission the power to make rates in the absolute sense in which the Senator from Texas provided in his bill, but they were giving to the Commission power to exercise a discretion to examine into the matter, to reach a conclusion, to make an announcement, to put it in the form of an order, and then, by operation of law now and here made, the Congress was to adopt that administrative act of the Commission, and the law was then to go into effect, according to the discretion so named by the Commission, as a rate made by Congress and not by the Commission.

I say neither one of these reasons seemed to me to be sound. Speaking of the last one first, it does not make any difference that the language is expressed in the form in which I find it, for, as I said here, speaking on this point on a previous occasion, it is but a mere juggle of words, and the Supreme Court or any other court coming to interpret this language will look through the jugglery to see what it is in fact that the Commission is authorized to do.

The court will find that, in the first place, whether these words be in or be out of this statute, the Commission is to exercise discretion, is to exercise judgment, is to name a rate, and that the rate so named by the Commission, as the result of its investigations and the exercise of its judgment and discretion, is to go into effect and be the rate that is to control as the maximum rate. In other words, Mr. President, the purpose of this law is, and will remain, whether these words stay in or go out, to give to the Commission the power to name a maximum rate. Now, I say it does not make any difference whether you say "in its judgment" or not, so far as the legal effect is concerned; for the fact will remain that it is the Commission not only making the rate, but making it in the exercise of its judgment and discretion.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I wish to make a suggestion; but I wish that some older Senator would make it.

It is the experience of Senators every afternoon when we get along to this hour—nearly 6 o'clock—that it is impossible to get the attention that ought to be given during the discussion of a subject of this kind; and it does seem to me that it would be better, with this important matter before us, to take an adjournment now until to-morrow morning.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to go on, if the Senator does not object.

Mr. CLAPP. Would the Senator not rather go on in the morning, when there will be a full attendance of Senators to listen to the discussion?

Mr. FORAKER. Very well; but I want to be considered as holding the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER (to Mr. CLAPP). Move to adjourn.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate do now adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator will not do that. Every man here wants, and I particularly want, to get this bill through. I want to get to a vote; and I think we can soon get to the point when we can dispose of all the amendments and order a reprint of the bill, and to-morrow we can vote on it finally. So I hope the Senator from Minnesota will withhold his motion.

Mr. CLAPP. I withdraw it; but in a matter of this importance, which we have been considering for months and months, and upon which we want, above everything else, to be right, if we can be right in the settlement of this question, it does seem to me wise, in the closing hours of a long day's session of the Senate, that we should not try to settle the pending question.

Mr. FORAKER. I can say all I want to say in three minutes, if I may be permitted to do so. I was almost through.

Mr. CLAPP. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I had reached the point where I wanted to say that it does not, in my judgment, make any difference in legal effect whether these words remain in or out of the bill, except only in this sense: With the words remaining in the bill it will be as though we had written across the face of it: "This bill is unconstitutional and we expect it so to be held." That is what they mean in legal effect if they stay there. I have pointed this out very frequently and I have dwelt on it so elaborately on so many different occasions that I do not want to go into the argument again.

It means that, Mr. President, for the reason that all concede we can not delegate legislative power. Now, what is legislative power except only for us to give to somebody else the exercise of a discretion that we ourselves are charged with the duty of exercising? Who is it that is to determine what is just and reasonable? The Commission, according to this bill; but what, Mr. President, is the power that Congress has in the making of rates, assuming now, for the sake of the argument, that it has power to fix rates, which I do not admit; but, assuming that Congress has the power to make rates, what is the power of Congress? It is the power to fix a rate that is just and reasonable. We can not make any other rate; and if we confer upon the Commission the power to make a just and reasonable rate, we not only confer a legislative power, but we divest ourselves in favor of the Commisison of every particle of legislative power we have with respect to the subject. For the Commission to make a just and reasonable rate is for the Commission to do all that Congress can do.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. FORAKER. I do.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator if he does not concede that if Congress has the power to prescribe rates and may vest it in the Commission, or effect it through the Commission. then the retention of these words would not affect the validity of the bill?

Mr. FORAKER. My attention was diverted for a minute. I did not catch what the Senator said.

Mr. FULTON. Does the Senator think that the retention of these words in the bill will affect its validity, if it shall be held that Congress has the power to prescribe rates through the Commission?

Mr. FORAKER. That is just what I am saying. It does not make a bit of difference, except only that the courts will not need to go beyond the language of the bill if the words stay in.

What is it to delegate legislative power? It is to give to somebody else the exercise of legislative discretion. The legislative discretion in question is to fix a just and reasonable rate. If we say we will not do that, but we will create an agency to do that very thing and invest it with power to exercise its judgment and discretion, we have delegated the very power that we ourselves have.

I will say with these words in the bill it is a perfectly plain case. No court in this country, in my judgment, will hesitate to say that those words make this law unconstitutional without going beyond it to reason about it; but if you strike them out, the court will of necessity, in my judgment, reach precisely the same conclusion, because then the court will say "What is it the Commission is to do? It is to prescribe a rate." "Prescribe" is a legislative word; it indicates legislative action. What kind of a legislative rate is it to make? One that is just and reasonable. How can it make a just and reasonable rate, except only by exercising precisely the discretion and judgment that Congress itself would have to exercise if it undertook to make a just and reasonable rate?

So I say, Mr. President, in my opinion it does not make any difference, as to the validity of this bill, whether we strike these words out or leave them in; but I am in favor of striking them out, because to leave them in is, as I said a while ago, as though we were to write across the face of the act, "This act is unconstitutional."

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator regard it as unconstitutional?

Mr. FORAKER. I do. I regard this proposed law as unconstitutional, and I do not believe you can help it. Mr. President, you can not now "make a silk purse out of a sow's ear" any more than you could when that utterance was first made.

The trouble with this bill is that it is fundamentally wrong, in my opinion. The Government has no power, in my opinion, acting through Congress, to make these rates. I have dwelt upon that heretofore, and the Senator from Texas has called attention in a most impressive way to what was said by the Supreme Court in one of its latest utterances, in the Northern Securities case.

In the second place, conceding that we have the power, it is agreed upon all sides that we can not delegate that power. What is the power that we have? It is the power to make just and reasonable rates. If we say we will not make them, but we will appoint somebody else to do it, we are abdicating our authority in that respect and undertaking to give that somebody else that authority; and that, I think, is fatal to this bill, because it is not like the case that has been supposed where a definite standard has been created. To say you shall make a just and reasonable rate is not a definite standard, for whoever undertakes to make a just and reasonable rate can not make it by a mathematical calculation. You have got to do it by the exercise of discretion, and it is legislative discretion; and that is what I think will kill this bill, if nothing else does.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. I now ask that the bill be reprinted with the amendments which have been incorporated into it up to the stage we have reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina that the bill be ordered to be reprinted with the amendments which have been incorporated into it.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I should like very much to see the Senate come to a vote on the the amendments; but it is evidently impossible to do so to-night, and therefore I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, May 18, 1906, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 17, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Journal be approved.

The motion was agreed to.

FOREIGN-BUILT DREDGES.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 395, concerning foreign-built dredges.

The Clerk read the report and statement, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill H. R. 395, concerning foreign-built dredges, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

C. H. GROSVENOR,
E. S. MINOR,
THOS. SPIGHT,
Conferees on the part of the House.

WM. P. FRYE,
J. H. GALLINGER,
JAMES H. BERRY,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The difference between the bill as it passed the House and the bill as it passed the Senate is an amendment offered by the Senate exempting from the operation of the first section of the bill certain dredges now engaged in the work of the Galveston Harbor.

The Senate added to the list of names one called the "Sea Lion," and the House disagreed to that amendment.

C. H. GROSVENOR,
E. S. MINOR,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some explanation of this conference report.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The contract for the building of the harbor at Galveston was made with a corporation that brought into the United States four steam dredges. Having progressed somewhat upon the line of their work they found it necessary to build in Europe and bring over another dredge which was named the "Texas." That dredge was a special dredge, of a special size, intended for a special work of projecting the material far up into the city in the process of building up where it was desired. The Texas was destroyed on the way over and the Sea Lion was contracted for to take the place of the Texas.

Now, this bill proposes that hereafter foreign-built dredges shall come under the regular laws of the United States in regard to foreign-built ships, but inasmuch as this contract for the work in Galveston was made when no such law existed, the committee is of the opinion that the dredges already here ought to be exempt, and then comes the question of the Sea Lion, which is not yet completed and is shortly to be brought over.

There is no existing dredge, as it is represented to us, that can do the particular work that this dredge is intended to do, and the committee of the city of Galveston represents to the committee that if that dredge should be forbidden to come here, it would suspend the work of construction at Galveston Harbor perhaps a year and a half. Now, the proposition is that these particular dredges may be documented in the United States, and that hereafter all dredges shall be treated as other foreign ships are treated.

Mr. SULZER. Then I understand that if this bill becomes a law these dredges can be used at Galveston, and afterwards at any other port in the United States.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Such are the terms of the bill. It directs that they may be documented, which means to give them a register.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As I understand the gentleman, the Sea Lion was built especially for work at Galveston?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Built especially for that work; and the representation to us is that unless they have that dredge they can not do the work, and they would be delayed in the construction of another one perhaps a year and a half.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to state that that is correct, and I hope that there will be no opposition to this conference report.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Strongly as the members of the committee would oppose, ordinarily, the bringing of foreign-built vessels into the country to be documented, yet the circumstances and conditions at Galveston seem to us to demand it in this case.

Mr. SULZER. Where were these dredges built abroad?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not know.

Mr. SULZER. How much are they worth?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not know that.

Mr. SULZER. This bill would permit four or five of them to come in and receive American registry or documenting?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Four are here now, and are pretty well worn out. It will only permit one other to come in.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. What portion of the bill prevents the future bringing in of other dredges?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The whole bill does.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. What part of it?

Mr. GROSVENOR. And more than that, it forfeits such dredge to the United States.

Mr. MUDD. Has this bill any relation to the awarding of future contracts?

Mr. GROSVENOR. None whatever. Here is the first section of the bill, which says that foreign-built dredges shall not, under a penalty of forfeiture, engage in dredging in the United States unless documented as a vessel of the United States.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. What was the Senate amendment?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Our bill provided that this act should not apply to any foreign-built dredges now at work in the waters of the United States. The Senate—and wisely—feeling that there might be other foreign-built dredges somewhere at work, named these dredges so as to confine the operation of the law to the particular dredges named.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. And the Senate amendment authorizes the documenting of these foreign-built dredges by the Commissioner of Navigation?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me ask the gentleman if this provision is a reenactment of the present law or a new provision?

Mr. GROSVENOR. A new provision. The law did not cover dredges. The gentleman will understand that these dredges had already been at work and that the law at that time permitted them to bring such dredges here, so that there seemed to be a great injustice in striking a blow at them after they had made this contract and were at work under the contract.

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Why should not those dredges be then confined to the work at Galveston?

Mr. SULZER. That is the point.

Mr. GROSVENOR. They are not confined to the work at Galveston.

Mr. OTJEN. According to this bill that the gentleman proposes to pass they will be permitted to work anywhere in the United States.

Mr. GROSVENOR. After they are through with the work down there.

Mr. OTJEN. Would it not be right to confine them to the contract at Galveston?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, it would be a rather hard provision. The Senate concluded not to do that, and the House concluded to concur. It would be a rather hard provision. They are being worn out and will probably be about destroyed by the time the work is done. Mr. Speaker, if no other question is asked, I shall ask for a vote.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a few minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why, the gentleman does not want to oppose this, does he?

Mr. SULZER. Yes; I am going to oppose this kind of a conference report, and point out some inconsistencies in this special kind of peculiar legislation.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the conference report.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I hope the previous question will be voted down.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SULZER) there were—ayes 161, noes 32.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the yeas and nays. As many as favor ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Two gentlemen have voted—not a sufficient number—and the yeas and nays are refused.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the conference report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On May 16, 1906:

H. R. 6101. An act for the relief of the estate of Charles M. Demarest, deceased;

H. J. Res. 134. Joint resolution authorizing the construction and maintenance of wharves, piers, and other structures in Lake Michigan, adjoining certain lands in Lake County, Ind.;

H. R. 13946. An act for the relief of Charles L. Allen;

H. R. 15095. An act authorizing the condemnation of lands or easements needed in connection with works of river and harbor improvement at the expense of persons, companies, or corporations; and

H. R. 18204. An act to authorize the Northampton and Halifax Bridge Company to construct a bridge across Roanoke River at or near Weldon, N. C.

CORPS OF DENTAL SURGEONS.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Military Affairs reported the bill (S. 2355) to reorganize the corps of dental surgeons attached to the Medical Department of the Army, with certain amendments. The Clerk in having it printed made an error in section 4, and printed that section as though it were not an amendment. I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill in accordance with the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, this is merely the correction of a clerical error, and I shall make no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered on the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I demanded a separate vote upon each amendment. I wish this morning to withdraw that demand, except upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] to give a preference of 4 per cent to the Pacific slope ship building.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is too late with his demand for a separate vote on the amendment referred to, inasmuch as the record shows that a motion to adjourn intervened after the demand for a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn is in order at any time. In the opinion of the Chair the point of order is not well taken. The taking of a vote on amendments in gross must be by unanimous consent. It is an irregular procedure. Ordinarily, in fact, without unanimous consent, a vote would have to be taken upon all amendments separately, but the practice has grown up and has resulted in much saving of time and great convenience to the House, and if no separate vote is demanded, then a vote in gross is usually taken. But as consent never was given to take the vote in gross in this case, it seems to the Chair that the demand is in time and the Chair therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if it is understood that there is to be a separate vote on the amendment on page 15?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that separate votes have been demanded on two amendments by the gentleman from Mississippi and by the gentleman from Massachusetts. Is there objection to taking the vote upon the remaining amendments in gross? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendments indicated.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, the amendment I have in mind, upon which I demand a separate vote, is the amendment which provides for the purchase of anchors, cables, chains, and so forth, in the open market, which I think was offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] in the name of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LOUD].

Mr. GROSVENOR. It was presented by the gentleman from Michigan in the name of the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. No separate vote has been reserved, so far as the Chair recollects, upon this subject, except upon the so-called Grosvenor amendment.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, that is what I have in mind.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 6, after the word "dollars," insert: "Provided, That after January 1, 1907, no part of said sum shall be expended in the manufacturing in any Government navy-yard of any chains, anchors, or cordage which can be obtained in the free markets of the country at less cost than manufacture of the same article will cost in the navy-yards, by bids at the solicitation of the Department or in such manner as the Department may choose: And provided further, That all such articles shall be of standard and quality to be fixed by the Navy Department."

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, to save time I demand the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 119, nays 129, answered "present" 19, not voting 114, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 72, line 21, after the words "expeditious delivery," insert the following: "Provided, That any bid for the construction of any of said vessels upon the Pacific coast shall have a differential of 4 per cent in its favor, which shall be considered by the Secretary of the Navy in awarding contracts for the construction of said vessels."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Speaker, the demand for the yeas and nays was a mistake; I meant division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 100.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 121, nays 118, answered "present" 17, not voting 125, as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

For the vote:

Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. GAINES of Tennessee.

Mr. BRADLEY with Mr. GOULDEN.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa with Mr. BYRD.

For the balance of the day:

Mr. RODENBERG with Mr. GRIGGS.

Mr. MAHON with Mr. BURNETT.

Mr. MORRELL with Mr. SULLIVAN of New York.

Mr. GRONNA with Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

The SPEAKER. This vote is so close that the Chair will order a recapitulation of it.

The vote was recapitulated.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time, and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill, and on that motion I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and on that motion demands the previous question.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the recommitment of the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 157.

So the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was passed.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk may have authority to change the total. It is simply a matter of addition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the Clerk may change the total in a certain particular, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 33, line 16, change the first word in the line from "eight" to "seven;" so it will read:

"Total public works, navy-yards and stations, $2,748,450."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to state that I would dislike very much to object to a request of that sort, but a bill which carries with it the newly announced principle of protection within the Union in giving Government contracts I think ought to be met with an objection to everything requiring unanimous consent. I shall, therefore, object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that I may have permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

On motion of Mr. Foss, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TRANSPORTATION AND FREIGHT RATES IN THE OIL INDUSTRY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the full report of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Corporations in the Department of Commerce and Labor on the subject of transportation and freight rates in connection with the oil industry referred to in my message of the 4th instant, it having been delayed in printing.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, May 17, 1906.

BRIDGE ACROSS PEND D'OREILLE RIVER, WASHINGTON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following Senate bill, a similar House bill being on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 6128) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Pend d'Oreille River, in Stevens County, Wash., by the Pend d'Oreille Development Company.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Pend d'Oreille Development Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, its successors or assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a wagon bridge and approaches thereto across the Pend d'Oreille River at or near Big Falls (sometimes called Metaline Falls), in Stevens County, in the State of Washington, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment, which I have submitted to the chairman of the committee, and it is entirely satisfactory to him.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, after the word "wagon," insert the words "railroad and foot."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

House bill 19108, on the same subject, was ordered to lie on the table.

ENTRY OF AGRICULTURAL LANDS IN FOREST RESERVES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 17576) providing for the entry of agricultural lands in forest reserves, with a Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House nonconcur in the amendment, and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. LACEY, Mr. SMITH of California, and Mr. BURNETT as conferees.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

OSWEGO, N. Y.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13938) to extend the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, to the port of Oswego, N. Y.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. ALEXANDER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13938, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13938) to extend the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, to the port of Oswego, N. Y.

Be it enacted, etc., That the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, extended to the port of Oswego, in the State of New York.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, as the House knows, the port of Oswego is an old port of entry, situated on Lake Ontario. The object of this bill is simply to extend the privileges of the act of 1880, so that goods destined for the port of Oswego that come through any other port of entry in the United States may go there in bond and be examined and appraised at the port of Oswego and the duties there paid. There are a whole set of officers at Oswego, and it will not cost the Treasury a dollar to extend that privilege.

Mr. SULZER. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if this bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. PAYNE. It has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from New York a question? Is this one of those collection districts he is creating like some of those other districts to which the gentleman is opposed?

Mr. PAYNE. This is a district that pays the Government a good deal more than it costs to collect the revenues that come there. It has a full set of clerks and appraisers and all the officers necessary to carry out the provisions of this bill without a single penny of tax to the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if there are no more questions, and no further debate and no amendments, I move that the committee rise and report the bill with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALEXANDER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13938, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NATURALIZATION BILL.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15442, the naturalization bill, and pending that motion I ask that general debate on the bill be closed in one hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naturalization bill, and pending that motion he asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed in one hour.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, I move that general debate be closed in one hour.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I objected for the purpose of finding out what the request was.

Mr. BONYNGE. That general debate on the naturalization bill should close in an hour and it be then considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. BONYNGE. I raise the point of order that the question of consideration is not now in order, for the reason that the only way it can be determined is by voting down the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule. The question of consideration would come as indicated if raised. It can not be raised pending the motion to fix the time that debate shall run. Is there objection to closing general debate in one hour? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, how is that time to be controlled?

The SPEAKER. Under the rule and by the Chair.

Mr. MANN. That means that whoever gets the floor is entitled to the floor for an hour.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair the hour would go to whoever got the floor.

Mr. MANN. Well, unless some arrangement is made I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is too late.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that if the motion should be voted down I wish to call for the regular order——

Mr. BONYNGE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. When the naturalization bill was up in Committee of the Whole House some time ago, there were twenty-four minutes remaining on this side when the matter was under general debate. I would like to ask whether that twenty-four minutes is still reserved?

The SPEAKER. No; general debate by unanimous consent is to close in one hour after the House goes into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee to consent to an additional twenty-four minutes which was reserved at that time.

Mr. PAYNE. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls for the regular order.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a modification of the unanimous consent that was given a moment ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can present another proposition, but general debate after going into Committee of the Whole is limited to one hour. The only way he can get rid of it is by unanimous consent.

Mr. HEPBURN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. If this motion should be voted down, would it not then be competent to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill which was made a special order for this time—the pure-food bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair presumes that if this motion fails another privileged motion would be in order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Colorado, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15442—the naturalization bill.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, on a division there were—ayes 114, noes 60.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have read from the Clerk's desk certain amendments which the committee propose to offer at the proper time. I ask to have the amendments read now for information of the committee before general debate is had.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the proposed amendments for the information of the committee.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 1: Line 20, page 4, after the word "alien," insert the following words: "Provided, however, That no alien who, in conformity with the law in force at the date of his declaration, has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States shall be required to renew such declaration."

Amendment No. 2: Line 21, page 4, strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seven."

Amendment No. 3: Line 12, page 5, after the word "petition," insert the following words: "Provided, That if he has filed his declaration before the passage of this act he shall not be required to sign the petition in his own handwriting."

Amendment No. 4: Line 3, page 10, after the word "States," add the following words: "And provided further, That the requirements of this section shall not apply to any alien who has, prior to the passage of this act, declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States in conformity with the law in force at the date of making such declaration."

Amendment No. 5: Line 23, page 13, strike out the words "certificate therefor" and insert in lieu thereof the words "duplicate thereof."

Amendment No. 6: Line 7, page 20, after the word "court," insert the words "or his authorized deputy or assistant;" and in line 8, page 20, strike out the words "any other person."

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the hour's time may be equally divided, one-half to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request made by the gentleman from Colorado? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized for thirty minutes.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take up any time at the present time. I occupied the floor for something like two hours when we were in Committee of the Whole before, and I will now ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] to consume some of his time.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WHARTON].

Mr. WHARTON. Mr. Chairman, I propose when this bill is taken up for consideration by sections, to offer the following amendment to section 9:

Strike out in lines 22 and 23 the words "write in;" in line 23, after the word "or," strike out the word "in;" in lines 23 and 24 strike out the words "and who can not read, speak, and understand the English language;" and insert in line 22, after the word "not," the words "read, write, speak, and understand;" so that the same as amended shall read:

"That no alien shall hereafter be naturalized, or admitted as a citizen of the United States who can not read, write, speak, and understand his own or the English language: Provided, That this requirement shall not apply to aliens who are physically unable to comply therewith, if they are otherwise qualified to become citizens of the United States."

Upon this section of the bill under consideration, providing that hereafter no alien shall be naturalized or admitted as a citizen unless he can write in his own language or the English language, and who can not read, speak, and understand the English language, is a provision that is un-American, unpatriotic, and ill-advised for many reasons. It is not the true test of citizenship in any material sense. As I view the subject, a man may make just as good a citizen, though ignorant and unable to parse a sentence in English as many of those who can do so, and sometimes better. It isn't his ability to master a certain language, or to drill his mind in grammatical construction, that determines his desirability for citizenship.

Many aliens come to our shores who have the aspiration present in the breast of all men to better their conditions in life. These immigrants are not familiar with our language; they are poor, uneducated, and downtrodden; they have suffered the tortures of poverty and are struggling to overcome them, and often make superhuman efforts to get to our country—the promised land—in order to get rid of the sore-creating burdens they have borne at home. We claim equality of all men—not by reason of birth, breeding, or favor—but the equality which comes from individual effort, which says to everybody, "Get out and hustle, strive, and fight the battle of existence, and our country will place no stumbling block in your path, place no burden on your shoulders to keep you down because you were of lowly birth, or because you were not lucky enough to be born with a silver spoon in your mouth."

The average alien when he gets here takes his personal belongings on his shoulder and cheerfully turns his face toward the West, the South, or the North, willing to encounter hardships, endure sufferings, and meet privation after privation for his chance to compete with the millions already there. He hasn't anything to fall back on except two brawny hands. He must work to keep himself provided with the necessities of life; work to provide the hungry mouths of the little flock and the faithful, hard-working spouse he has brought with him and who share his lot, good or bad as it may be. He can't go to an office at 9 o'clock in the morning and home at 5 in the afternoon. His toil starts early with the blast of a whistle, with the sound of a gong, or with the rise of the sun; hard, laborious, physical toil in the shop, the factory, the mill, or the field. There he labors hour after hour till the day's work is done, and then home to seek rest and shelter. Shall this man—can this man—sit up half the night trying to learn to read and write and speak and think in English? If he be unusually energetic and thirsts for knowledge, he will get it after he has had his supper by reading a paper, book, or magazine printed in the tongue he has been taught from infancy; printed in the tongue he has always known, printed in the only tongue in which he can read and think intelligently. His thoughts seek expression in his language, because he thinks in his language. If he seeks information from others, it is natural for him to go to those who are of his race. He can make them understand him, and he can understand them; he has more confidence in his ability to express himself intelligently and to understand accurately and with less fear of mistake among those who speak his language than in any other.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Does this amendment provide that he must be able to read and write his own language?

Mr. WHARTON. Yes; he can not be naturalized or admitted as a citizen of the United States if he can not read, write, and speak, and understand his own or the English language.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Suppose he is not able to write his own language, and suppose he has no opportunity in this country to learn how to read and write his own language, or how to read and write the English language, what will then be done with him? Is he to be barred for all time from the boon of American citizenship?

Mr. WHARTON. If he can not read or write some language, I do not see that there is very much chance for him. I believe there should be some provision, some qualification, for a man who becomes a citizen and who is clothed with the powers of citizenship in this country; and I believe if he be able to read and write in his own language so that he can understand it, or so that anybody else can understand it, that is sufficient. If educational qualifications proposed by section 9 are required, you simply build up a class of citizenship based upon what we call the classes, and not the masses. It puts a test upon him which is not fair.

Can you say that this man will not make a good citizen? It's the man's heart and intentions toward our principles, our Government, and our country that should, that must count. If he be able to understand our institutions and has a desire to be in accord with them, it does not make him any the less desirable as a citizen because he doesn't know how to describe them on paper or express them in the English language.

If our country were in need of soldiers to defend it against attack, this man could and would fight and stop the bullets and steel projectiles of the enemy as well as any other man in the same ranks who occupies the proud distinction of membership in this honorable body, and we would not reject him because he didn't happen to know how to write in his own or our language or because he couldn't speak our tongue.

The foreigners who come to us have to work and labor and toil, so that their children may receive the benefit of an education, and they can't stop to undo the education they themselves received and learn it all over again in our tongue. The difficulties in the way are apparent at a glance. The mind is matured, formed, and set, so that thought works in natural and prescribed processes. It is not the supple, pliable, and impressionable thing which is given to the young. A tree can be made to grow in any direction or angle when a sapling, but when it gets its growth it is firmly rooted and the fibers securely formed. Try and change its course and failure follows; yet, though the tree grows in a certain direction, it may still bear fruit, the same as one trained in a different bent. So it is with the man; he may be as heartily and earnestly interested in our Government and our country and may strive to fulfill the duties of citizenship just as loyally as if he had a thorough knowledge of our tongue.

I have many thousands of foreigners in the district which I have the honor to represent on the floor of this House; and though normally it is about 10,000 Democratic, and though many foreigners can not read or write or even speak English, yet they were able to think and decide and change from the Democratic party and vote the Republican ticket, and thus help to swell the majority of President Roosevelt by many thousands of votes. While, in the main, many of them are untutored and unskilled in the science of our language or their own, they are a shrewd and common-sense people, and they quickly saw it was to their interest and the country's interest to change their votes, and it is pretty generally agreed that in that respect they were not far from wrong. Now, I don't propose that these people, or those who come to us hereafter and are like them, shall be deprived of citizenship because they are unfortunate enough to be unable to write in our tongue, or because they are unfortunate enough to be unable to read, speak, or understand the English language as we do. They are the right sort if they have our interest and our welfare at heart and make that interest and welfare their interest and welfare; if they can understand and appreciate the duties required and expected of them as citizens of this United States; if they are earnestly striving to uplift themselves and their families, and if they are of good moral character and can understand in any way or any tongue, whether theirs or ours, concerning the rights, duties, obligations, and necessities devolving upon them by reason of their acquisition of the inestimable privilege of citizenship. They should be granted the right which, in all justice to them and to ourselves, should be showered upon them as one of the great blessings of our free American institutions and force the world to acknowledge the truth of our boast of the equality of all within the confines of our own progressive country. [Applause.]

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, just a moment or two to state another amendment. In the amendments that were read from the desk two amendments that the committee intends to offer were omitted, and I desire to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to those amendments. On page 3, line 2, after the word "State," an amendment will be offered to insert the words "or Territory," so that the Territorial courts having a seal and clerk and jurisdiction in actions in law in which the amount in controversy is unlimited, will be entitled to naturalize aliens. Another amendment that will be offered by the committee will be to lines 1 and 3, on page 14, which relate to the fees to be charged for naturalization. The fees prescribed by the bill at the present time are $1 when the declaration of intention is made. That will remain the same. Then, in line 1, of page 14, the word "three" will be inserted in lieu of the word "five;" and in line 3 of page 14 the word "three" will also be inserted in lieu of the word "five," so that the total fees for naturalization under the amendment that will be offered by the committee will be $7 instead of $11.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit a question to be put right here regarding the fees?

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman what are the fees now provided by statute?

Mr. BONYNGE. No statute of the United States regulates specifically the fees in naturalization proceedings. The fees are now regulated by the different States of the Union, and vary in every State, so we have about as many different fees charged for naturalization as we have States of the Union—pretty nearly as many.

Mr. STAFFORD. In arriving at the revised figures of $3 for the filing and docketing of the petition and the $3 for the issuance of the certificate, what rule has the gentleman followed in determining the proposed fees?

Mr. BONYNGE. We endeavored, Mr. Chairman, to ascertain as near as we could, and it was largely a matter of conjecture, what the expenses of the national supervision of naturalization would be. We were at first inclined to think that it would take at least $11, which we provided in the bill. Upon further consideration we have concluded that the fees provided for by the amendment which we will offer will be sufficient to pay the expenses, and it is our desire to charge only a sufficient amount to cover the expenses of naturalization.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, one half of these fees is to be retained by the various clerks and the other half is to be sent to the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes; for the purpose of maintaining the national bureau.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman acquainted with the law of 1898, which compels the clerks of the United States courts when they receive fees in naturalization cases to turn them over in toto into the Treasury of the United States rather than retain them as they had been doing theretofore?

Mr. BONYNGE. There was some reference to that statute during our hearings. The member of the committee who has this particular section especially in charge [Mr. BENNET] will undertake to take care of that provision when we reach the section. Now, Mr. Chairman, I did not take the floor to consume the half hour which is allotted to this side. I answered a great many of these questions when the bill was under consideration before. I simply desired to have these amendments before the committee during the general discussion, and unless the gentleman from New York desires to take the floor, I will yield ten minutes——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I rose for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman.

Mr. BONYNGE. A very short question I will answer.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What are the fees now in Federal courts for naturalization?

Mr. BONYNGE. I think they vary in the different States.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What is the minimum?

Mr. BONYNGE. I can not answer the question; there is no general statute regulating fees in the Federal courts.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will pardon me, there is a statute which regulates the fees of clerks for all services.

Mr. BONYNGE. But no fees for naturalization are regulated.

Mr. STAFFORD. The general law covers all instances of naturalization, and they are not allowed to charge any more for naturalization than for like services in other cases.

Mr. BONYNGE. No; probably not.

Mr. SMITH of California. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BONYNGE. You must make the question short or my half hour will be consumed.

Mr. SMITH of California. I am going to make it short. On page 6, line 11, I want to ask the gentleman what is meant by the word "district;" whether it means District of Columbia, district court, or Congressional district?

Mr. BONYNGE. What page and line?

Mr. SMITH of California. Page 6, line 11. What is intended by the word "district," which seems quite indefinite?

Mr. BONYNGE. Why, it means the District of Columbia and the district of Alaska.

Mr. SMITH of California. Might it not mean Congressional district or judicial district or anything else just as well?

Mr. BONYNGE. No; we have three subdivisions in continental America: We have the States, the Territories, the District of Columbia, and the district of Alaska, and in the connection in which that word is used I can not conceive how anybody can misunderstand it.

Mr. SMITH of California. It refers there in certain cases to the jurisdiction of Federal courts.

Mr. BONYNGE. I must ask the gentleman not to enter into an argument now upon that section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado declines to yield further.

Mr. BONYNGE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise to express my interest in this bill, being a member of the committee and having sat through all of the hearings, not only in this session of Congress, but in previous ones; and those hearings being fortified by the commission which was appointed to investigate and report on this subject, I think this legislation deserves almost if not the unanimous support of this House.

I am particularly interested and would call the attention of the House to the second provision of importance in this bill, which is that those who are about to become naturalized as citizens of the Republic should be made to establish the fact that they propose to live in this country. Having had to do somewhat with the foreign relations of our country, I have had brought to my attention the great abuse in this regard. People from the Far East come here and make their declarations of becoming citizens and then take out their papers and return to the East, where they claim the citizenship of this country in order to protect themselves against many of the annoyances which are imposed upon them by their native country. It has been carried to such an extent that we have had several annoying cases where we have been obliged to step in and protect these quasi citizens against difficulties in which they have become involved through business reasons and others in the country in which they reside.

I have no desire, Mr. Chairman, to put any restrictions except proper ones upon those who wish to enjoy the great privileges of citizenship of the United States, but I have a very strong protest to make against anyone who wishes to secure that great privilege, a privilege that should be prized by the applicant, for the purpose of simply using it as a matter for his business interests and to seek the protection of this country when he may become involved in any difficulty abroad. So much has this been abused that we have, in the case of Jerusalem, nearly 1,000 people who have secured our citizenship and who seek protection in this country whenever they may get involved in any difficulties there. The provisions of this bill throw a safeguard around this abuse. In my judgment it is one of the most important features of this proposed legislation. It will tend to prevent this imposition on the liberality with which we extend the right to foreigners to become citizens of the United States, and I trust that that provision will receive the hearty support of the House.

The provision, also, which insists that they shall be able to read and understand the English language is certainly a proper one. I am one of those, Mr. Chairman, who believe it proper to admit immigrants to this country without the educational test, although when that bill comes, as it stands, I mean to vote for it, because we had better have that restriction than none at all. But, sir, the admission of a man to this country merely to earn a living is a very different proposition from allowing him to become a citizen to participate in the making of laws and the election of Members to this House and to participate in our Government.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE]?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I would like to do so, but I have only five minutes.

To allow him to participate in the freedom of our Government and the election of Representatives is a very serious responsibility, and I think any reasoning and thinking man will see the force of the proposition that the man who is to participate in the election of Members of Congress and other officers of our Government at least should be able to understand the English language and read it. How else can he inform himself on the principles of our Government? How else can he receive information on the questions that may be involved in the election?

Mr. MCNARY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I decline to yield.

How else can he inform himself on the issues involved in the election about to take place unless orally informed or unless he can read the public press that may inform him on the issues involved?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN].

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, during the month of March in a discussion with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] I questioned the veracity of the reports made by Marcus Braun, the special inspector of immigration.

Since then I have investigated the matter fully, have interviewed the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and desire at this time to withdraw the charges made on that occasion against that gentleman.

The subject under discussion, namely, House bill No. 15442 from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, is of vital importance. It provides for the establishment of a bureau of immigration and naturalization, and for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States.

I have studied this question for years, watched the operation of existing laws, and introduced bills in the last and present Congress to remedy the glaring evils prevalent under our present statutes.

The United States grand jury for the southern district of the State of New York having had so many cases of false naturalization, sale of certificates, and a general miscarriage of the laws on this subject that they spent months in 1903 investigating the matter. The discoveries made were truly appalling. Convictions on a fair trial were set aside on account of technicalities, or the conflict between the State and Federal law. [Applause.]

Hearings on bill No. 12762, introduced by me early in the Fifty-eighth Congress, were held by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. The first of these occurred March 15, 1904. In this connection I desire to quote the testimony of Clarence S. Houghton, esq., and Joel M. Marx, esq., assistant United States attorneys of New York, on the bill referred to and given before the committee on the date mentioned:

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, at the suggestion of General Burnett, the United States district attorney for the southern district of New York, with the assistance of Mr. Marx, the special assistant United States district attorney, who was assigned especially to prosecute these naturalization cases, I drafted this bill No. 12762, simply as a temporary measure.

You can all realize that a question as important as this is—that is, the naturalization of aliens—will require a great deal of consideration, because it is a very important matter. The question of making aliens citizens goes right into the vitals of this country. So that in drafting this bill I studied very carefully the laws that we already have and tried to keep those laws as nearly as possible what they are to-day, but to simply remedy such defects as our experience in the city of New York during the past eight months led us to believe should be remedied in the statutes as they now stand, by amending certain of the statutes of the United States.

In order to give you an idea of the evils of naturalization, I will simply run over the subject very hastily, as I find my time is short, so that when I come to speak of these different paragraphs you can know what I am talking about.

It seems that last March an alien appeared as a witness for a friend of his who desired to become a citizen of the United States. He applied to the clerk of the district court for the southern district of New York. The clerk, upon examining the paper which he produced to show that he was a citizen, found that it was a forged paper, forged throughout; that is, the seal of the court was a forgery, the signature of the clerk of the court was a forgery, and the printing upon the paper was a forgery. As a result of that we started an investigation to find out where these forged papers came from, and assistants were sent to us from the Department of Justice to carry on this work. We found that a set of men in the city of New York had a plant by which they were printing these certificates of naturalization, having a counterfeit seal of the court, and one man being employed to copy, as nearly as he could, the name of the clerk of the court. It is rather interesting to know how and why these men made a plant of their own to supply these certificates of naturalization.

We now have a charge pending against the clerk of the court for the southern district of New York for issuing improperly certificates of naturalization. He would, according to the evidence that we have, obtain a certificate bearing the proper seal of the court and the signature of the clerk, but with the name of the applicant not filled in. He would then dispose of that certificate, in blank, without the name of the applicant. The applicant would take it outside and would fill in the name of the party desiring it; and for doing this the clerk received a certain sum of money. After a while he began to increase his prices, so that these Italians who we found were carrying on this plant thought it would be cheaper to make naturalization certificates themselves, which they did.

Now, in the city of New York—I must speak of that, because our work has been there—we find this naturalization fraud in almost every particular that you can think of. Not only, as I say, have these papers in blank, that have the seal of the court and the signature of the clerk upon them, filled in, but papers already filled in are taken out, the name is erased from them, and they are sold to other Italians. I am speaking particularly of Italians, because our work has been directed in that line. The name has been filled in. Then they get what they call certified copies, or duplicate certificates, from the court which issued them. Those certificates are obtained and are sold to other parties, or the name is erased therefrom and other names inserted.

Then, again, an alien who can not answer the questions that will be put to him by the clerk of the court and by the judge of the court will get a friend of his to come in, and he will substitute for the alien demanding the paper; the paper will be issued in the name of the alien requiring it or asking it, but it will be passed by the substitute, on account of the substitute.

Then, again, gentlemen, we have this: Aliens who are not entitled on account of age to the final papers (which I here designate as the certificate of naturalization), even though they have been coached up as to the questions that are propounded to them, will go into the court and swear that they are 18 or under the age of 18, so that they can get the final papers without the necessity of having a first paper. So that, gentlemen, they acquire these papers in any manner that they possibly can. An alien will go into court; he will obtain a paper by fraud, because, for instance, his witness will come in and swear that he was under the age of 18 when he arrived in this country, and he himself will corroborate that by swearing that he was under the age of 18.

He will take that paper. He may stay here a few years in this country, and then he will go abroad and sell it to another alien friend of his; or if he has an alien friend in Italy whom he wants to bring over to this country, he will send that paper over to Europe. The friend will take that paper and represent himself as a citizen when he passes through the immigration department. Not only that, but when aliens here have finished with their papers, they send them abroad and sell them. So that, gentlemen, it is necessary, in this temporary bill, to provide against certain abuses that we have found out through the prosecution of these cases.

There is one other thing of which I want to speak before going farther, and that is the matter of first papers. Under the municipal laws of the city of New York, in order to allow an alien to peddle he must either show the first paper—the declaration of intention—or he must show his certificate of naturalization. Consequently these aliens come in, and they will obtain a first paper; they will go up to the aliens' bureau and secure their license; then they will go and dispose of this first paper or declaration of intention to a friend and he will go and get a license, and they will send that from friend to friend.

Mr. BONYNGE. Substituting different names?

Mr. HOUGHTON. The same name.

Mr. BONYNGE. The same name?

Mr. HOUGHTON. The same name, and, unfortunately, there is no law now on the statute books of the United States prohibiting the selling of this declaration of intention; so that you will find that my first paragraph here is practically the same as in the Revised Statutes as they exist to-day.

Mr. BONYNGE. Pardon me just a moment, Mr. Houghton. In reference to getting these licenses under the same name—then does not the license run to half a dozen people of the same name?

Mr. HOUGHTON. It will run to a dozen; but you see——

Mr. BONYNGE. And does each man continue his business under a license under a different name than his own, then?

Mr. HOUGHTON. Under a different name than his own.

Mr. MARX. Perhaps the gentleman does not understand the necessity for a license. These are licenses which are issued to push-cart peddlers to go through the streets.

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes; I understand that. Then half a dozen people carry on their business under the same name?

Mr. MARX. Half a dozen people under one name, just as if there were half a dozen different people of the same name?

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes.

Mr. MARX. The license clerk, of course, could not tell the difference, because there is nothing in the paper to indicate a difference, or to indicate that they are the same people.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will Mr. Houghton explain before he goes any further, why these naturalization papers are so important in relation to employment in the city bureaus?

Mr. HOUGHTON. Oh, yes; I forgot to mention the object of these aliens, especially the Italians (or any other alien immigrants who come over here), in becoming naturalized citizens. Under the municipal law of New York no alien can be employed in a city department. He must be a naturalized citizen; and as the pay is excellent, of course the first object of every Italian who comes over to New York is to secure employment under the city. So he goes and gets a paper, whether he is entitled to it or not, either by substitution, false witness, or erasure, paying twelve or fifteen dollars for it, goes to the civil service, is passed there, and obtains employment. That is the object.

Going back now to this bill, gentlemen, paragraph 2 was inserted for this reason: In a case which I tried——

Mr. ADAMS. One minute, Mr. Houghton. This paragraph will not make any change in the time?

Mr. HOUGHTON. No; that is the same.

Paragraph 2 is slightly different, because there I say: "Any oath or affidavit required or authorized in this act may be taken before a judge, clerk, deputy clerk, or special deputy clerk of the courts named and specified in paragraph 1," that paragraph giving the same courts as the old act, before whom naturalization proceedings may be instituted.

The object of this paragraph, gentlemen, is this (I cite cases because our experience comes from cases which we have tried): I tried the case of a man who appeared as a witness in a naturalization case. He was a man who had appeared many times as a witness in order to obtain naturalization papers for his friends. In that case, appearing as a witness, he took the oath before the deputy clerk of the court issuing the certificate of naturalization. In it he swore that he had known the applicant for five years, which he must do under the statute. It was proved that he had not known him for five years; he had only known him for a month or two. The paper was held up; the certificate was not issued because of certain other facts that the judge found out. But inasmuch as the law of the State of New York allows an oath to be taken before the clerk or deputy clerk of a court, we contended that inasmuch as he had made a false affidavit in a naturalization proceeding he was subject to indictment in the Federal courts.

At the first trial there was a disagreement by the jury. At the second trial he was convicted. Before sentence was passed counsel for the defendant raised the point that, inasmuch as the oath had been taken before a deputy clerk, and there was no statute of the United States permitting that oath to be taken before a deputy clerk of the court, notwithstanding the State court allows it, the Federal court had no jurisdiction. The judge wrote an elaborate opinion sustaining the contention of counsel, and the defendant was discharged. Now, it has been held by the court of appeals of the State of New York that the State courts do not have cognizance of offenses of this character. Consequently——

Mr. ROBB. Will you allow me to interrupt you?

Mr. HOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. ROBB. Was your attention called to the prosecution of those naturalization frauds in St. Louis?

Mr. HOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. ROBB. Before Judge Adams?

Mr. MARX. There is a higher decision than that of Judge Adams, and that is the decision of the circuit court of appeals of the United States, as reported in two Federal cases; and the decision of the court of appeals of the State of New York may not have been called to his attention.

Mr. HOUGHTON. So that we stand in this predicament, so far as our jurisdiction is concerned—that in the great city of New York, where we have so many cases, we can not prosecute these people in the State courts, and, under the learned decision of Judge Thomas, we can not prosecute them in the Federal courts.

Mr. ROBB. The change that you make is putting in the words "deputy clerk" and "special deputy?"

Mr. HOUGHTON. I am specifying the officers before whom they may be executed, and putting the words "any oath" in this act.

Mr. MARX. You see, paragraph 2 of the old act simply says "the oaths required in paragraph 1." That refers to a declaration of intention. This covers every oath.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Every oath.

Mr. MARX. Because it has been held that the oath of a witness which is taken upon a final examination is extra judicial and can not be punished; and consequently this makes it apply to every oath.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Yes. Now, I will hurry along. There is so much in this, gentlemen, that I do not know just what to say and what not to say.

Paragraph 3 is entirely new.

The object of that paragraph is that we may have some description by which we can go at the time an alien gets his first papers, as we call them, or makes his declaration of intention. An alien will apply for first papers, and he will give incorrectly the date of his arrival, and give his age as eighteen or seventeen—for what purpose? So that he can sooner obtain his final papers. So that, gentlemen, this is a matter of great importance. If he produces, before the clerk who issues this declaration of intention, a certificate from the port of entry showing his age, the date of his arrival, and some description of him, then the clerk of the court, looking at that, the minute he asks these questions, can tell whether he is answering falsely or correctly. Then again, gentlemen, it will save substitution, because we will have a description. When these aliens come in, as they do every day, and say, "I have lost my declaration of intention, will you give me another one?" the clerk will at once refer to this certificate. He can refer to that, and from the description and from the answers to the questions that are put to him he can see whether the man who originally obtained this declaration of intention has really lost it, or whether the man before him is somebody else coming in and trying to get a declaration of intention under the name of another person, which is done every day.

So that provision is for identification, and to enable the clerk of the court to see whether the applicant, when he is being examined for the purpose of issuing to him his first papers, is telling the truth or not.

Mr. MARX. If the gentlemen of the committee have no objection, I will break in wherever a suggestion has been omitted.

Mr. GOULDEN. This is Mr. Marx, gentlemen, special assistant United States attorney, who had charge of these cases.

Mr. MARX. As the time is so short, it might perhaps be better if I would break in wherever Mr. Houghton forgets any particular point, and that will save a subsequent statement on the subject.

With regard to this question of identification by means of a certificate from the Commissioner of Immigration, that certificate will absolutely and correctly give the age of the immigrant, because in all foreign countries except England, in such countries as Italy, the country that we have mainly in view, no man can leave without obtaining a passport, and of course the passport is issued on the certificate of his birth, and certain other papers; so that when he comes to the port of New York he has in his possession a passport which correctly gives the date of his birth.

Consequently, at the first step in his process of becoming a citizen, we have the correct date of his birth; so that when we ask the Commissioner of Immigration to take the date from his records (we practically do that by compelling the man, before he can file his declaration of intentions, to produce this certificate of the Commissioner of Immigration), we have on record the correct date, not from the man's memory, not as he and his friends would wish us to have it, but as it actually appears from the certificate of his birth at the place where he was born in Italy. In that way, by means of this certificate, we know exactly the date on which the man was born; and no man can then say that he arrived in the United States under the age of 18 if such was not the case. That is the object of the certificate, in addition to furnishing the description of the alien, which prevents any possibility of any mistake being made as to his age at the time of arrival.

You will note that there is a further qualification there in regard to the counter signature of the final paper. That really comes in later, but it might, perhaps, have a place here, and might be an additional security against the possibility of these declarations of intention being improperly issued to two or three people using the same piece of paper. While that would, perhaps, be something of a hardship if a man has only been a year or six months in the country, it is still a protection, through the commissioner's certificate, against the man's misrepresenting his age, because his first declaration would then be followed right through to his final papers.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Paragraph 5 is based upon the old law, with the exception that in the old law, in addition to the oath of the applicant, his residence must be proved by one witness, a citizen of the United States. I have put in here "two citizens," for this reason:

Of course when an applicant appears in court finally, he as well as his witness is subject to examination as to his qualifications to obtain his second paper. The judge, by examining two witnesses instead of one, will obtain the truth of the residence of an applicant much better than with one. One witness may be primed; the applicant may be primed as to what he will say when he is produced before the court. But you can readily see that if there are three persons—that is, the applicant and two witnesses—when they appear in court and are subjected to the examination by the court as to the right of the alien to obtain the paper, the danger of swearing falsely is made much less, because it is not probable that three persons, the alien himself and his two witnesses, could so swear falsely that the judge before whom the application is made would not detect it. It is simply as a matter of precaution that I have put that in, so that the examining judge can see, from the mouths of three persons—that is, the applicant and the two witnesses—whether or not the applicant himself is entitled to the certificate of naturalization.

Then it goes on practically the same as the old section. I will say that here on page 4, line 8, there is a typographical error. After the word "affidavit" it should read "by two citizens of the United States," should you decide to allow that to remain in.

Mr. MARX. Right on that point, Mr. Houghton, one thing has been forgotten. There is a change in this language, "the oath of the applicant shall in all cases be required to prove his residence," etc. That is in line 6, page 4. The old act is practically the same thing, except that the old act says that "the oath of the applicant in all cases shall not be proof of the facts required," and on that account the courts held that those oaths were extrajudicial, because not required or not efficient under the statute. Consequently, in order to get around a certain decision in the Federal courts in 30 Federal Reporter, we have changed the language of the statute. The old language was, I think, "But the oath of the applicant shall in no case be allowed to prove his residence." We have changed that so as to make it an affirmative provision, "The oath of the applicant shall in all cases be required," thus making it a judicial oath. Consequently, if there is any falsity in the oath, it can be punished.

Then, in addition to that, an affidavit by two citizens of the United States corroborating the oath of the applicant is required. That, in conjunction with the previous paragraph (paragraph 2) makes falsity in that affidavit punishable as perjury in the United States court, which at present it is not. That was rendered necessary by the decision in the Gottskrau case, in 30 Federal Reporter. I have not the page of that case, but it might be interesting to look it up, for you will find it annotated right down to this very last case. That was really the foundation of the first decision, which led up to the decision that the United States courts have no jurisdiction; and the State court having none, the culprit can go.

I might say right here (if you will allow me to digress) that while we have not yet reached the conclusion of the cases we have endeavored to indict these witnesses for aiding and abetting in the obtaining of certificates of citizenship by fraud and false testimony, and I really think that in that I will succeed. So far no demurrer has been interposed to the indictments, and I think that when we get to the final point the circuit court of appeals will sustain our contention; but while we are amending the law, we might as well make it perfect and not be required to go to the courts and ask them to give us an interpretation to help us out.

Another thing following that very paragraph, which has perhaps slipped Mr. Houghton's mind for the minute, because he did not have it marked, is this——

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, I am sorry to call your attention to it, but we have not the permission of the House to sit after 12 o'clock.

Mr. MARX. Can I have just about five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; we will extend the time.

Mr. MARX. Because this is the gist of the whole thing.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, go right along.

Mr. HOUGHTON (to Mr. Marx). Go right ahead and say whatever you have in mind.

Mr. MARX. This is the gist of the whole bill.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Yes; right here.

Mr. MARX (reading from page 4 of the bill). "All the proceedings required in this condition to be performed in the court shall be recorder by the clerk thereof, and the said applicant at the time of making his application as aforesaid shall file with the clerk of the court, to be made part of the proceedings required herein, a certificate from the collector of the port at which said alien arrived., or from the commissioner of immigration of said port, as the case may be, showing his age, date of arrival, port of entry, the steamer by which he arrived, and a physical description of the applicant, which shall be countersigned by the said applicant in the presence of the officer who issues the same, who shall attest the same."

Now, gentlemen, that is this bill. Of course, this bill is practically the old law as it stands, with this addition, which cures all of the defects we have found. The other parts of the bill simply carry out this one general idea. Now, the idea of that is this:

First, every immigrant has his record at Ellis Island, when he lands. Of course that record as it stands now is in a jumbled condition. When we wish to trace it back, as we do in these prosecutions, if a man tells us he arrived on a certain date by a certain steamer, we can get the manifest of that steamer; but if he tells us a lie by one day, or gives us incorrectly the name of the steamer, we never can find it out, because there is no index and nothing by which we can prosecute our search.

Now, you can see how different it would be if, before the applicant can get his first papers, his declaration of intention, he must produce his certificate of landing from the Commissioner of Immigration—a fee for which is provided here, so as to reimburse the Commissioner for having an additional clerk to assist in this work. We do not provide for the additional clerk in this bill, because we were ignorant of the exact method of providing for new officers under these bills.

That is something that we have had no experience with; but there is a fee provided for issuing this certificate. Now, then, if we have this certificate when the man makes his declaration, we have filed in court a statement showing his age at the time of arrival, which prevents him from subsequently stating that he arrived at an earlier age than he actually did. That accomplishes one thing. Then, in order to prevent that same alien from taking his declaration of intention, getting two or three duplicates, and using those duplicates to get licenses for his various friends, we have this qualification that he shall countersign in the presence of the officer issuing the certificate; and that countersign goes through the entire bill up to the date of his naturalization; and it is provided in the bill that he shall countersign his final papers in the presence of the officer of the court granting the certificate of naturalization. So that by that means we have the counter signature, we have the signature of the applicant from the very minute he takes his first step in his process of becoming a citizen of the United States, and then we have the clerk of the court having each preceding paper before him before another paper is issued; and in that manner there can be no impersonation and no fraud.

That is the point of this provision.

That brings us back to the argument which I heard while I was sitting here, as to the educational qualifications of immigrants; and of course that is an open question, I admit. But in the United States, where citizenship is rapidly increasing in value, I think our citizenship should be worth something.

Mr. BONYNGE. You provide that the applicants must be able to write their names?

Mr. MARX. Well, if the man has any intelligence, the first thing he will do is to learn to write his name, and if he has no intelligence he can be taught to write his name, if he has enough brains to be willing to study for, say, a month. Consequently, we do not go as far as this bill that was discussed before we arose.

We do not compel the immigrant to have an educational qualification, but we compel him to have enough intelligence to be able to learn to write his name before he declares his first intention to become a citizen. And if citizenship in the United States is to be held so cheap that to attain it a man will not take the trouble to go to a school for a few weeks and learn to write his name, which we require as a safeguard to prevent fraud, then I say that man is not entitled to become a citizen.

Mr. ADAMS. I know they are so kept now; but are the records of the Immigration Bureau in such shape that this man can get his data easily?

Mr. HOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. MARX. Why, if this bill passes, I suppose it can only apply to future immigrants. The bill provides for certain fees. Of course the immigration is so large that they will amount to a hundred times more than will be necessary to pay for the clerk. Consequently the Commissioner would be in duty bound, in order to be able to comply with the law, to have a clerk, and to keep these things in tabulated form, or, rather, indexed according to names, or even according to the first, second, and third letters of the names, for we have so many hundreds of thousands of immigrants every year that it would be absolutely necessary to tabulate the names and arrange them alphabetically up to the third or fourth letter of the names before they can be referred to readily. Then the Government will have a vast amount of money on hand from this source.

Mr. HOUGHTON. I just want to say this: This is a safeguard against the issuing of duplicates or certified copies; because, let me tell you, gentlemen, that every single day in our courts there is a line of men that reaches from here to the street, three-fourths of whom are not going in there to get their final papers, but to get duplicates; and there is no way on earth for the clerk of the court, or any man connected with the court, to tell whether the person who applies for the duplicate is a person who originally applied or not. They issue those duplicates, and these aliens take these duplicates and not only use them for their friends in the city, but send them over to Europe and out into the country; so that persons who are not entitled to vote upon them do so—they and their sons, if they have sons. They do that, gentlemen; and this is to prevent that.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Why should they issue these duplicates?

Mr. HOUGHTON. They do it; and I want to tell you, gentlemen, that in our investigation in New York City we found that when these people would appear before the civil-service boards, as they have to do, to pass the examination so that they can obtain positions in the city department, sometimes out of 25 papers 12 would be fraudulent; out of 40 papers 20 would be fraudulent; and that is the way it has been going on. They would be fraudulent in one way or another, as I have mentioned; and there would be a great many of those duplicates, fraudulent duplicates.

Mr. MARX. Mr. Douglass asked why they issue those duplicates. You can go to the clerk's office, and if the clerk refuses to issue you a hundred duplicates of any naturalization paper on record, not your own, but anybody else's, you can get a mandamus and compel him to issue them to you. That is because a duplicate is simply a certified copy of a court record, and anybody in the world is entitled to a certified copy of any court record which is not sealed, as is done in divorce cases.

Consequently this will be the only exception upon the statute books, and the clerk is authorized by law not to give a duplicate to anybody who can not countersign similarly to the signature upon his records. That is an absolute safeguard. Of course, we will admit that this law, as amended, is not perfect. We are working on these naturalization frauds, and we expect to take, perhaps, a year before we halfway clean up the citizenship of the United States and get rid of these fraudulently naturalized citizens. It will take us, perhaps, about a year. During that year we will live and learn, and by the time we get through cleaning them up we will know more precisely what is needed in this line. Yesterday we convicted two men, and sent one of them away on the spot for two years; the day before we sent about seven of them to the Kings County Penitentiary; and we have about fifty more to dispose of to-morrow and the next day and Friday. We hope to send them away for varying terms, and in that way we expect to prosecute, perhaps, fifteen hundred people in the city of New York during the next year, and so inflict the punishment upon the general community that they will not forget it for some time to come. But there will be a time when they will forget it, unless the law is safeguarded.

Mr. GOULDEN. Do these abuses prevail elsewhere?

Mr. HOUGHTON. Oh, yes; all over the country.

Mr. MARX. I had a case referred to me for investigation by the Department of Justice, it having been sent to the Department of Justice from the Department of State, where it was "up to" a judge in the State of New York, in one of the upper counties. After my investigation was completed the judge admitted that he was careless; and I told him that I thought he was almost criminally careless, but under the circumstances I was willing to consent to the cancellation of the certificate, and let it go at that. The Department was satisfied to have that course taken, because there was a possible element of doubt as to good faith on the part of the judge, and it was thought that a conviction would not lie. We, therefore, did not think we ought to smirch a man's character under such circumstances, especially as the man had been highly vouched for, and had only been on the bench about a year. But that is the situation all through the State of New York.

Mr. GOULDEN. Were many of these certificates sold?

Mr. HOUGHTON. Oh, a great many; and they have paid up to $65 for them.

Mr. MARX. Every man that has been arrested has admitted sales amounting to a hundred; and when a culprit admits that he sold a hundred the probabilities are that he sold a thousand. They have sold them from $12 as the minimum price up to——

Mr. HOUGHTON. Sixty-five.

Mr. MARX. I have had a bunch of them at $50.

Now, it does not stop at the State of New York. The Armenians do it up in Rhode Island. They have been prosecuted. The authorities there have endeavored to stop it. The trouble is that some of the clerks of the courts are in collusion with these people; I will admit that.

Some of the county clerks in the State of New York are willing to close one eye in these cases, because in that manner they are able to sell these papers; they sell these poor devils "red, white, and blue papers," as they call them, with a little ornamentation, a red, white, and blue American flag on them, and charge them $2.50 instead of a dollar. That extra dollar and a half goes into the county clerk's pocket. All that is stopped by this provision; and it prevents the possibility of these fellows walking up like a bunch of sheep and simply handing in their two dollars and a half and getting a paper whether they are entitled to it or not.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Now, gentlemen, General Burnett's letter to Mr. Goulden, which I dictated, explains the rest of these paragraphs.

Mr. GOULDEN. I am going to submit that.

Mr. HOUGHTON. The one in reference to giving power to the district attorney to summon witnesses is especially important.

Mr. MARX. If the gentleman will wait for just a moment on that one point——

Mr. BONYNGE. What is the point?

Mr. MARX. This is a new paragraph, which gives the district attorney power to subpœna all citizens of the United States for examination in the event of suspicion as to the genuineness of their papers.

Mr. ADAMS. What page is it on?

Mr. MARX. Page 7, paragraph 11. In the State of New York we do not need that law, because we have a superintendent of elections who is authorized by statute to subpœna all witnesses. This paragraph is copied from the State law, I believe, and is practically the same as the State law. We simply go to the superintendent of elections, and so long as he is in sympathy with this movement he subpœnas any voters whom we ask; and under the stress of that subpœna they are examined, and we can ascertain from their admissions whether their papers are genuine or not.

But outside of the State of New York, there is not any such law, and as this prosecution is going to continue, starting from New York as the center we are going to work westward; we are going up to Troy, then out to Buffalo; then we are going to work our way to Chicago and St. Louis, and go right to the coast and back, and clean up the citizenship throughout the United States. We need some such provision outside of the State of New York. We do not care for it for the State of New York, because we have that power there as long as we have a superintendent of elections who is willing; but outside of the State we need it very badly.

There is no law now in the United States permitting us to use the testimony of a person convicted of a crime. In the case that I referred to in the beginning, against the clerk of the court, we were obliged, because we had no law permitting us to use the testimony of a person convicted of a crime, to pardon five of these parties who had been implicated in naturalization frauds.

Mr. ROBB. You say that a man who is convicted of a crime can not testify?

Mr. HOUGHTON. He can not testify—not in the United States courts.

Mr. ROBB. Then there was a very grievous error in the prosecution of those cases in St. Louis.

Mr. MARX. That was under a State law, was it not?

Mr. ROBB. They were prosecuted in the Federal courts.

Mr. HOUGHTON. You can not do it in the Federal courts.

Mr. ROBB. These men were taken out of the penitentiary and sent down there to testify, and they were afterwards pardoned on the testimony given.

Mr. MARX. Counsel for the defense did not raise the objection then.

Mr. ROBB. A very able judge tried the case I know.

Mr. MARX. Well, he did not raise the objection; he may not have understood the point.

Mr. HOUGHTON. But it can not be done under the United States law.

Mr. BONYNGE. They pardoned them afterwards, you say?

Mr. ROBB. Yes; they pardoned them afterwards.

Mr. HOUGHTON. They can not do it under the United States law, and in the State of New York there is a provision to that effect; so, as I say, that point was raised on us.

Mr. BONYNGE. Which is your section, please?

Mr. HOUGHTON. Section 8, page 13. I have therefore put a section in there which so provides that we will not have to pardon persons convicted of a crime when we wish to use them to give evidence and trace out the line of a crime. Many a time we have to use a person convicted of a crime; and, as I say, in this case where we have had the clerk of the court on trial, we had to pardon five persons, because each one was a necessary link in proving our case and corroborating others. So that that is a very important section to be passed.

Mr. MARX. I would like to say just one word in conclusion——

The CHAIRMAN. I think we will have to adjourn here, gentlemen.

Mr. MARX. Just one minute, Mr. Chairman; it will not take me one minute. I want to say this—that during this year we will be learning more about this naturalization law; and if the bill in its present state is passed, and a commission, say of lawyers, is appointed to revise the naturalization laws between this session and the next session of Congress, we will then be in a position to get up an absolutely perfect naturalization bill.

After consultation with the President, Attorney-General, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, I introduced a joint resolution in lieu of the bills named, providing for the appointment of a commission of three to investigate the whole matter and to report a measure that would remedy the evils and simplify matters. This resolution was reported from the committee, carrying with it an appropriation of $5,000 for the actual necessary expenses, but met with the opposition of the Speaker; hence failed being enacted into law.

The President, realizing the importance of the matter, however, named a commission consisting of three, one from the Attorney-General's office, one from the Department of Commerce and Labor, and one from the United States Treasury. This commission made a thorough examination, and two reports have been made, from which the committee, in the wisdom of its members and with some additions, have brought in by a unanimous vote bill No. 15442, now under discussion. It is a comprehensive measure, embodying the salient points of House bill No. 12762, introduced in 1903, and reintroduced in the present Congress in December, 1905, by myself, and known as No. 8424. [Applause.]

It is made up of thirty-two sections and, taken as a whole, seems satisfactory, except that portion of section 9 requiring an alien to be able to read, speak, and understand the English language. I would favor an amendment to strike that out, as the other portion of this section is sufficient to afford the proper protection to the sanctity of the ballot. I shall offer an amendment later striking out this clause, or at least these words, on page 9, section 9, line 24, "read" and "understand." The fees having been reduced by the committee, I have no objections to that section. If I had any other criticism to make, it would be that the bill is not drastic enough in its punishment of the crimes against the laws entitling aliens to the great boon of American citizenship. No one not familiar with the subject could possibly realize the extent of the evils and the dangers attending this matter of assimilating the alien into our body politic and making citizens that are to help us guard and advance our glorious free institutions. This bill will do much to stop fraud and to help purify the atmosphere in the matter of naturalization. It is therefore entitled to our favorable consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes' time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the dominant purpose of the bill under consideration is to protect American citizenship against the fraudulent naturalization of aliens, and incidentally to impose additional qualifications on the right to become a citizen. The bill, in the main, is a good one. It contains a number of wholesome safeguards against fraudulent naturalization, and it provides for the cancellation of certificates of citizenship that have been procured through fraud and perjury.

In my opinion naturalization laws should be rigidly protected against fraud and imposition, and, on the other hand, they should be fairly liberal, so that practically all of the people who come from foreign countries to permanently identify themselves with us may be enabled to become citizens and share the privileges and immunities of citizenship and be required to assist in bearing the burdens of government and contributing toward its defense. I conceive it to be a very unwise policy for this or any other country to permit a substantial number of aliens to live permanently within its borders without enjoying the rights and bearing the responsibilities of citizenship. Our scrutiny and care ought to be directed, in the main, to the admission of aliens at our ports, in the first place. Our policy should be to admit no alien into this country for permanent residence whom we do not believe at the time of his admission will become fitted for ultimate citizenship, and I express the hope that at an early day Congress will enact a law imposing more rigid restrictions upon immigration. I do not mean to be understood as favoring such restrictions as will keep from our shores men of foreign birth who will thoroughly identify themselves with our civilization and our system of Government. This country owes much of the splendid condition it enjoys to-day to the contributions made toward its general advancement by men of foreign birth, and it has always been the policy of the Government to be liberal in admitting those from foreign countries whose presence here will tend to promote the general upbuilding of our civilization.

Some criticism might justly be made against the provision in the bill requiring a preliminary declaration of intention before ultimate citizenship can be granted. The bill provides that the preliminary declaration must be made not less than two nor more than five years before the final application for citizenship. In order to secure citizenship the applicant must be free from certain objectionable qualities described in the bill, and he must be able to read and understand the English language. In his preliminary declaration he is not required to possess the educational qualifications. By his declaration of intention an alien severs his allegiance to his foreign sovereign, and still he does not become a citizen of the United States. If he shall finally be unable to secure citizenship, he will be altogether without a sovereign to look to for protection in exigencies that might possibly arise. He will be a man without a sovereign. Of course an alien who lives in this country with the permission of this Government is bound to yield a temporary and qualified allegiance to the Government, and, on the other hand, the Government is obliged to secure to him a correspondingly qualified protection, but he is not a citizen. Many of the rights and privileges of citizenship, such as the ownership of land and the inheriting of property, denied in many of the States to aliens, do not belong to him. In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, it would be better to have no preliminary declaration of intention at all. The commission appointed by President Roosevelt a short time ago to investigate the subject of naturalization, in its report submitted to Congress last December, recommended the abolition of the declaration of intention. This country and Mexico are the only countries that require a preliminary declaration as a condition precedent to citizenship. The bill provides adequate means to ascertain the identity of an applicant for citizenship; so the preliminary declaration can subserve no useful purpose, and it may in some instances work an irreparable hardship. In the States of Arkansas, Indiana, Kansas, Michigan, Missouri, Nebraska, Texas, Oregon, and Wisconsin an alien may vote upon complying with the State laws, after having made his preliminary declaration to become a citizen of the United States. Under possible exigencies of American politics the election of a President and Vice-President and the determination of the policies of the Government might be determined by the votes of aliens. In all the other States no person is allowed to vote who is not a citizen of the United States. If the preliminary declaration of intention should be dispensed with, no alien could vote in the nine States I have mentioned. Sir, I believe the election laws ought to prevent anyone from participating in elections in this country until he has become a citizen of the United States.

There have been numerous frauds committed against the naturalization laws, chiefly in the large cities of the country. These frauds have been induced in the main by the desire to vote, to secure protection abroad, and to secure rights and privileges under the labor laws of some of the States and municipalities, which prevent anyone who is not a citizen of the United States from being employed in any public work. An alien who has declared his intention to become a citizen and yet can not comply with the requirement that he shall read and understand the English language in order to consummate his citizenship is denied employment in any kind of public work in a number of the States and cities. I have been informed that the State Department has considered a possible modification of treaties with foreign countries in order that immigrants from those countries may be entitled during their sojourn here to all the privileges and immunities of citizenship in so far as industrial rights are concerned. It would, in my judgment, be of very doubtful propriety for the Government to enter into treaties of that character. It would most likely excite deep feeling and hostility on the part of States and municipalities.

I desire to call the attention of the House especially to the abuses that grow out of the right of protection of naturalized citizens in foreign countries. A great many aliens come to this country, remain long enough to comply with the naturalization laws and secure certificates of citizenship, then return to the country of their nativity, take up permanent residence therein, and claim protection of the United States as American citizens. Many fraudulent certificates of citizenship have been issued to this class of aliens. Many certificates that are pure forgeries have been sold and claim has been made thereunder for the protection of this country in foreign lands. Abuses have become such that it is a constant source of embarrassment and irritation between the United States and certain foreign governments.

It is the policy of our laws to issue passports to all citizens who desire to travel abroad and to protect naturalized citizens in foreign countries to the same extent as native citizens are protected. The laws of the country and the policy of the Government have made absolutely no distinction between native and naturalized citizens either at home or abroad, and they should make no distinction. When an alien becomes a citizen of the United States in good faith he is entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizenship wherever he may rightfully be, whether at home or abroad, but if an alien comes here with the intention of remaining only long enough to become naturalized and then to go to a foreign country for permanent domicile and claim the protection of this Government, it is a fraud not only against the United States, but it would be a fraud against the country to which he went to live.

In all of the non-Christian countries, excepting Japan, and in some semibarbarous countries the United States, under special treaties, secures to American citizens living in those countries the right to be tried upon criminal charges, not under the laws and in the courts of those countries, but in American consular courts in accordance with American law and usages. This is what is called "the policy of extraterritoriality." It is the boast of this Government that it adequately safeguards the rights of citizens who are on trial for life or liberty, and the fact that these safeguards may be carried by American citizens into foreign countries where the rights and privileges of the individual are not so sacredly considered, is a privilege of inestimable value, but it is designed only for real American citizens.

A considerable number of our foreign-born population secure passports to foreign countries within a few months after they become citizens, and many of them never return to the United States and never expect to return when they leave this country bearing with them certificates of American citizenship. A great deal of irritation has been created, particularly in parts of Turkey, by subjects of that Empire who have come to America and gotten certificates of naturalization, returned there as permanent residents, and claimed protection of the American Government. Serious international troubles may possibly arise from this situation, and it is highly important that the Government protect itself as far as possible against this source of fraud and danger. It is said that there are over a thousand natives of Turkey who are permanently residing in the city of Jerusalem at this time who hold certificates and passports as American citizens and who claim the rights of American citizens in the country of their origin under the provisions of existing treaties. The Commission on Naturalization, speaking of this class of men, said:

> It appears from the records of the passport bureau of the State Department that approximately 16 per cent of the naturalized citizens who apply for passports are naturalized within six months of the date of their application—that is to say, they are naturalized, it is fair to assume, after they have determined to go abroad. Living in this country as aliens, they avoid the responsibility and duties of citizens; going abroad, they secure one of the highest privileges of citizenship—that of protection in case of need while in a foreign state. Some of them have come to the United States for no other purpose than to escape the duties of citizenship in their parent state and remain here only long enough to become naturalized as American citizens, when they leave our jurisdiction.

President Grant, in 1869, in his first annual message to Congress, in discussing this class of people, said:

> They reside permanently away from the United States; they contribute nothing to its revenues; they avoid the duties of citizenship, and they only make themselves known by a claim for protection.

Legislation has been repeatedly recommended by various Presidents that would authorize the State Department to relieve the Federal Government from the embarrassment of dealing with this class of individuals. The trouble is not confined to aliens who return to the country of their nativity, but many aliens secure naturalization under our laws, obtain American passports, and go to countries in the West Indies to carry on business, to live permanently, and claim protection as American citizens there.

Abuses of the rights of citizenship came to be so grievous and a cause of so much trouble to the Government that some years ago the State Department, without express authority of law, issued instructions to American diplomatic and consular representatives in foreign countries that where one born abroad had obtained naturalization under our laws and had returned to the country of his origin or to any other foreign country and taken up a permanent domicile and continued to remain therein for a period of five years, with no apparent intention of returning to the United States, that the protection accorded to American citizens should be withdrawn from him.

Citizenship is conferred upon aliens with the implied understanding that they are to become permanent residents of the United States, and for the rights and privileges they receive by virtue of their acquired citizenship they are in duty bound to yield allegiance to this Government, to contribute toward its maintenance, and assist in its defense. The class of individuals to which I have referred voluntarily expatriate themselves, and for all practical purposes become foreigners. They put themselves in a condition where they contribute absolutely nothing toward the maintenance of our Government. They can not be called upon to assist in its defense. By virtue of every principle of equity and fair dealing they have forfeited the right to claim protection from this Government.

Under the law as it exists at this time an applicant for citizenship is not required to state or prove that it is his intention to become a permanent resident of the United States if he shall become a citizen. The court granting citizenship may be apprised of the fact that it is his intention to permanently absent himself from the country and yet the right must be granted. One of the most salutary features of the bill under consideration is that it requires an applicant for naturalization to solemnly swear that it is his intention to become a permanent resident of the United States if citizenship shall be granted to him.

Section 17 of the pending bill contains provisions for the cancellation of fraudulent certificates of citizenship. If any alien shall impose upon the court by perjured testimony, or if a certificate has been issued in violation of law, the bill makes the certificate invalid and authorizes proceedings in any court of competent jurisdiction to cancel the certificate of citizenship, and notice of cancellation shall be sent to the Department of Commerce and Labor and duly recorded. Naturalization is a privilege of great value, and proceedings to establish it ought to be solemnly and rigidly observed. The boon of American citizenship must not be cheapened by lax and unconventional methods of courts and public officers who administer the law, but once granted it should endure for all time. It is conferred by the Federal Constitution and by laws authorized by the Constitution. When citizenship is once legally granted, of course it can not be invalidated, and it ought not to be, but no one questions that it is within the power of the Government to provide for the cancellation of certificates of citizens that have been fraudulently obtained. A certificate tainted with fraud is in the sense of the law no certificate at all.

When the time comes for proposing amendments to the bill, I intend to offer an amendment providing in effect that where an applicant secures a certificate of citizenship under the present bill, if it should become a law, and within five years after securing his certificate returns to the country of his nativity or goes to any other foreign country and takes up a permanent domicile therein, it shall be regarded as prima facie evidence of a lack of intention on his part to become a permanent resident of the United States at the time he applied for and obtained his certificate of citizenship, and in the absence of other evidence it will be sufficient to justify the court in a proper proceeding to cancel his certificate as fraudulent. The bill provides for cancellation of certificates of citizenship upon constructive notice where the holder of such certificate is out of the United States. I have no doubt of the power of Congress to make such provision. Citizenship is a status, and the cancellation of the certificate does not operate as a judgment in personam, but as a judgment in rem. The decree canceling a certificate simply operates upon a status that the holder of the certificate has obtained in this country, under its laws upon fraudulent representation; for instance, upon the representation that he intended to become a permanent resident of this country, when, in fact, he did not.

If this amendment should be adopted, it would afford a great deal of relief to the Government against the troublesome claims of holders of spurious certificates abroad. It will not altogether cure the evil, for an alien might reside in this country for five years to secure citizenship and might continue to reside here for five years after having secured it and then go abroad and permanently expatriate himself from this country and claim protection from this Government; but if it was understood that it required a residence in this country of at least ten years—five years before citizenship and five years afterwards—to enable the holder to secure the protection of American citizen in his permanent residence abroad, there would be little inducement for such people to attempt frauds against the naturalization laws of this country for such purpose. Of course citizens of the United States, whether native or naturalized, who are in foreign lands, on business or for pleasure or health, for any length of time do not and should not forfeit protection as citizens. The amendment I propose is aimed chiefly at the class of aliens who come here for the sole purpose of securing citizenship to be used abroad to protect them against the impositions and exactions of foreign countries where they intend to permanently live.

The effect of the amendment will not be to decitizenize an American citizen nor to take from a citizen any of his rights as such. It simply provides a rule of evidence by which courts may, in the absence of contrary proof, infer a fraudulent design on the part of the holder of the certificate in the first instance to secure citizenship for improper purposes. Fraud vitiates all proceedings and can be the basis of no right in law. It is in line with the theory of section 17 of the bill, and I am sure that its adoption would afford much relief to the country in a direction where some specific remedy is badly needed.

I will print in the RECORD as an appendix to my remarks a circular letter by the State Department to the diplomatic and consular officers of the United States on March 27, 1899, respecting the rights of holders of American passports in foreign countries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's amendment may be read now for the information of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana being read at this time for the information of the committee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 25 on page 16 the following:

"If any alien who shall have secured a certificate of citizenship under the provisions of this act shall, within five years after the issuance of such certificate, return to the country of his nativity, or go to any other foreign country, and take permanent residence therein, it shall be considered prima facie evidence of a lack of intention on the part of such alien to become a permanent citizen of the United States at the time of filing his application for citizenship, and, in the absence of countervailing evidence, it shall be sufficient in the proper proceeding to authorize the cancellation of his certificate of citizenship as fraudulent, and the diplomatic and consular officers of the United State in foreign countries shall from time to time, through the Department of State, furnish the Department of Justice with the names of those within their respective jurisdictions who have such certificates of citizenship and who have taken permanent residence in the country of their nativity, or in any other foreign country, and such statements, duly certified, shall be admissible in evidence in all courts in proceedings to cancel certificates of citizenship."

PASSPORTS FOR PERSONS RESIDING OR SOJOURNING ABROAD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 27, 1889.

To the diplomatic and consular officers of the United States.

GENTLEMEN: It has been represented to the Department that a greater uniformity than now prevails is desirable in the treatment of applications for passports from persons who allege American citizenship and who have been absent from the United States for a prolonged period and are unable or refuse to give a definite promise of return. Diplomatic officers and consular officers having authority to issue passports will, therefore, follow the general principles of this instruction; but wherever a doubt arises as to the propriety of issuing or withholding a passport, they will communicate all the facts of the case to the Department and await its instructions.

This Government does not discriminate between native-born and naturalized citizens in according them protection while they are abroad, equality of treatment being required by the laws of the United States. (Secs. 1999 and 2000, R. S.) But in determining the question of conservation of American citizenship and the right to receive a passport it is only reasonable to take into account the purpose for which the citizenship is obtained. A naturalized citizen who returns to the country of his origin and there resides without any tangible manifestation of an intention to return to the United States may therefore generally be assumed to have lost the right to receive the protection of the United States. His naturalization in the United States can not be used as a cloak to protect him from obligations to the country of his origin while he performs none of the duties of citizenship to the country which naturalized him. The statements of loyalty to this Government which he may make are contradicted by the circumstance of his residence, and are open to the suspicion of being influenced by the advantages he derives by avoiding the performance of the duties of citizenship to any country. It is not to be understood by this that naturalized American citizens returning to the country of their origin are to be refused the protection of a passport. On the contrary, full protection should be accorded to them until they manifest an effectual abandonment of their residence and domicile in the United States.

A passport is in its terms a statement that the person it names and describes is a citizen of the United States, and it is forbidden by law to issue one to any other than a citizen of the United States. (Sec. 4076, R. S.) The Secretary of State, and under him our diplomatic and consular officers, with certain restrictions, may grant and issue passports under such rules as the President prescribes. (Sec. 4075, R. S.) As a general statement, passports are issued to all law-abiding American citizens who apply for them and comply with the rules prescribed, but it is not obligatory to issue one to every citizen who desires it, and the rejection of an application is not to be construed as per se a denial by this Department or its agents of the American citizenship of a person whose application is so rejected.

A condition precedent to the granting of a passport is, under the law and the rules prescribed by authority of the law, that the citizenship of the applicant and his domicile in the United States and intention to return to it with the purpose of residing and performing the duties of citizenship shall be satisfactorily established. One who has expatriated himself can not, therefore, receive a passport.

Expatriation has been defined by Mr. Hamilton Fish as "the quitting of one's country with an abandonment of allegiance and with the view of becoming permanently a resident and citizen of some other country, resulting in the loss of the party's preexisting character of citizenship." Thus, a person "may reside abroad for purposes of health, of education, of amusement, of business for an indefinite period; he may acquire a commercial or civil domicile there, but if he do so sincerely and bona fide animo revertendi, and do nothing inconsistent with his preexisting allegiance, he will not thereby have taken any step toward self-expatriation. But if, instead of this, he permanently withdraws himself and his property and places both where neither can be made to contribute to the national necessities, acquires a political domicile in a foreign country, and avows his purpose not to return, he has placed himself in the position where his country has the right to presume that he has made his election of expatriation." There being no legislative definition of what constitutes expatriation, it is a fact to be determined by the circumstances surrounding each case that arises.

But even where expatriation may not be established, a person who is permanently resident and domiciled outside of the United States can not receive a passport. "When a person who has attained his majority removes to another country and settles himself there, he is stamped with the national character of his new domicile; and this is so, notwithstanding he may entertain a floating intention of returning to his original residence or citizenship at some future period, and the presumption of law with respect to residence in a foreign country, especially if it be protracted, is that the party is there animo manendi, and it lies upon him to explain it." (Mr. Fish to the President, For. Rels. 1873, 1186 et seq.) If, in making application for a passport, he swears that he intends to return to the United States within a given period, and afterwards, in applying for a renewal of his passport, it appears that he did not fulfill his intention, this circumstance awakens a doubt as to his real purposes, which he must dispel. (For. Rels. 1890, 11.)

The treatment of the individual cases as they arise must depend largely upon attendant circumstances. When an applicant has completely severed his relations with the United States; has neither kindred nor property here; has married and established a home in a foreign land; has engaged in business or professional pursuits wholly in foreign countries; has so shaped his plans as to make it impossible or improbable that they will ever include a domicile in this country—these and similar circumstances should exercise an adverse influence in determining the question whether or not a passport should issue. On the other hand, a favorable conclusion may be influenced by the fact that family and property connections with the United States have been kept up; that reasons of health render travel and return impossible or inexpedient, and that pecuniary exigencies interfere with the desire to return. But the circumstance which is perhaps the most favorable of all is that the applicant is residing abroad in representation and extension of legitimate American enterprises.

The status of American citizens resident in a semibarbarous country or in a country in which the United States exercises extraterritorial jurisdiction is singular. If they were subjects of such power before they acquired citizenship in the United States, they are amenable, upon returning, to the same restrictions of residence as are laid down in the beginning of this instruction, and for the same reasons; but if they are not in that category, their residence may be indefinitely prolonged, since obviously they can not become subjects of the native government without grave peril to their safety. The Department's position with respect to these citizens has uniformly been to afford them the protection of a passport as long as their pursuits are legitimate and not prejudicial to the friendly relations of this Government with the government within whose limits they are residing; and the Department has even held that persons who are members of a distinctly American community in Turkey and avail themselves of the extraterritorial rights given by Turkey to such communities may inherit their rights as American citizens, and that section 1993 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which provides that "the rights of citizenship shall not descend to children whose fathers never resided in the United States," is not applicable, such descendants being regarded, through their inherited extraterritorial rights recognized by Turkey herself, as born and continuing in the jurisdiction of the United States. (For. Rels. 1887, 1125).

I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant, JOHN HAY.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana being read at this time for the information of the committee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 25 on page 16 the following:

"If any alien who shall have secured a certificate of citizenship under the provisions of this act shall, within five years after the issuance of such certificate, return to the country of his nativity, or go to any other foreign country, and take permanent residence therein, it shall be considered prima facie evidence of a lack of intention on the part of such alien to become a permanent citizen of the United States at the time of filing his application for citizenship, and, in the absence of countervailing evidence, it shall be sufficient in the proper proceeding to authorize the cancellation of his certificate of citizenship as fraudulent, and the diplomatic and consular officers of the United States in foreign countries shall from time to time, through the Department of State, furnish the Department of Justice with the names of those within their respective jurisdictions who have such certificates of citizenship and who have taken permanent residence in the country of their nativity, or in any other foreign country, and such statements, duly certified, shall be admissible in evidence in all courts in proceedings to cancel certificates of citizenship."

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

[Mr. McGAVIN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, I feel quite confident that this bill has been prepared with the subject of naturalization in the cities chiefly in mind. But applying it to the rural districts and the larger Territorial organizations of the West it seems to me it will work a very great hardship upon the class of foreigners who desire citizenship and against whom there is generally no objection. If the provisions in this bill were applied to the metropolis of San Francisco or Boston or New York I would not profess to know enough about the subject to discuss it, but I can see many hardships in the bill as applied to men working in the mines or in the lumber regions or on the ranches at a distance from the county seat. Under the law of California a person must be naturalized at least ninety days before election day. This bill provides that before he can be naturalized he must file his petition or his first papers in the matter ninety days before the final hearing—that is, six months, and it provides that at the time he files the original petition for naturalization he must have been in the State a year, thereby compelling a very large class of people through the West to be residents of the State for a year and a half before they can be naturalized. It provides again for the filing of a statement of such a complex nature that I am satisfied that at least a very large per cent of the people would make fatal errors in preparing such a statement if they were not assisted by an attorney.

Let us note briefly the procedure required by this bill for gaining citizenship, having in mind a man who is not an attorney or one not accustomed to drawing papers:

First, he must make and fill in duplicate a petition in writing and duly verified, in which he states his name, residence, occupation, date and place of birth, the place from which he emigrated, date and place of arrival in the United States, and the name of the vessel on which he arrived; the time and place of declaring his intentions to become a citizen; if married, the names, ages, and birthplace of each member of his family. A somewhat lengthy statement as to his views and citizenship, polygamy, and his intentions as to remaining domiciled in the United States. Whether he has ever been denied naturalization, and if so, the cause, and show that that cause is now removed, "and every fact material to his naturalization, and required to be proved upon the final hearing of his application."

This long and technical petition shall be verified by two witnesses and who shall state in addition that they have personal knowledge that the alien has resided in the country five years, and in the State or Territory one year.

Preceding all this, the alien must have applied to the Department of Commerce and Labor and obtained a certificate of the time, place, and manner of his arrival in this country, and a copy of his "first papers," both of which must be filed with the foregoing verified petition. If he can not prove continuous residence by present witnesses, he may file depositions showing residence for part of the time, "upon notice to the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization and the United States attorney for the district in which said witnesses may reside."

Each and all of these provisions appear to be jurisdictional. No wheel can turn until they have been complied with, and the bill does not seem to give the court any leeway in the matter of exercising the nonperformance of these multitudinous conditions. Certainly, here is a great deal of painstaking and technical work. How many aliens, remembering dates and our names of cities and courts but imperfectly, could comply with these demands? And what good purpose results from all of this circumstantiality? It will require the services of a pretty careful attorney to get all of these papers in shape, so as to give the court jurisdiction to hear the cause. And it should not be forgotten that the question of jurisdiction will follow this would-be citizen through all his vocations in life. If he be called to serve as a juror, grand or trial, or be called to serve the country in any civil or military capacity, or claims the protection of the flag which he thinks he has adopted, the legality of his naturalization will turn primarily upon the correctness of this apparently useless, but complex petition.

Petition being made and filed, the clerk gives ninety days' notice—a procedure of no practical value outside of half a dozen large cities—and sets the case for a "stated date" theretofore fixed by the rules of the court. If the alien is not present on the day fixed—and in large counties and among busy men it will very often be impossible for him to attend with his witnesses on a day fixed three months in advance—there is no provision for having the hearings continued, and, apparently, the whole proceeding would have to be begun over again.

It is clear to my mind, Mr. Chairman, that this procedure is entirely too complicated, that men who would make entirely satisfactory citizens will be deprived of the blessing of citizenship with no corresponding good in any other direction. I am willing to go a long way toward keeping undesirable foreigners out of this country, but substantially every one who should be permitted to come in should be permitted to enjoy the full blessings, privileges, and burdens of citizenship. If they are not fit to be citizens, let them be stopped at the gate of the nation. But having admitted them to our territory, no good will come from making naturalization complex and difficult. The provisions of this bill would work a great hardship on many miners, stockmen, and ranch men in my district, and I can not support it. [Applause.]

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I fully concur in what has just been said by the gentleman from California [Mr. SMITH]. I yield to no man in my desire that we should have no one admitted to citizenship but those who are capable of it and who will make good citizens. I believe that the first place where we should exercise the greatest care is in the admission of foreigners or immigrants, for I am a believer in the doctrine that this great continent of North America should belong to Americans, and that we should permit none to come here and settle who will not in process of time become worthy to share and uphold the blessings of this Republic. I have read this bill but cursorily, yet it seems to me that it does some things that are entirely uncalled for. I shall favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WHARTON] in reference to the reading and writing of some language, for I believe that there may be people who emigrate to this country after they are, say, 40 or 50 years of age and who have lived among their own people all the time—people speaking their language—who may not be able to read and write and speak the English language though they have resided in the country five years, and who yet would make good citizens. This bill requires that there should be furnished all the evidence, it seems to me, that is necessary, and more too, without the paragraph to which I wish to call attention. I find on page 9 a provision in the bill that, it seems to me, is entirely unnecessary and which will in many cases work a great hardship to many who may desire to become naturalized.

Commencing on line 17 there is the provision that at the time of filing his petition there shall be filed with the clerk of the court a certificate from the Department of Commerce and Labor, if the petitioner arrived in the United States since January 1, 1900, stating the date, place, and manner of his arrival in the United States, and the declaration or intention of such petitioner, which certificate and declaration shall be attached to and made a part of said petition. The previous sections of this bill make it necessary for him not only to declare, but to show by two witnesses who have known him intimately, that he has been here at least five years and will make a good citizen, loyal and well affected to the Government. I do not know, though there may be some such, of any statute by which every immigrant coming to this country is reported to the Bureau of Commerce and Labor and has been since 1890. Certainly I do know that there are many who would make excellent citizens that have come across the border from Canada, of which there is no record.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, I will call his attention to the fact that that has been the practice since 1900, and by section 1 of this bill it is provided for by statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield one more minute to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BONYNGE. I call the attention of the gentleman to section 1 of the bill, which provides that he shall be given such certificate.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reiterate in reply what I have perhaps already stated, that there are a large number of immigrants coming to this country from the Dominion of Canada and from Mexico, and who have come here since 1890, of whom, I believe, there can not possibly be any record. Many of them would make the best citizens, and I think this section as it stands should be either amended or stricken from the bill.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, in the limited time remaining for general debate I will not have the opportunity to discuss as fully as I would wish the questions involved in the bill now before us. Whatever legislation may be necessary to safeguard our country against the commission of fraud in the naturalization of aliens ought to be enacted. To legislation that will tend to improve our naturalization laws, wherever within reason and fairness improvement can be made, there will be no objection. Every American citizen, whether native or foreign born, who desires to preserve in all their strength and greatness our American institutions would, of course, seek to keep up the excellent grade and quality of our citizenship and bring within its folds those who, being of good moral character, come to our shores with a bona fide intent to permanently dwell amongst us and to assimilate with the American people. While I congratulate the able and distinguished chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Colorado, who reports this bill, upon the arduous labor he has done and the able efforts and earnestness he has displayed in formulating the bill, I want to say that in my judgment there are several provisions in the pending measure that ought to be very much amended.

Looking at section 9 we find a provision that no alien shall hereafter be naturalized or admitted as a citizen of the United States who can not write in his own language or in the English language, and who can not read, speak, and understand the English language. In other words, it is proposed by the gentleman from Colorado that not only must the applicant be intelligent enough to read and write in some of the recognized languages, but he must be able to read, to speak, and to understand the English language too. The distinguished chairman of the committee is always guided by such a sense of fairness and impartiality that were he upon the bench of a court having power to naturalize he probably would give to the proposed educational-test clause a liberal interpretation. But all judges are not alike—they do not think alike—and in the construction of laws and in the administration of them their views frequently differ widely.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is no standard provided in the bill by which the judge who may be called upon to naturalize may determine the extent of the understanding of the English required of the applicant or of the applicant's English speaking and reading ability or capacity. As this bill is now framed, we are asked to confer, in connection with the proposed educational qualification, a power that the judge may exercise harshly or arbitrarily. Those of this House who have among their constituencies many foreign born can, I am sure, readily conceive of cases where applicants for naturalization can speak the English to an extent sufficient to having his meaning comprehended by his English-speaking neighbors; yet in such a case, though the applicant be ever so learned in his own language, the judge could say to him:

You do not speak the English as well; you do not read it as readily nor understand it as fully and clearly as I judge the law requires you should.

In districts where foreigners are not looked on with favor; in parts of the country where the spirit of true and fair liberality toward the foreign born has not yet found an abiding place, I can readily conceive of just such decisions being made by judges however honestly inclined. There might be as many different views upon the questions I have mooted as there are jurisdictions and tribunals for naturalization.

Do you not see the difficulty that can arise upon the clause which has been called the educational qualification clause. By what standard do you say the judge shall be controlled? Shall the applicant be required to speak the English grammatically? Shall he speak and understand it, and read it too, as well and as nicely as the judicial officer in a particular jurisdiction may require, though his views as regards the test differ ever so widely from that of judges in other jurisdictions?

Mr. Chairman, for all the purposes of an educational qualification, if one is to be imposed, it seems to me that it should suffice if the applicant can write in his own language or in the English language. What we want, after all, in our citizens is character, quality, moral worth, and a loyal attachment to the principles of our American Government. [Applause.]

Some of our very good patriotic American citizens of foreign birth are men who can not speak the English tongue or who speak and read it so poorly that had they to apply for citizenship under such a clause as the Committee on Naturalization proposes they would risk rejection. Yet these men have intelligently read the newspapers, the books, the publications printed in a foreign language. I can call to mind very many good citizens in different cities and towns of this country who have gained their knowledge of current events from the reading of newspapers published in the German, in the French, or some other foreign language. They have read with intelligence, with interest, and with deep comprehension books and periodicals published in the German, the French, or some other foreign language; yet many of these men, for some reason or another, have not acquired the use of the English.

Mr. Chairman, I assert without fear of successful contradiction that in New York City—yes, in many of the cities of this Union—there are thousands and thousands of good citizens of German, Russian, Polish, Hungarian, Roumanian, French, Austrian, Italian, and other foreign birth who have intelligently read the newspapers, books, and publications printed in their mother tongue, and are fairly conversant with our system of government and of their duty generally as American citizens. They are loyal to the flag, they are devoted to this country, and love and respect our institutions. They are morally good; they are law-abiding; they have been good husbands, fathers, home makers. They have, in their own way, through toil and thrift and industry, contributed to the welfare of the country, and have raised children who have been and are some of the brightest pupils of our public schools and colleges.

Many of these men came to our country after their school days had passed—they became part of the hard-toiling classes of the land—and though versed in the language of their own country, have not had an opportunity to acquire the use of the English language so as to read it, speak it, understand it as this bill requires they should. Would you exclude such men as I have described from citizenship?

My time is running on and I can not discuss this matter more in detail. This bill fixes the fees for naturalization at entirely too high a figure. The bill fixes the total fees in each case at $11. While the committee is willing to reduce that by about half, as I understand, even that figure would be rather high. You can not improve quality of citizenship by an increase in the present fees for naturalization. Whether he pay a dollar or a dozen dollars does not improve or take from his quality. An increase in fees is but the imposition of a hardship. Many of our present naturalized citizens when they were naturalized could ill afford to pay the fees which this bill would fix as a price for naturalization. Yet, poor as these men were, they through honest labor improved their condition, made good homes, provided for families, voted honestly and intelligently at the polls, and became worthy of the honor and the name of an American citizen.

I regard it a high honor for any man coming to dwell amongst us to be admitted to citizenship, for the proudest title he can bear is that of a citizen of this great American liberty-loving Republic. [Applause.] But when the applicant for this honor, which he should prize as I do, comes here with a bona fide intention to remain and conform to our laws; when he, too, comes morally and otherwise qualified, no unnecessary hardships should be imposed on him.

Before concluding I desire to add that I agree with the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] in what he said regarding those who came here to get citizenship and then went abroad again to take up their domicile in foreign lands. When a man acquires the honor of citizenship he ought to be loyal and honest enough to our country to spend his wealth, large or small, in the land wherein he had the opportunity to acquire it. He owes it to his adopted country, which holds out to him protection both at home and abroad, that here, on this soil, he shall bring up his family, teach his children the value of American liberty and the beauty and greatness of American life and its vast opportunities. He should be willing to spend here that which he acquired here, and if he fails in this by returning to take up a permanent domicile in a foreign land again, he is unworthy of American citizenship and ought to be deprived by law of its protection. [Applause.]

But those who come here to dwell permanently amongst us in peace; who seek us not only for the betterment of their condition, but also for the admiration they bear for America; who, having dwelt among us for the requisite probationary period, give evidence that they understand generally our system of constitutional government, and that they appreciate the benefits and greatness of our American institutions; who have manifested by their conduct here that they are attached to the principles of our Constitution; whose moral character and other qualities are such as make for good citizenship—when such as these knock at our doors for citizenship we may welcome them into the grand band of citizenship of this great and glorious Republic. [Applause.]

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] or so much time as he may desire.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I approach the discussion of this very important bill without any prejudice whatever against foreigners in general or against any particular class of aliens. I agree with the gentlemen who have spoken that in any legislation of this kind we should have due regard for the rights of the aliens who have chosen to cast their lots with us, but I also maintain that the principal consideration should be the welfare of the Republic. I think in the past our laws have generally been administered with too little regard for the welfare of the people of the United States, and often with too much consideration for the privileges and feelings of the aliens seeking naturalization.

The loose and incomplete laws on naturalization that have heretofore been on the statute books of the United States, and their lax and even criminal administration, make up a record that is a disgrace to our country.

Many reports have recently been made by commissions and agents of the different Executive Departments of the Government, showing a condition that ought to bring the blush of shame to every American. We have a report of an agent of the Department of Justice, showing the result of an investigation made by him in the city which the gentleman who has just spoken [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] has the honor in part to represent upon this floor, showing that 25,000 fraudulent naturalizations, in his estimation, are at present in force in the city of New York.

In 1905 Joel M. Marx, a special assistant United States attorney, in his report to the Department of Justice, shows that, as a result of his efforts in New York City for two years prior to his report, 1,916 fraudulently obtained certificates of naturalization were canceled, 791 indictments were found for crimes connected therewith, 685 convictions were had, and only 3 acquittals, while 103 cases were still pending.

In the city of Detroit, Mich., recently the most glaring frauds have been brought to light, and it has been shown that many perjuries and crimes in connection with the naturalization of aliens have been committed in that city. In San Francisco, too, within the last few months the United States district atttorney has instituted investigations which demonstrated that fraudulent certificates by the hundred have been issued in that city, and he has prosecuted and sent to the penitentiary several men for offenses committed in connection with these fraudulent certificates.

These prosecutions and disclosures have brought home to us in California, as similar disclosures and prosecutions in all parts of the country have brought to the attention of the people everywhere, the necessity for amendments and additions to the naturalization laws that will, so far as possible, put a stop to these practices which are constantly bringing disgrace upon the country and trouble and labor to its officials. Even a superficial study of the subject will, I think, convince anyone that many of these frauds and crimes could have been prevented by adequate laws and regulations on the subject of naturalization.

From the report of Marcus Braun, an official detailed by the Department of Commerce and Labor for work in Europe, it appears that he discovered that thousands of fraudulent naturalization certificates were held by aliens residing in Europe and Asia, claiming to be naturalized American citizens. Many of these certificates have been purchased outright. Many more have been procured by false impersonations, and still others by aliens coming to this country and residing long enough to procure them and returning to their native land on the first boat that departs after they are clothed with the dignity of American citizenship. These certificates are considered in certain quarters of Europe and Asia as very valuable, as when armed with them the citizens of Turkey, for example, can conduct themselves in an unlawful manner, can even plot against the government of the country in which they live, and rely upon their American citizenship to protect them.

I am advised by the State Department that in a very large percentage of the cases where naturalized American citizens call upon our foreign representatives for protection, investigation discloses the fact that their citizenship papers are fraudulent and absolutely void, and that they are not entitled to the protection of the United States. Doubtless many others who are not entitled to it, but whose naturalization papers can not be demonstrated to be illegal, receive the protection of our flag.

Nearly all students of the subject have for many years agreed that two very essential considerations should be kept in view in any legislation on this subject, viz., uniformity and Federal supervision of all naturalization proceedings.

It would seem that no argument is necessary to convince gentlemen that uniformity in the methods of conferring American citizenship is very desirable, if not imperatively necessary. At present there is no uniformity, the methods of naturalizing citizens being as various as the several courts that conduct these proceedings. The importance of uniformity becomes more apparent when we consider that the adoption of the fourteenth amendment makes it impossible for any State to protect itself against undesirable persons who may be citizens of the United States. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GOEBEL], in his speech upon this subject, reported at page 6424 of the RECORD of the present session, enters into a very learned discussion to show that the matter of the qualifications for citizenship should be left to the several States, and in support of his contention quotes quite at length from the opinion of the court in the Slaughterhouse cases (16 Wal.). The gentleman seems to have misapprehended in some respects the scope of that decision. The court in that case expressly states that no State has any power since the passage of the fourteenth amendment to fix any qualifications which its citizens who are citizens of the United States must have. One of the learned counsel in that case correctly states the law thus:

> Citizenship in a State is made by residence, and without reference to the consent of the State.

Mr. Justice Miller, delivering the opinion of the court, in speaking of privileges of citizens of the United States conferred by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, says:

> A citizen of the United States can of his own volition become a citizen of any State in the Union by a bona fide residence therein, with the same rights as other citizens of that State.

It therefore follows that if a court of the State of Massachusetts chooses to admit to citizenship a criminal or an anarchist, the State of New York must admit such citizen when he takes up his residence in the latter State, to all the rights and privileges incident to citizenship in the State of New York, and since the adoption of the fourteenth amendment the State of New York has no way of preventing this result.

Before the adoption of the fourteenth amendment the argument of the gentleman from Ohio would have been very pertinent and, no doubt, sound, but at the present time his argument upon this point has no application.

The gentleman also argues that Federal citizenship confers no political rights. It is true that per se the naturalization of an alien does not confer the right of suffrage, though it does other political rights. Suffrage has been repeatedly held to be not a right, but a privilege, which a State could extend or deny to any class of its citizens, but, as a matter of fact, the result of naturalization to-day in three-fourths of the States is to confer all political rights, including suffrage, upon the naturalized alien as soon as he gains the necessary residence within the State where he takes up his abode. This will continue to be so until the constitution of thirty-three of the States of the Union are amended.

From these considerations, and there are many others that might be suggested did I have the time, I submit to the committee that uniformity in the requirements for naturalization and in the methods employed in admitting aliens to citizenship becomes of the highest importance.

That Federal supervision and control of naturalization are absolutely necessary to prevent the frauds and crimes that for fifty years have been perpetrated in admitting aliens to citizenship, all students of the subject admit. In his annual message of 1884 President Arthur states:

> It might be wise to provide for a central bureau of registry, wherein should be filed authenticated transcripts of every record of naturalization in the several Federal and State courts, and to make provision also for the vacation and cancellation of such record in cases where fraud had been practiced upon the court by the applicant himself or where he had renounced or forfeited his acquired citizenship.

In 1885 President Cleveland, in his first annual message, used these words:

> I regard with favor the suggestion, put forth by one of my predecessors, that provision be made for a central bureau of record of the decrees of naturalization granted by the various courts throughout the United States now invested with that power.

In 1904, in his annual message, President Roosevelt backed up these recommendations in the following language:

> The courts should be required to make returns to the Secretary of State at stated periods of all naturalizations conferred.

A thorough Federal supervision was also recommended by C. V. C. Van Deusen, special examiner of the Department of Justice, in his report to that Department on June 14, 1905. Later in 1905 the Commission on Naturalization appointed by the President at the close of the last Congress made the same recommendation. The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, recognizing the wisdom and necessity for this supervision and having that in view as one of the purposes to be attained by the present bill, have nevertheless carefully eliminated all provisions that, in their judgment, were not necessary to adequately secure such supervision.

My colleague the gentleman from California [Mr. SMITH), in his remarks a few moments ago, declared that—

> The procedure required by this bill is entirely too complicated, and that men who would make entirely satisfactory citizens will be deprived of citizenship, with no corresponding good in any other direction.

I beg to take issue with my colleague upon this subject, and venture to suggest that if he will consider this bill in connection with the necessity for uniformity and Federal supervision, I am satisfied that he will conclude with me that only such provisions are incorporated therein as are necessary to secure such desired uniformity and Federal supervision.

My colleague objects to the technical character of the papers required by the bill. I believe he will admit that this objection falls to the ground when he understands that the Government is to furnish all the blanks for these proceedings, and all that remains is for the applicant or the clerk of the court, or any person, to fill in the names, dates, etc. No legal knowledge is necessary to perform this small act. I fail to see where any hardship is imposed on the alien desiring naturalization other than those imposed upon him by the present law, except in the matter of fees, which it is proposed by this bill to somewhat increase, and in the matter of waiting ninety days after the filing of his petition before his final certificate can be issued. But this delay is necessary in order that the Government can examine the case to see whether there is any legal cause to deny his petition. Although in some cases this may work a little hardship, since the very purpose of the law would be defeated unless time were allowed the Bureau to investigate, it seemed to the committee that a few incidental inconveniences or hardships should have no weight as against the imperative necessity of providing for careful investigation, and, if necessary, resistance of the application for naturalization of aliens.

If the fees provided for in this bill are deemed by some gentlemen too high, I believe all will agree that they should be high enough to prevent the wholesale political naturalizations that for many years have been so common just prior to an election.

Mr. Chairman, I shall reserve the discussion of the various provisions of the bill in detail until those provisions are reached under the five-minute rule.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I yield a minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise to say something that I assume my colleague on the committee from California [Mr. HAYES] would have said had he had the time, and that is this: That fraudulent naturalizations in the city of New York are not entirely, or not in the majority of instances even, the result of any bad action on the part of the court. But they were made possible by the loose system. They were counterfeits; they were duplicated; they were every kind of a bad certificate that could be gotten up under a loose system; but in the investigation they found that the Federal court there was under suspicion of collusion in only two cases out of the thousands. But the bad certificates are there, and they ought to be wiped out.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. BONYNGE. How much time has the gentleman on the other side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] has three minutes remaining.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] as he may desire of the time remaining to this side.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I just rise to state, in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York, that he is quite correct that the great bulk of these fraudulent certificates have never seen the court at all, but there are no means provided for determining which are illegal and which are not, and this bill provides such a method.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to my colleague from New York [Mr. GOULDEN].

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, replying to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] in regard to the large number of fraudulent naturalization papers, I want to say that the evidence before the United States district attorney and the investigations of the United States Federal grand jury in New York covering months will show there was a large number of fraudulent naturalization papers, but that these officials united in saying that it was not confined to the city or State of New York, but extended all over the United States.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, I will say that recently two men have been sent to the penitentiary—less than two months ago, in the city of San Francisco—for naturalization frauds, and the United States district attorney gave published notice that all holders of fraudulent naturalization certificates who should within the next sixty days deliver them up to be canceled would not be prosecuted. In the first thirty days 204 fraudulent certificates were delivered and canceled.

Mr. GOULDEN. I want to say that I simply desire to correct any impression that might prevail here and in the country at large that in New York perhaps more are guilty of these violations than any other section of the United States. New York, the great metropolis of the nation, is in fact less guilty in proportion to our number than other cities of the country.

Mr. WACHTER. Mr. Chairman, I want to corroborate what the gentleman said, because my friends in my own district sent seven men to the Maryland penitentiary for illegal naturalization.

Mr. GOULDEN. And I think the gentleman will bear me out that only a few were caught in his city, though Baltimore is as good and patriotic as any other section of the country. [Laughter.]

Mr. WACHTER. We are always second to New York in all good things.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if there are any other gentlemen that have confessions to make?

Mr. GOULDEN. I have no doubt that the gentleman [Mr. NORRIS] who has just taken his seat could make an equally strong confession and plausible excuse if he were given the time in which to do so and felt so inclined. [Laughter.]

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill, if the time has been consumed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall provide the said Bureau with such additional furnished offices within the city of Washington, such books of record and facilities, and such additional assistants, clerks, stenographers, typewriters, and other employees as may be necessary for the proper discharge of the duties imposed by this act upon such Bureau, fixing the compensation of such additional employees within the appropriations made from time to time for that purpose.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 14, after the word "employees," insert "drawn from the civil-service list."

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill if he would have any objection to having this large force which is to be employed in the new Bureau drawn from the civil-service list?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, the law governing employees under the Commissioner of Immigration now provides that all the employees of his office must be taken from the civil-service list.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Now, I will ask the gentleman if it follows from that as a necessary consequence that the employees provided for in this act will be taken from the civil-service list?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Unquestionably, because this is the same Bureau with simply a change in the name.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment upon the gentleman's statement.

I offer another amendment to the same section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN] offers a further amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Bureau," in line 16, and substitute therefor the words "at such compensation as shall be provided by law."

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, we are creating a new bureau here for the enforcement of the law that we seek to pass, and it is necessary that Congress should pass upon the question of salaries to be paid to the large force of employees. I think it is contrary to sound policy to allow the head of this Department to fix the salaries and allow Congress to have no supervision of them. Now, at the very inception of this scheme it seems to me to be proper to have Congress pass upon the salaries that are to be paid to these employees. Therefore this amendment is offered, which provides that the compensation of the employees shall be fixed in a manner provided by law.

Mr. BONYNGE. If the gentleman will yield for a moment, that might do very well, I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN], after the force is organized, but between this time and the next appropriation bill there will be no law fixing the salaries of these special employees, and therefore some such general provision as this seemed necessary to the committee for the first year. In the next year, when we have an appropriation bill, their salaries will be fixed in that appropriation bill.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Now, let me ask when the law will begin to operate, if it passes at this session?

Mr. BONYNGE. In ninety days after the passage of the bill. The law would go into effect ninety days after the date of its passage according to section 32, but section 2 goes into effect immediately, in order that the Bureau may organize and may get its force of clerks.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. The question I want to ask the gentleman is this: Whether it would not be possible to have the Secretary of Commerce and Labor make an estimate now of the number of employees required and the salaries to be paid to them and submit that to Congress in time to have the matter provided for in the general deficiency bill before this Congress adjourns?

Mr. BONYNGE. I do not think that would be practical, Mr. Chairman. I do not think it is hardly necessary. This is a provision which will only be in existence for not more than six months.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. The trouble with it is, as I am informed, that the salaries paid now in that Department average higher than the salaries paid in any other Department of the Government, and that they were made higher, in the first place, in order that transfers would be made of employees from other and more poorly paid Departments to the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman's information certain in regard to that Department?

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. It has been stated by the Department in the hearings before the committee.

Mr. MANN. The Department was not consulted when the bill was passed, and certainly that was not the intention in fixing the salaries in that bill.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I will state it is my recollection that the Secretary of the Department himself at the time the Bureau was created came before the committee and stated that he purposely wanted the salaries made high so that clerks would get transfers from other Departments to his, and that he would have the best class of employees of all the Departments in Washington; and he is on record as saying it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is referring to the action of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I am.

Mr. MANN. Not to the action of the committee creating the Department that the gentleman referred to?

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I am speaking of the committee and the salaries submitted to it by the Department.

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Appropriations, not the committee that reported and passed the bill?

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I stand corrected in that particular. It was a statement to the Committee on Appropriations by the Secretary. Now, then, it seems to me that the Secretary of the Department, if he has the power, will fix these salaries on the same high plane, and I think it will be better to give the power to decide the number of employees and fix the salaries to the House. There is sufficient time to enable the Secretary to make an estimate of the number of employees that he will require and the proper salaries to be paid to them and furnish it to this Congress in time for it to act.

Mr. MANN. Is there an amendment to this section which gives the Secretary the power to fix the salaries?

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. The section itself gives the Secretary power. It reads:

> Fixing the compensation of such additional employees within the appropriations made from time to time for that purpose.

That is in section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to have the amendment read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, in the event of the adoption of this amendment, if the salaries of the clerks employed under this bill will be provided for just as the salaries of all the other clerks in the Department of Commerce and Labor are provided for, namely, by the Secretary submitting estimates to Congress and Congress fixing the salaries?

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Yes. That is what I hope will be effected by the amendment. That is what I am trying to secure. It is my opinion that there is ample time for the Secretary to ascertain the number of employees necessary for the purpose of enforcing the law. He can make an estimate and send it to the Committee on Appropriations and have it carried in the general deficiency bill, and that seems to me the proper line of action and much safer than to allow the heads of Departments to fix the salaries.

Mr. BONYNGE. I would have no objection to that amendment if it were possible to carry it into effect, so that the section could be operative as provided for by the bill. It must be remembered that after we pass this bill, if we do, in the House, it must go to the Senate, and it may there be passed, if it be passed during this session of Congress, just before we adjourn, possibly, when it will be beyond the power of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to make any estimate and provide for any clerks or assistants in his Bureau until the next session of Congress, when we have an appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. How would his clerks get paid, if an appropriation is not made by Congress?

Mr. BONYNGE. We have an appropriation in the bill itself.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think the gentleman's objection to the amendment is valid. If the bill passes, certainly the general deficiency bill will be the last thing that Congress will enact into law during the session, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, if the bill passes the House, on the theory of becoming law, can make an estimate of the number of clerks, and submit that estimate to Congress, which can put the items on the bill, and when the bill becomes a law the force will be provided for. That is done every session of Congress.

Mr. BONYNGE. Let me say to the gentleman that the Secretary will not make any estimate until the bill has been finally passed.

Mr. TAWNEY. He may make an estimate informally, as they do every day.

Mr. BONYNGE. He would hardly make it until after the bill is passed, so that he may know what the provisions of the bill are and what clerical force will be required. If this bill does finally pass, how would there be time for the Secretary to make an estimate as to the amount of money that would be required for the clerical assistance and have it put in an appropriation bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. If the bill were to become a law the last week of the session, I do not think it would require over twenty-four hours' time for the Secretary to make that estimate.

Mr. BONYNGE. I submit that if the gentleman will read the provisions of the bill and examine it closely he will change his opinion about that.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONYNGE. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, this is only a question of how the additional clerical force shall be paid in the current year. As a matter of fact, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor already fixes the compensation for all the immigration officials, the officials in the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, except these additional clerks. He is just as familiar as is the Committee on Appropriations with the necessity required for the payment of these additional clerks in the coming year. He is doing it all the time, because under existing law all employees of the Immigration Bureau outside of the city of Washington do have their salaries fixed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and not by the Committee on Appropriations.

For one year, I think, at least, it is safe to intrust to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, who is doing it every day, the duty of saying what these salaries shall be.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Massachusetts were correct in stating that this provision only applies to one year I can see a good reason for it, but I think that is not the case. This provision which the gentlemen have put in the bill will give the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, so long as it remains the law, the power to fix the salaries in this particular Bureau, to fix them at whatever he may please, and give him a lever which he will use, as we all know, to increase salaries, not only in the Bureau of Immigration, but throughout the Department of Commerce and Labor, a power which will extend, because every Member of Congress will be constantly told that such and such an official in the Bureau of Immigration receives such a salary and "I have work of equal value and I want my salary increased."

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman is painting a wonderful picture.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is painting a true picture.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman is painting a picture as it exists to-day.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon; it does not exist to-day in the District of Columbia, in the city of Washington.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. No; but in every other office of the immigration service in the United States.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is correct when he says we make a lump-sum appropriation for the control of this service outside of the city of Washington, outside of the departmental service, and it is a very serious question whether it is not a gross extravagance on the part of the Government. We all know the lump-sum appropriations constantly lead to great extravagance, and whether that be so or not, this gives power to the House in this particular section of the bill to increase salaries, in making appropriations, for one particular bureau of the Government, when no other bureau of the Government has that opportunity. I do not think the gentleman himself has any desire to do that. He wishes to confine the scope of this provision to one year, but this does not confine it to a year. This makes it in order at any time in the House to move to increase the amount of money appropriated for the Bureau and then let the Secretary fix the additional salary. It makes no limitation of salaries in this Bureau.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me, if this amendment is not adopted and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is authorized to fix the salaries in this particular bureau at such a figure as he may see fit, it will never be possible for Congress to provide for these salaries specifically unless there is legislation hereafter giving Congress that power. In other words, if the appropriation bill should carry specific authorization for these particular salaries, it would go out on a point of order.

Mr. MANN. It would be subject to a point of order because not authorized by law.

Mr. TAWNEY. Therefore it means that if authority is given to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to fix these salaries now, that that authority will exist forever.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have just moved to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. Oh, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman wishes to object, I am perfectly willing.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I will not object to the gentleman's request.

Mr. MANN. It is quite immaterial to the gentleman whether he objects or not. The gentleman is perfectly able to take care of himself on the floor.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I ask now whether the gentleman's time and all other time has not expired on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment has expired, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized to speak for five minutes by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will be willing to yield to the gentleman a part of the time if he requires it. The result of the original proposition would be that, under the rules of the House, it will not be competent for the House to appropriate for the specific salaries, but they must appropriate a lump sum of money out of which the Secreatry shall fix the salaries. That, I say, is a wrong policy. It was not the intention, in my judgment, of the Committee on Immigration to adopt that policy, but that is the result of the language in the bill. It is a policy that Congress is endeavoring to get away from instead of endeavoring to go toward, doing away, as far as possible, with the policy of lump-sum appropriations for salaries, and it would be, in my judgment, a serious mistake to leave such a provision in the bill.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is perhaps correct in thinking that Congress is trying to get away from that system. Such part of Congress, however, as is comprised in the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization is not. We have deliberately in the immigration bill retained the provision by which the Secretary of Commerce and Labor can fix the salaries out of the fund appropriated. Now, so far as this particular section is concerned, I personally should not object to it if it were so limited that after one year the Appropriation Committee, which is so anxious to have this additional duty, should have the privilege of fixing those salaries; but unless the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN] is so amended as to leave the present section operative for a year I hope that the committee will vote it down.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN] if he will not be willing to modify his amendment so as to make it apply to the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1907?

Mr. BONYNGE. That would be satisfactory to the committee.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Well, I do not quite understand the meaning of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. If this bill becomes a law at all at this session of Congress it will become a law very late in the session. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] says that estimates can be sent in, and I presume that is true; but of what earthly good would estimates be which are sent in in the last twenty-four hours of a session or the last three days of a session? They would amount to nothing. Here is a new bureau, a new work created for the first time in the history of the country, with no precedents by which to guide it, nothing to indicate how much money will be necessary, and here is a bill that will bring into the Treasury probably $250,000 a year. It costs the country nothing, and this provision gives the Secretary the first year the right to organize his Bureau the way it ought to be organized, and after that first year the committee reporting this bill has no objection to the whole subject going under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under this language which authorizes the employment of all necessary assistants of every character, has not the Secretary the right to pay them out of the money appropriated in the bill without specifically using this other language which would make it impossible for Congress in the ordinary conduct of business to change those salaries?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Congress, of course, could regulate it by the amount of the lump sum that it appropriated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But under the authority to employ such additional assistants, clerks, stenographers, typewriters, etc., the Secretary would have the power to fix the compensation without that clause which has given rise to the discussion at this time.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman means under existing law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the law right in there. If he is given authority to employ help, he has the implied authority to pay them out of the fund appropriated.

Mr. BENNET of New York. That is given to him specifically in line 16, fixing the compensation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the particular language to which objection is made, and he would have just as much authority without that.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman may be correct about that.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has framed an amendment which I think will cover the objection made.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I wanted to find out the meaning of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET]. Is it his desire that the Secretary shall determine the number and fix the amount of salaries until July 1, 1907?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. And that after that Congress shall fix the salaries?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. BONYNGE. That is the amendment I understand the gentleman from Illinois will offer.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I have no objection personally to that. I would be glad to accept that amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a substitute, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 17, after the word "employees," insert the words "until July 1, 1907;" and after the word "made" strike out "from time to time;" so as to read, "fixing the compensation of such additional employees until July 1, 1907, within the appropriations made for that purpose."

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that is the best suggestion that has been made, and I desire to ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment so the vote may be taken upon the substitute amendment.

Mr. BONYNGE. And the committee is ready to accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken; and the substitute amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That exclusive jurisdiction to naturalize aliens as citizens of the United States is hereby conferred upon the following specified courts:

United States circuit and district courts now existing, or which may hereafter be established by Congress in any State, United States district courts for the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Hawaii, the district of Alaska, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and the United States courts for the Indian Territory; also all courts of record in any State now existing, or which may hereafter be created, having a seal, a clerk, and jurisdiction in actions at law in which the amount in controversy is unlimited.

That all judges, justices, clerks, and officers of such State courts, when acting in naturalization matters, shall be deemed to be officers and agents of the United States. That the naturalization jurisdiction of all courts herein specified, both State and Federal, shall extend only to aliens resident within the respective judicial districts of such courts.

The courts herein specified shall, upon the requisition of the clerks of such courts, be furnished from time to time by the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization with such blank forms as may be required in the naturalization of aliens, and all certificates of naturalization shall be consecutively numbered and printed on safety paper furnished by said Bureau.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. In line 2, page 3, after the word "State," insert the words "or Territory."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 2, after the word "State," insert the words "or Territory."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts and Mr. HEPBURN rose.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Iowa rise?

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman in charge of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has just recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts to offer an amendment.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I am willing to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HEPBURN. Later on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, section 3, add after the word "unlimited," in line 5, "and all State courts of record having a seal and a clerk and which are next in rank below the nisi prius courts of such State."

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I am not familiar with the constitution of the courts in all the States and Territories, but my amendment seeks to retain jurisdiction in a class of courts in the State of Massachusetts which now exercise jurisdiction over the subject of naturalization and which exercise it well; in fact, to the satisfaction of everybody. In our State the municipal courts of the city of Boston and the district and police courts throughout the Commonwealth now naturalize aliens, and for the last few years they have done the bulk of that work. It has been found extremely inconvenient in practice to have men come from the western part of the State, perhaps a hundred and fifty miles, to a district court of the United States sitting in the city of Boston for the purpose of being naturalized. Therefore the district and police courts throughout the State have exercised that jurisdiction to the great convenience of those desiring to be naturalized and to the entire satisfaction of everybody concerned.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Are these courts which you have just now mentioned courts of record?

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. They are all courts of record.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then they would be included in the language——

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. No; because of the last few words; they are not courts of unlimited jurisdiction, and for that reason they would be excluded under the provisions of this bill. Now, I apprehend that there would be some difficulty in enforcing the law as I seek to amend it, and yet I believe that the hardships which will follow in enforcing the law will be greater than those which would follow if the law is amended. I know that there are courts in other States in the Union of the same class of which I speak which are perhaps not so competent to discharge the duties of naturalization courts as the courts in the State of Massachusetts, but I believe we ought not to take jurisdiction out of a class of courts that now exercise that jurisdiction properly to the satisfaction of all the citizens of the State and all of the political parties of the State and to the great convenience of the men who seek naturalization.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow me? Under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts the justice of the peace courts of Indiana would be included. Our supreme court has decided that they are courts of record, and the last legislature required them to keep a seal, so they are courts of record.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Are they courts next in grade below the nisi prius courts?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. They are.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Now, I want to be entirely fair in the matter. I will state that such courts under this amendment would exercise jurisdiction. Now, I will ask for information: Is it your opinion that these justice of the peace courts in the State of Indiana are not competent to naturalize aliens?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Decidedly. I do not think they ought to have any voice in the question of citizenship at all.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. That is the difficulty, and I expected that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. They are elected without any regard to their question of competency or qualification, as a rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN] has expired.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to continue his remarks for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the gentleman from Indiana have any objection to vesting jurisdiction in these matters in courts above the grade of justices' courts, and not having unlimited jurisdiction?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; I do not believe jurisdiction to confer citizenship upon aliens ought to be vested in any court except those of general original jurisdiction.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Chairman, the courts in the State of Massachusetts that I have spoken of will be excluded under the terms of this bill unless this amendment be adopted, and I fancy that there are many other States in which courts of the same class now exercising jurisdiction will be excluded also under the terms of this act. Under this act the only courts competent to naturalize aliens will be the supreme court of the State, the superior courts, which is our nisi prius court, and the courts of the United States. Now, the people from the western part of the State can not come to Boston conveniently, and I state positively that neither our supreme court, which is our highest court, nor the superior court, which is our nisi prius court, will ever take the time to naturalize aliens. The district, police, and municipal courts will be excluded by the provisions of the act, and the result will be that we will not have a sufficient number of courts under this act to properly transact the business of naturalization in the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is it not true that the superior court sits in each county in the State of Massachusetts from time to time?

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. And taking the counties outside of Suffolk, is it not true they would have plenty of time—in my county, for instance, which is Essex—to attend to naturalizations?

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I think not. I am quite sure they would not, Mr. Chairman. That is my judgment, at least.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman is a lawyer and I am not. His judgment would be better than mine on that question.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I know that there are questions now over which the superior court has jurisdiction which it never exercises. The probate courts in our State have the entire business of committing lunatics, and no attorney can get the justices of the superior court to exercise that function, and I apprehend that the same result will follow in the matter of naturalizations.

Now, while it may work some hardship somewhere else, I solemnly protest in the name of my State against stripping this class of courts of that jurisdiction which it has so well exercised in the past.

Mr. GARRETT. Relative to the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], if the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN] is adopted it would confer jurisdiction upon justices of the peace of his State, has the gentleman from Indiana observed that the provisions state that the amount in controversy must be limited? And would that save the case in your State of Indiana?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the gentleman's amendment provide that the amount in controversy shall not be unlimited?

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. No.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Under his amendment I do not see that Indiana would have the authority——

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Let me ask the gentleman from Indiana, suppose the limitation of $2,000 was put upon these courts, would that exclude the justices' courts of Indiana?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN] has expired.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask one minute more for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman who has charge of the bill. Following out the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], suppose we put a limitation to the amount of $2,000 upon the class of courts that are included in my amendment, would the gentleman then oppose my amendment?

Mr. BONYNGE. I would oppose the amendment, and I desire to be heard in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy the time of the committee but a few minutes.

Mr. BONYNGE. I desire to be heard in opposition. Under the five-minute rule I think one side is entitled to be heard in favor of the amendment for five minutes and the other side against the amendment for five minutes.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to say something in opposition to the amendment, but I will give way to the gentleman if he wishes.

Mr. BONYNGE. Very well. I can be heard later.

Mr. POWERS. I am very desirous that naturalization should be conducted in courts that will give proper consideration. In my own State naturalization can only be obtained in the United States court, in the supreme court, and in the superior court. This bill allows naturalization in those courts. I do not believe it should be extended any further. I think that perhaps one reason why there have been spurious or false naturalization papers which gentlemen complain of is the fact that courts under these have been allowed to exercise that right.

Mr. MANN. Will the distinguished gentleman from Maine yield for a question?

Mr. POWERS. Certainly, sir.

Mr. MANN. He is undoubtedly in favor of giving a reasonable opportunity to a man to be naturalized if he wishes? The provision in this bill would prevent twenty-eight different courts in the city of Chicago from issuing naturalization papers, any one of which probably entertains a great deal more legislation than the ordinary court does.

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the gentleman just yield for a moment? In answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I desire to call the committee's attention to the fact that possibly for the same reason, namely, that there are twenty-eight courts in Chicago naturalizing aliens, it became necessary for this House only a few days ago—upon a bill introduced by the gentleman from Illinois, known as the "bill H. R. 18713"—to validate some thousands upon thousands of certificates of naturalization that had been improperly issued in the courts of the city of Chicago.

Mr. MANN. It showed how necessary it was to let the court have jurisdiction.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further.

Mr. MANN. Twenty-eight thousand; and you have proved it.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that all of this large number of spurious naturalization papers enumerated by the gentleman are to be found—or nearly all of them—in our great cities, and it is there that the remedies must be applied. I have no doubt this may result very largely from the fact that it is in those cities where so many courts and so many different courts of unlike jurisdiction exercise the right of naturalization. Now, I live in a border State. I live in a district where there are a good many naturalizations. I live in a district and State where, as I stated to you, no courts but those that I have mentioned, namely, the United States court and the supreme and superior courts of the State, exercise the power and the right of naturalization, and I never yet have heard an intimation of a spurious naturalization paper ever having been granted either in my district or my State. Certainly there has never been any criminal prosecution or indictment of any person on any such charge.

There are a great many safeguards in this bill in reference to the declaration and all the preliminary proceedings, some of which, I think, are unnecessary and uncalled for. But I do believe that if we are to have naturalization that shall be correctly, legally, and wisely administered, which shall not be spurious, vicious, or granted without due and proper care and consideration, that we must have this naturalization confined and granted in courts of such jurisdiction and such standing that there can be no question about them and the judicial care that will be taken in every case. Therefore I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN]. As I have not the faith in the high standing and judicial learning of municipal and police courts as would lead me to deem it wise and safe to grant to them this power—though I do not desire to be understood as in any way reflecting upon these courts—they perform important functions, yet naturalization, in my judgment, is not a proper subject for their consideration.

Mr. GARRETT. The bill seems to limit the jurisdiction to those courts that have jurisdiction in cases at law.

Mr. POWERS. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. Now, I think a few States, among which is my own, have separate chancery courts, so-called equity courts, that are of as high rank as courts of law. I do not know that this question is of so great importance in my State as it may be in some others where there are many immigrants.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question right here?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. POWERS. Do not the same judges sit one hour as judges of a court of equity and the next hour as judges of a court of law, or are they separate and distinct judges? I mean law and equity judges.

Mr. GARRETT. They are separate and distinct, and have separate and distinct records.

Mr. POWERS. Then the law and equity judges are different persons?

Mr. GARRETT. They are different judges.

Mr. POWERS. You have chancellors?

Mr. GARRETT. We have chancellors and circuit judges.

Mr. POWERS. Perhaps there are a few States that yet have chancellors, as the gentleman has stated they have in his; but in nearly every State in the Union the same judges have both law and equity jurisdiction, and the almost universal rule is that they sit one day in equity and the same judges sit the next day or the next hour as judges at law, and they can change from the law to the equity side, and vice versa, as often as the causes before them require or as may be necessary.

Mr. GARRETT. There are four other States besides Tennessee that have chancellors.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I think we are about to make a mistake. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, in my judgment, ought not to prevail. I was about to ask the gentleman having this matter in charge what objection there would be to striking out all of that part of the paragraph after the word "territory" so as to take away from the State courts entirely jurisdiction over the subject of naturalization?

Mr. BONYNGE. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that that matter was presented to the committee. The committee did not feel that it would be just, for the reason that in many States the Federal courts only sit in one city. In some of the Western States the cities where the Federal court may hold its session is sometimes hundreds of miles from where the alien may live, and would require the alien to go to that place at great expense in order to be naturalized; and we felt that we might put in the provision we have, which gives the State courts of the highest original jurisdiction of every State and the Federal courts the power, so that there would be a court in every county in every State of the United States that could naturalize, and that was as liberal as we could be, and we ought to be that liberal. That was the object of the amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. I supposed that would be the answer; and yet to my mind it is not a good one. I had hoped that this bill would be regarded as a new departure in the matter of naturalization. Heretofore the naturalization of foreigners has been a farce in this country. I have never known in fifty years of observation of but one refusal when a man applied for naturalization. I think that under the provisions of this bill a great majority of the courts could be convicted of an offense if they continued to naturalize men as they heretofore have done. I find that in section 25 it is provided:

That any person who knowingly aids, advises, or encourages any person not entitled thereto to apply for or to secure naturalization—

Shall be punished, etc. How often have judges admitted men to naturalization when they knew that they had no statutory qualifications, when they knew that they were not well affected toward the institutions of the United States, when they knew that there was no disposition on their part to secure the good order and happiness of the same. They know that often they are profoundly ignorant of the character, institutions, and principles of our Government, and what is necessary to the good order of society. Hundreds and thousands of men every year are naturalized where there is this flagrant disregard of the law. The courts admit men as a matter of course who file applications that are presented to the court, and it is often regarded as a joke rather than anything more serious—this naturalization of a citizen of the United States.

I am hopeful that this inaugurates a new era, that it imposes upon these men who seek naturalization the idea that a boon is being conferred upon them, that there is something in naturalization here that they ought to be suitors for, that they ought to be willing to make sacrifices for; and the idea of bringing up as an imposition upon the alien the consideration of a man having to travel 10, 15, or 100 miles in order to secure naturalization and citizenship in this country is to my mind farcical in the extreme. There are Federal courts everywhere within reasonable limits and within reasonable time.

They have ample opportunity for attending to this duty; they will attend to it if they are required to. Let me remind you that the frauds whenever they occur, the hundreds of men who are fraudulently and unjustly admitted to participation in our citizenship, are perpetrated in the State courts and not in the Federal courts, and therefore I think if we are to make any change at all, we should go in the other direction and not loosen up the methods of naturalization.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. Chairman, everyone is agreed that we should do all possible to prevent frauds in naturalization, and if a bill can be drafted to bring about that result and make the process more secure it will receive ultimately the almost unanimous vote of this House. But it seems to me that the bill should not be so drafted as to be oppressive to the men who seek naturalization; that the man who seeks it honestly, earnestly, from a desire to become an American citizen should be welcome if he possesses the character and capacity to fulfill the requirements.

Let me say to the gentleman who has just spoken that no case has been adduced on this floor, to my knowledge or in my hearing, where any fraud has taken place in the State courts, but men have arisen on the other side who have testified to fraud in the United States courts. [Applause.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman yield for an experience?

Mr. McNARY. Certainly.

Mr. BENNET of New York. In my own city, in the city in which I live and represent in part, one judge in one day naturalized 2,500 aliens, and he could not have done it honestly.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. A United States judge?

Mr. BENNET of New York. No; judge of a State court.

Mr. McNARY. That seems to settle that argument so far as the State of New York is concerned. [Laughter.]

Mr. BONYNGE. If the gentleman will yield——

Mr. McNARY. I will yield if the gentleman will extend my time.

Mr. BONYNGE. I will extend it as far as the time I occupy.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

Mr. BONYNGE. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that Judge B. C. Elliot, of Lafayette, La., was impeached and dismissed from the bench for fraudulent naturalization.

Mr. McNARY. Well, that makes two cases in the State courts where there have been dozens in the United States courts. I want to say that in the State of Massachusetts no accusation has ever been brought against the State courts, and I doubt very much indeed, though two cases have been mentioned, that outside of the large cities—cities like New York—many such accusations can be brought against the State courts. And for this reason, primarily, that the State court is limited in its district, limited in the number of the population which it serves, and the judge appointed to the bench is apt to be acquainted with the citizens of his district and also with the witnesses who come before him. He has a personal acquaintance with the most of them and is in a position to know personally whether or not the statements made by the applicant and the witnesses are correct or not. And from my point of view a court of that character is the most competent court to give naturalization, because it is acquainted with the men and the witnesses who come before it.

I wish to back up the remarks made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN] that the superior court of Suffolk County is so crowded with business that originates not only in that county, but in all counties around, that it is a safe assertion that no naturalization will ever take place in that court, and if we can have the jurisdiction conferred upon the lower courts which have seals, under the limitation suggested by the gentleman, the judges of these courts will deal with a population with whom they are familiar and with witnesses with whom they are familiar, and the hardships otherwise imposed upon men in that county who seek naturalization will be done away with.

Let me say to you, gentlemen, it is not a fair thing to an alien who honestly desires to become a citizen that he shall be compelled to pay a large sum of money for that purpose; that he shall be compelled to travel a great distance for that purpose, or that he shall be compelled to wait an undue length of time. Let us make the requirements strict in many respects, but do not make provisions so burdensome and onerous that it will amount practically to the prohibition of an honest man who seeks honorable citizenship in this Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon the pending amendment be closed in five minutes.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, pending that motion, I would ask the gentleman if he will agree that I may substitute an amendment exactly similar except that it limits the jurisdiction to $1,000?

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes; I have no objection to that.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to substitute for the amendment now pending the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, section 3, add, after the word "unlimited," in line 5, "and all such courts of record having the seal and a clerk with jurisdiction to the extent of $1,000 and next in rank below the nisi prius courts of such State."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts that he substitute the amendment just read? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Colorado that all debate on the pending amendment close in five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman to make the time a little longer than that.

Mr. BONYNGE. Well, Mr. Chairman, we have already had a half-hour debate on this amendment; but I will extend that time five minutes longer, and ask in connection with it that the time be equally divided between those in favor of the amendment and those opposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Colorado that all debate on the pending amendment be closed in ten minutes, five minutes of which shall be in the control of those in favor of the amendment and five minutes in the control of those opposed to it.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the Chairman will notify me at the end of two minutes. I fully sympathize with what actuated the gentleman in proposing the provision in the bill. We have a population of more than 2,000,000 people in my city, the city of Chicago, and we are just now creating twenty-seven new courts. Those courts may have and do have in some particulars jurisdiction over millions of dollars' worth of property in certain cases, but they are not courts which have unlimited jurisdiction at law or which have jurisdiction over an unlimited amount in controversy. Those will be barred. The gentleman refers to the fact that we just passed a bill validating naturalization in the criminal courts. The criminal court of our county has jurisdiction to try a man for his life and to order that he be hanged, but you say it is not a court of sufficient importance to naturalize a citizen. It will be a very great hardship, I say, gentlemen, in the city of Chicago upon thousands of people if this bill passes in the way that it reads now.

Mr. NORRIS. Will this amendment let in the courts referred to?

Mr. MANN. I think this amendment will let in those courts except the criminal court. If we have the other courts, very well. It is often a matter of great difficulty now in the city of Chicago to obtain the consent of a judge in an ordinary court to hear a naturalization case at all. I have known men seeking to be naturalized who went to court several times before they could obtain a hearing by the court for that purpose.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I favor the amendment restricting the naturalization to the United States courts for the reason that they are able, in my estimation, to take in all the business offered. The courts in the city of Pittsburg have a great deal of naturalization, and the United States court to-day is taking care of all the naturalization cases. The county courts have turned the business over voluntarily to the United States court, and the United States court hears all of the cases, and I want to say, for the benefit of my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], who stated he believed he knew of no cases having been turned down by the United States courts, that there are hundreds of cases refused by the United States court in Pittsburg. Judge Buffington, of the United States district court, has a school established for the examination of candidates for naturalization, and the clerk, William T. Lindsey, prescribes certain days during each month when the applicants appear for examination. They are interrogated not only on their knowledge of the English language, but their acquaintance with the salient features of American history. They are put through a catechism that is searching and rigid, and a number of them are excluded. I think that the United States courts are able to handle this matter and do it better than the county courts. I want to state that the naturalization in Allegheny County frequently numbers from one to two hundred cases in a month. In former years, when our county courts naturalized, as the time approached for State and national elections, the Republican and Democratic committees paid the fees for final papers, and the rush upon the courts was terrific, and, of course, under the circumstances, the proper examinations could not be made, and numbers of ignorant and unworthy applicants slipped through. Now, neither party advances the fees, and all applicants are referred to the United States courts, where, as I said before, the most rigid examinations are required, and, notwithstanding, an immense foreign population is attracted to our great manufacturing center, our new citizens will compare favorably with any section of the Union.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, in 1903 the Department of Justice appointed a special examiner to examine into naturalization frauds. He made a report, and in that report is found the following language, to which I desire to call the attention of the committee. The special examiner was Mr. Van Deusen. He said:

The evidence is overwhelming that the general administration of the naturalization laws has been contemptuous, perfunctory, indifferent, lax, and unintelligent, and in many cases, especially in inferior State courts, corrupt. I find that it is and has been the practice of judges of State courts to hold evening sessions of court at the behest of political leaders for the sole purpose of naturalizing hundreds of aliens for political purposes, with a full knowledge on the part of the judges that the aliens have been bribed to become citizens and voters by the payment of their naturalization fees by the political organizations. These evils and frauds have existed for years, exist to-day, and will continue to exist and multiply until radical and stringent changes are made in the naturalization laws and a strict supervision of the administration imposed.

Nearly everyone, Mr. Chairman, who has spoken upon this floor to-day in reference to this bill has admitted that in the main these charges are correct; that we have had a very loose and lax system of naturalization in vogue in this country; that many have been naturalized improperly and improvidently and contrary to the provisions of the law. From such investigation as we have been able to give to this question we have concluded that the primary reason for the lax and loose administration of the naturalization laws has been because of the large number of courts of different characters of jurisdiction throughout the United States.

There are to-day some 5,000 different courts in the United States naturalizing aliens. So long, Mr. Chairman, as there are that number of courts engaged in this business we can not hope to have a uniform system of naturalization, and there was never a better demonstration and illustration of that fact than which I called to the committee's attention a few moments ago of what occurred in the city of Chicago. Now, it has not been the aim of the committee to make it difficult or impossible for worthy aliens to become naturalized, so we did not go to the extremes, as many urged us to do, and limit naturalization to the Federal courts. The naturalization of aliens is a Federal matter, and so there were some strong arguments that might be urged now, and were urged upon the committee in favor of limiting naturalization to the Federal courts alone, but the committee did not go to that extreme. On the contrary, we have provided that not only the Federal courts, but that the State courts of the highest original jurisdiction in every State might be authorized to naturalize aliens, and in every county in every State and in every Territory of the Union there is some court of highest original jurisdiction that will sit at different times throughout the year than can naturalize aliens under the provisions of this bill, and therefore I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment that has been offered, and other amendments seeking to add to the courts that may engage in this business, may be voted down and the report of the committee approved by the Committee of the Whole House. I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 5, strike out "unlimited" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$1,000 or over."

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

On page 2, line 25, strike out the words "the district of" and insert the word "and;" so that it may read "for the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Hawaii, and Alaska."

Mr. BONYNGE. Is Alaska now an organized Territory?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Alaska is an organized Territory, and the Supreme Court of the United States has so decided.

Mr. BONYNGE. Then I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 25, strike out the words "district of" and insert, after the word "Hawaii," the word "and;" so that it will read: "Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Hawaii, and Alaska."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask if you are going to naturalize out in the Hawaiian Islands?

Mr. BONYNGE. Certainly.

Mr. CUSHMAN. That question is not particularly involved, but in this bill the designation of Alaska should be the correct legal designation, and it should be designated as the "Territory of Alaska" and not designated as the "district of Alaska," the Supreme Court having decided in two different cases that Alaska is an organized Territory.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There was some judge somewhere, I believe in Oregon, who naturalized a Chinaman out there not long ago, and if there are any more such judges around out there anywhere I am opposed to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, and I ask the attention of the gentleman from Colorado to the amendment, as I believe he will have no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 4, after the word "law," insert "or equity, or law and equity."

Mr. BONYNGE. The committee will not object to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read:

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk is reading section 4. I have not heard all of section 3 read yet.

Mr. BONYNGE. It has been read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I have an amendment to offer to section 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] offers an amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the language on lines 6, 7, and 8, down to and including the word "States," all on page 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, lines 6, 7, and 8, strike out the following language: "All judges, justices, clerks, and officers of such State courts, when acting in naturalization matters, shall be deemed officers and agents of the United States."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Chairman, if this language is permitted to remain in the bill, we are making State judges and State clerks elected or appointed as State officers by the States or the people thereof "officers and agents of the United States," confusing two things which the Constitution and our forefathers were very careful, indeed anxious, to demark the one from the other. This bill will then mix them up irretrievably. Under our peculiar system of government each one of our two governmental agencies is supreme within the line of its powers. In the one case powers delegated, and in the other case, powers reserved, and to pass a bill upon any subject whereby officers appointed or elected in a State as State officers are made "officers and agents of the United States"—are made Federal officers—seems to be too plainly obnoxious to require any argument at all. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to say a word in answer to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. The naturalization of aliens——

Mr. WILLIAMS. One word, if the gentleman will pardon me. I want to say this, too; in some of the States the State judge, clerks, etc., could not act at all without ipso facto vacating their positions. In Virginia, for example, and in several other States, State officers are forbidden by the constitution or by the laws to hold any office of emolument or profit under the United States Government.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, under the Constitution the subject of naturalization is delegated to Congress. It is a Federal procedure, and so we might have reported, as I said a moment ago, a provision limiting the courts that could exercise jurisdiction in these matters to Federal courts. We sought to be more liberal and to extend the opportunity to State courts to act in such matters. It is necessary when they do so act, that they act as officers and agents of the United States. It has been held by the Supreme Court, in the case of Houston v. Moore, 5 Wheaton, page 1, that the declaration in the United States Statutes that has reference to this matter—

That certain State courts may hear and determine and act upon applications for naturalization is permissive merely, for Congress is without power to interfere with or control State courts except in so far as the Federal courts have appellate jurisdiction.

Now, of course, no State courts can be compelled to act by Congress. It is simply permissive. They may or they may not, as they see fit, but when they do undertake to act in naturalization proceedings they must act in accordance with the statutes passed by Congress.

Mr. PERKINS. What is it intended exactly to accomplish by the use of this phrase:

They shall be deemed to be officers and agents of the United States?

Mr. BONYNGE. Because we are providing, Mr. Chairman, in other sections of the bill that returns shall be made by the clerks of these courts to the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization at Washington, and that that Bureau shall have supervisory control over the naturalization proceedings, whether in State courts or in Federal courts.

Mr. PERKINS. And still, of course, if the courts——

Mr. BONYNGE. That they shall receive fees which shall be paid under the provisions of this act.

Mr. PERKINS. That is, the officers of the State courts will receive fees?

Mr. BONYNGE. Certainly; in order that they may be paid for the services they may render in performing this function for the National Government.

Mr. PERKINS. You do not intend to give the judges any fees?

Mr. BONYNGE. No; not the judges, but the judges will be responsible to the National Government for the proper administration of its laws in reference to naturalization.

Mr. PERKINS. Suppose a man who is judge of the State court should misbehave in this capacity, do you think he could be indicted or impeached under a Federal law?

Mr. BONYNGE. Certainly I do; unquestionably.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think he could be impeached under the Federal law?

Mr. BONYNGE. I do not think he could be impeached. I did not notice the word "impeached" in the question.

Mr. MANN. May I ask if this is in the naturalization law?

Mr. BONYNGE. Not that exact language. Under the existing law there is no general bureau for supervising control over this subject.

Mr. MANN. Now, as I understand, there are certain fees to be collected by the clerks of the courts. In the city of Chicago there will be a very large amount of fees to be collected. The clerks are selected under a law fixing their compensation, but if you declare them to be Federal officials do they keep the fees or do they turn them into the treasury of the county, as the State law requires?

Mr. BONYNGE. I suppose the State legislature could regulate that as it saw fit. So far as the Federal Government is concerned, we authorize them to keep a portion of the fees.

Mr. MANN. If they are made Federal officers and you provide that they shall have certain money, can the State law change the law that we pass here?

Mr. BONYNGE. As to the disposition of what money they make from it, I think so.

Mr. MANN. I can not quite see myself the point of having this in. I can see embarrassments that may arise. The gentleman does not question that these officials will re required to make returns in any event, I suppose?

Mr. BONYNGE. I do not think they would have any control or supervision of them, unless they were acting as our officials and our agents, and we want to keep that control or that supervision, or else we can never have a uniform system of naturalization throughout the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes. I want to ask him a question.

Mr. MANN. I am not through with him myself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks that the time of the gentleman from Colorado be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is familiar with the laws of the State of New York. Does he not believe that if this particular provision be enacted it will prevent every State court in New York from exercising powers to naturalize under this bill?

Mr. BONYNGE. I know of no reason why it should.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Are not the officials of the State of New York prohibited from accepting or filling any position in the Federal service to which compensation is attached?

Mr. PERKINS. I will state to the gentleman——

Mr. BONYNGE. I do not recall that law in New York. There may be such a one.

Mr. PERKINS. Under the jurisdiction of this act, which is now confined to the judges of the Supreme Court, the only courts which have unlimited jurisdiction, I very much doubt that they would act under the law by which they were pro tento made officers of the Government. I think they would decline the jurisdiction.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call my colleague's attention to the fact that the clerks of those courts under this bill would be entitled to certain fees, and that in itself would prevent these clerks from acting in the naturalization cases as provided in the bill.

Mr. HINSHAW. They are entitled to fees now.

Mr. BONYNGE. Under some State laws they are.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BONYNGE. I have no further time, but I will answer the gentleman a question.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman tell the House what control, in his judgment, the Federal authorities have over clerks and judges in the State courts when they have taken jurisdiction in naturalization matters?

Mr. BONYNGE. Under section 4 of the bill it provides that there shall be an agent of the bureau who shall be authorized to examine the various forms used by these different clerks and officers acting in naturalization proceedings, to examine the records that are kept by them; and, then, under that supervisory control, to see that they are complying with the statute. I suppose the next question the gentleman would ask would be this: Then, presuming that they had violated any of the sections of the bill, what power would the National Government have in the premises? I will answer that question by saying, that if any officer of a State court violates any of the provisions of any section of the bill providing for criminal prosecution, we would ascertain the fact through the examination and we could punish such officer accordingly in the Federal court for such violation.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then you are going to make, by the terms of your bill, a judge of a State court amenable and tryable in the Federal courts, so as to be removed from office by provision of this bill?

Mr. BONYNGE. Why, if the State court acts under this bill, should it become law, he is certainly amenable to the Federal statute. He would be performing a duty which he need not take upon himself unless he saw fit to do so. It is only permissible; but if he takes the responsibility, if he assumes the responsibility, he will be amenable to the Federal Government. I will call attention to the fact that this is not a novel procedure. It has existed heretofore. I think he is amenable under existing statute. I know, in many instances, or at least I recall one at the present time where the Federal Government made the officers of elections in the States officers of the National Government, and if they violated the State laws regulating the election, the supreme court held——

Mr. FITZGERALD. They receive no compensation from the Federal Government for those services?

Mr. BONYNGE. No; they receive no compensation from the Federal Government; neither do they under this bill. They receive it from the applicants who apply for naturalization.

Mr. SHERLEY. The whole illustration the gentleman is using is one of the reasons why some of us are not disposed to mix State and Federal courts together.

Mr. BONYNGE. The gentleman must admit that he is not in accord with the Supreme Court of the United States so far as authority is concerned. He may doubt the wisdom of it, but, so far as the legality is concerned, the Supreme Court of the United States has settled, in my judgment, that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I move to strike out the last word.

I desire to say to the gentleman from Colorado that when he has heard me speak as to the constitutionality of the provision it will be time for him to argue the law point. I wanted the committee to know what was being undertaken, because, in my judgment, if it be possible to eliminate this mixing of State and Federal jurisdiction it is a wise thing to do. We have never had the Federal courts interfering with the State courts without the creation of friction, without creating scandal and a creation of evils greater than those they undertook to cure. For my part, I would rather see the provision as to the courts that could grant naturalization limited to Federal courts. I would rather have that than to have the Federal courts interfering with the State courts. Under the fourth section of this bill a judge of a State court would be subject to examination by a Department clerk of the Bureau of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And under section 17 to imprisonment,

Mr. SHERLEY. If the officers of a court of unlimited jurisdiction of a State are to be subject to inquisitorial examination by clerks in the Department of Commerce and Labor, it is high time we abolish the State courts and simply make the whole thing a national government, without any State lines whatever.

Mr. BONYNGE. If the gentleman has not used all of his time, I desire to say in reply that I think the only remedy that could be applied for the condition which the gentleman has argued against is that which he has suggested himself; that either you will have to retain the provision that we have put in this bill, or else you will have to take the other horn of the dilemma and limit the naturalization proceedings to the Federal courts. As between these two propositions, I was in favor of the one that is contained in this bill, and I trust that the committee will be in favor of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman says the only alternative to the provision I have moved to strike out would be to confer exclusive jurisdiction in matters of naturalization upon the Federal courts. I submit that that is not the only remedy, that there is a remedy much more at hand, and that is simply to adopt the pending amendment and strike out the obnoxious language.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman says he might have provided in this bill, or Congress might provide, that the Federal courts exclusively should have jurisdiction. There is no doubt about that proposition, and if it be a wise thing to do, why, then, go ahead and do it. That is something that we can do; that is something that Congress can do; but this thing that is attempted in this bill to be done is something that Congress ought not to attempt to do. I doubt if it is a thing that Congress can do. Let us take the language and consider it just a minute. What an anomaly it would be. Down in Virginia, for example, or in New York, a State officer acting under this bill, accepting the authority and power conferred upon him by this provision, would by the situation itself, in Virginia under the State constitution and also, as I understand it, in New York under their law, vacate the State office. So much if he doesn't. Then, if he does accept it, he becomes, under provision 17 in this bill, subject to be arrested—the State judge, the clerk of a State court—and thrown into jail by a Federal marshal, and the office to which he has been elected by the people of the State, or appointed by the governor of the State, becomes for the time being vacated by his imprisonment. Thus the machinery of one government, the Federal, can stop the machinery of the other, the State. In the one case the State officer acting vacates the State office by the constitution or law of the State, and in the other case he is torn from the bench and confined in prison by Federal authority.

Mr. WALDO. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will yield.

Mr. WALDO. I want to ask the gentleman if under the present law a State judge or a State clerk could not be prosecuted in any United States court and sent to jail or State prison for a violation of the present naturalization law?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; he could not as a Federal officer or agent, that I know of. A State court or a State clerk can be arrested as John Smith or Tom Jones like anybody else, carried into a Federal court and tried for a crime, wherever he is charged with one, and the Federal court has jurisdiction, but he could not be arrested for performance or nonperformance of any official duty and carried into a Federal court for that, except where in some cases Federal jurisdiction attaches as when he has violated an injunction or refused to obey a mandamus issuing out of a Federal court having jurisdiction of a subject-matter or something of that sort. But here you confer upon a man judicial power, a State judge, and then upon somebody else—a Federal officer—the right to imprison him in connection with the exercise of that judicial power.

Mr. WALDO. Is there any difference——

Mr. WILLIAMS. You can not arrest a Federal judge for a fault in the exercise of his judicial power, even by the provisions of this bill——

Mr. WALDO. I think that is a mistake if that is true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to say this further, as a Democrat; I do not see how any man who understands even the A B Cs of Democracy can vote for this bill with that clause left in it. It is as absolutely impossible as for a Mohommedan to believe in polytheism.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the gentleman believe that the State authorities could prosecute a State judge or the clerk of a State court for violating a Federal law; and if his theory is right, is it not true that it would necessarily deprive the State courts of the power that the bill seeks to confer upon them to naturalize aliens?

Mr. WILLIAMS. They could, if as a part of his conduct in connection with it he had committed forgery or perjury, or suborned it, or had accepted a bribe, or committed any other act which was a crime under the laws of the State. That is what I say—they can not serve, they would not serve, if I understand the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I confess, Mr. Chairman, that the question discussed by the gentleman from Mississippi is an important one, a serious one, one that I have thought about a great many times in connection with the present system of naturalization. It provides a commingling of the Federal and State power in one officer.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman will pardon me, there is no language like this which I propose to strike out in the present law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I admit there is perhaps no specific language like that in the present law, but I do not think language designating the State officers as Federal officers and agents for the enforcement of the naturalization law is of any significance whatever.

When a State court or the officers of a State court undertake to administer a Federal naturalization law, by the very nature of the undertaking they become Federal officers or agents in that particular work, and it does not make any difference whether the court shall be specifically designated a Federal court or the clerk a Federal clerk while so engaged or not. They are such whether this law says so or not. We can not add to or take from the fact that an officer who exercises Federal power is a Federal officer or agent in the execution of that power.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then if that be true, why not strike out the language?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not believe it is of any significance. The whole question resolves itself down to this: Whether Congress shall confer on the State courts the power to naturalize citizens of the United States, with the consent of the States. It can not be done over the objection of the States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. At present what is done under the naturalization laws is this: Congress, without making these people who are State court officials officers or agents of the Federal Government, simply agrees to allow State courts to act, and it accepts without question, in accordance with the comity that invariably prevails between the two systems of government, the result of the deliberations—the judgment—the conclusion of the State courts. This language changes that policy.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If the gentleman is right in that, we had as well abandon all attempts to prevent fraudulent naturalizations of aliens. Unless the Government that confers citizenship can control the agencies of naturalization, all attempts to prevent fraud will be futile.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It has never thus far even attempted to do it. On the contrary, in comity, it has accepted the conclusions of the State courts, and neither "examined their methods" nor made them Federal "officers and agents."

Mr. GARRETT. Now, the powers to be performed by the State judges and by the Federal judges under the provisions of this act are precisely the same, are they not?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Precisely the same.

Mr. GARRETT. If a Federal judge is guilty of malfeasance in office in connection with this act, how would he be punished? He can only be punished——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Allow me to answer the question. The gentleman should not ask and answer the question. There are general laws for the punishment of Federal judges for general malfeasance in office. We can not make general laws to punish State courts and officers. Our power to punish State officers is necessarily confined to their action in the enforcement of Federal laws, and that is the reason for limited penal provisions in this bill.

Mr. GARRETT. Is it not true that the Federal judge could be punished only by impeachment?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not always. There are statutes authorizing the indictment and trial of Federal judges for crimes.

Mr. GARRETT. For malfeasance in office?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; for malfeasance in office. Malfeasance in office covers a great many things.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman has the time, right along that line, the Federal Government can impeach a Federal judge. That is its way of getting at him.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Impeachment is the way to remove him from office, but it is not a punishment for crime. It is a political proceeding to remove a judge from office and is in no sense a bar to his prosecution in the criminal courts for the acts for which he is impeached.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that a Federal judge who has committed murder can be indicted just the same as John Jones can.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And if he has received a bribe as a judge he can be prosecuted for bribery.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And if he has committed forgery he can be indicted for that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But I am talking now about his official conduct. The only way you can get at him for that alone is by impeachment. Either one of two things would follow if this bill put State judges in the place of United States judges. You would either have to impeach a State judge in the United States Senate, which is out of all question—of course you could not do it—or else, if you are going to deal with him at all, you would have to imprison him or fine him.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. Impeachment is not a punishment, it is not a criminal proceeding; it is simply a process for removing a man from office. Federal judges are amenable to the criminal laws of the country for bribery and other crimes and malfeasances in office just the same as any other officer is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Removal from office is a punishment. There may be, after removal, additional punishment. And so would a State judge without this language which I want stricken out be amenable to the criminal laws both of the State and the United States. He can not commit forgery or bribery without punishment. He is punished, however, as a citizen and not as an "officer or agent of the United States."

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, there are at least two people in jail to-day who would like to have heard this argument which proves that they can not be put in jail for the very thing which they are now serving sentence. One of them is named Lavine and the other Saverino. Both of them have been convicted in cases where this very question came up. In the case of Lavine v. United States (128 Fed. Rep., 826), Lavine was naturalized in a criminal court in the city of St. Louis. He was tried in the Federal court.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is a court of criminal jurisdiction.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He was not a judge or a clerk. Nobody is denying that.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The principle is the same.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no.

Mr. BENNET of New York. If Congress can make one statute extend over a State court, it can make another. The particular statute in this case was the statute in relation to perjury, section 5429, United States Statutes, and the court held there that while as an original proposition it might be good law that the Federal Government could not confer power on a State court, the fact that it had done so and that that jurisdiction had been maintained for a hundred years precluded the court at this late day from raising any such question.

There was a similar case in the courts of the southern district of New York against Savarino, where the same thing was held. The Government can not impose any jurisdiction upon a State court. It can not make the State court naturalize one single alien; but when any judge, with the permission of a State, or any clerk of his court, with the permission of his State, assumes any jurisdiction which the Government tenders to him, then he comes under the jurisdiction of the United States Government and is subject to punishment for violating the statutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am informed that the clerk of the court in St. Louis, and also the marshal, their names being Garrett and Dolan, were both convicted and are both to-day serving terms in the penitentiary for fraudulent naturalization in the courts in St. Louis, and that they were convicted in the Federal courts.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And these officers, Garrett and Dolan, were State officers elected by the people of St. Louis.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman stated a while ago there was a Louisiana case.

Mr. BENNET of New York. That was Mr. BONYNGE, of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Where was that officer convicted?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I have no personal knowledge of that.

Mr. BONYNGE. My recollection was he was impeached, probably by the State legislature.

Mr. HAYES. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question, or, rather, make an observation. Within the past two months, in San Francisco, Cal., the United States district attorney, has prosecuted and sent to the penitentiary a deputy clerk of the court of the county of San Francisco, a State court, for fraudulently naturalizing aliens. He prosecuted him and convicted him and sent him to the penitentiary within the last two months.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Nobody is denying——

Mr. BENNET of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. BONYNGE. And, Mr. Chairman, I would state another instance where clerks of State courts are exercising jurisdiction in Federal matters. In the matter of making proof in all homestead laws, the clerks of the various State courts in the West are authorized, under certain emergencies, to act and to take the proof, and one of the clerks of one of the county courts in my State within the past two months has been convicted and sent to the penitentiary for fraud in the exercise of that jurisdiction.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. YOUNG. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York this question: Does the gentleman think that this provision about which we are now disputing adds anything to the power or anything to the responsibility of judges, justices, and clerks in offices of State courts if they consent to act in naturalizations if the words were stricken out? In other words, would not they have the same power, would not they act under the same responsibility, would not they be amenable in the same manner to Federal law as if the words were in?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, my own individual judgment is they would, but to save the question this language ought to be left in the bill.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Allow me to say——

Mr. BENNET of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman does not seem to have understood the contention. That John Smith or Savarino or the clerk of the court could be arrested, indicted, tried, and found guilty of forgery or perjury in a Federal court or State court nobody has ever disputed. The proposition that we are making here is this: He was punished for a crime and not because he was an officer or agent of the Federal Government. He was punished because he committed perjury; he was punished because he committed forgery; the individual was punished for the crime and he was punished in a Federal court in one case and in the State courts in many cases. Now, then, the man could be punished whenever he commits a crime whether he is a Federal court clerk or a State court clerk, and it is unnecessary to withdraw the line of demarcation between our two governmental systems in order to punish him for crime.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and time for debate has expired.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended long enough to answer this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that the time be extended for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET of New York. As far as he went, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is absolutely correct. What the man would be arrested and tried and convicted for would be crime. That is everything that a man is ordinarily tried and arrested and convicted for. He could be arrested, tried, and convicted whether this language was in the bill or not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the gentleman's pardon. A Federal officer can be dealt with by the Federal Government simply for malfeasance in office.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I have quoted two decisions, and as far as the line of demarcation goes, the circuit court of appeals of St. Louis held that the line of demarcation had been extinguished a hundred years.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Would the gentleman mind putting the language of that decision in the RECORD?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I have no objection.

The language referred to is as follows, taken from 128 Federal Reporter, at page 827 et seq.:

> Counsel for the plaintiff in error, however, contends with much cogency and ingenuity that a court of a State has no jurisdiction to admit aliens to citizenship (1) because Congress had no power under the Constitution to grant this authority to such a court; and (2) because, if it had that power, a court of common-law jurisdiction created by a State has no authority to accept or to exercise this power in the absence of legislative permission so to do from the State which established it. His argument in support of his first position runs in this way: The Constitution provides that "the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish" (Article III, sec. 1), and that "the judicial power shall extend to all cases" specified in Article III, section 2. Congress has no authority to grant any portion of this judicial power of the nation to any other courts than those created under these sections of the Constitution. (Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 1 Wheat., 304, 328–330; 4 L. Ed., 97; Houston v. Moore, 5 Wheat., 1, 27; 5 L. Ed., 19). The admission of aliens to citizenship is a judicial function. It is the exercise of judicial power. (Spratt v. Spratt, 4 Pet., 393, 407; 7 L. Ed., 171.) Therefore the Congress has no power to grant to a court of a State the judicial power to admit aliens to citizenship, and section 2165 and all other acts of Congress which by their terms bestowed this authority upon State courts are unconstitutional and void. In support of his second proposition he argues that a court of a State derives all of its powers from the political entity which creates it; that, while such a court may perform judicial functions permitted by national legislation in cases in which the general power to discharge these functions is granted or allowed to it by the legislation of the State which creates it, no new or additional authority can be conferred upon it by the laws of the nation, and none can be exercised by it unless it is granted by the State laws which create the court, and vest and define its jurisdiction, and, inasmuch as the legislation of the State of Missouri has never granted to any court of that State the power or the permission to naturalize aliens in accordance with the laws of the United States, none of the courts of that State may lawfully exercise this authority. To sustain this argument he cites the decisions of the Supreme Court to the effect that where jurisdiction may be conferred upon the national courts by Congress, and that jurisdiction is not made exclusive, the State courts may exercise it if by the Constitution and laws of their State they are competent to take it (Houston v. Moore, 5 Wheat., 1, 27; 5 L. Ed., 19; Claflin v. Houseman, 93 U. S., 130, 136; 23 L. Ed., 833); the cases in which State courts have declined to sustain actions for fines, penalties, or forfeitures imposed by acts of Congress for the violation of national legislation (U. S. v. Lathrop, 17 Johns, 4, 8–10; Ely v. Peck, 7 Conn., 239, 244); and the case of Ex Parte Knowles (5 Cal., 300), in which the supreme court of that State held that, while Congress had no power to confer jurisdiction upon the courts of a State to admit aliens to citizenship, yet such courts might exercise that power in cases where its existence was recognized by the legislation of the State which established it.

These propositions and arguments of the counsel for the plaintiff in error are plausible and cogent. They might well have challenged debate—possibly they might have changed the course of legislation and of action—if they had been presented to the Supreme Court one hundred years ago. At this late day, however, after the courts of the States have for more than a century, with the uniform acquiescence and consent of all the departments of the National Government and of the State governments, exercised this authority to naturalize aliens granted to them by the acts of Congress, there is one answer which is equally fatal to both the propositions which counsel for the plaintiff in error here presents. It is that the contemporaneous interpretation of the provisions of the Constitution relative to this subject by those who framed it, the concurrence of statesmen, legislators, and judges in that construction, the acquiescence and uninterrupted practice of all the Departments of the Government in the same interpretation for more than one hundred years, conclusively determine their meaning and effect, and place them beyond the realm of doubt or question. (Stuart v. Laird, 1 Cranch, 298, 308; 2 L. Ed., 115; Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat., 265, 419; 5 L. Ed., 257; Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet., 539, 620, 621; 10 L. Ed., 1060; Ex parte Gist, 26 Ala., 156, 164; Dean v. Borchsenius, 30 Wis., 237.) In the year 1790 the Congress passed the first act to establish a uniform rule of naturalization. That act empowered any common-law court of record in any one of the States to admit aliens to citizenship upon their compliance with the terms of the law, but gave no such authority to any court of the United States. (1 Stat., 103.) Many of the statesmen who sat in the convention which framed the Constitution were Members of the Congress which passed this law. This act of Congress is therefore a contemporary interpretation—a practical exposition of the meaning and effect—of the grant to Congress of the power to establish a uniform rule of naturalization by the very men who, as the representatives of the people of the United States, gave this authority to the legislative department of the National Government. From the day when this act gave the courts of the States the power to issue certificates of citizenship to qualified aliens to the present moment, through all the legislation and judicial action of more than a century, that grant to the State courts has been maintained undisturbed, and the power thus bestowed has been exercised by the courts of the States with the uninterrupted acquiescence of the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the nation and of the States. (1 Stat., 414; Act April 14, 1802, c. 28, 2 Stat., 153, 155; Rev. St., sec. 2165; U. S. Comp. St., p. 1329; Claflin v. Houseman, 93 U. S., 130, 140, 23 L. Ed., 833; Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U. S., 275, 279, 17 Sup. Ct., 326, 41 L. Ed., 715.)

This contemporaneous, continuous, and uniform affirmance of the constitutionality of the grant to the State courts of this power to naturalize aliens, and this uninterrupted practice of the State courts to exercise the power thus bestowed upon them, are too long continued, too strong, too obstinate to be controlled or shaken now. It is too late to question the constitutionality of the devolution of this authority upon the courts of the States or their jurisdiction to exercise it. Those issues have been settled by prescription and practice, and they are no longer open to debate or question.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi this question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words for the purpose of answering a question.

Mr. YOUNG. I wish to ask the gentleman from Mississippi this question: I agree with him fully in thinking that these words should be stricken out. But now I wish to ask him this: That provided they are struck out and some judge acts corruptly under the naturalization laws, then has the gentleman any doubt that he has been prosecuted under Federal law for his corrupt act?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no doubt but that he could be prosecuted in the State court or the Federal court, either one, whichever happens to have jurisdiction.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. MANN. I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. A while ago cases were cited as to punishment of clerks.

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Who will punish the judge?

Mr. BONYNGE. The Federal court, in the same way, I should say, if the judge were guilty of a violation of the Federal statute. I do not know of any law that exempts a judge of a State court from obeying a Federal statute when he undertakes to act under the provisions of a Federal statute.

Mr. MANN. If the judge is guilty of crime that is another thing. He can be punished, no matter who he is. But you can not impeach the judge in Congress, and undoubtedly we could not impeach a State judge, although he is deemed a Federal officer, and could the State impeach him when he is a Federal officer? Who will control the judges?

Mr. BONYNGE. The Federal courts.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. I understood that the gentleman in charge of the bill within fifteen minutes to state that in a case of this kind the State of Louisiana did impeach.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. With the law as it is now, the judge of the State court enforces the Federal law. That is a matter that is permissive. That has been exercised ever since the foundation of the Government, but here is a proposition to declare that these people when acting as judges in that position are not State officers; they are no longer State officials. They are Federal officers. Now, very plainly the State legislature can not impeach a Federal official, and I do not think that Congress can impeach a State judge.

Mr. BONYNGE. They can not impeach a State judge, but I think we can punish him for the violation of a Federal statute.

Mr. MANN. We can punish him for the violation of the law.

Mr. BONYNGE. That is the way we would have control of him, and that is the only control we would have.

Mr. MANN. He has got to violate a specific law, and you make no provision in here where the judge violates the law, no matter who he may naturalize, if he follows what he calls a judicial interpretation. It is the difference that runs all through legal jurisprudence between the conviction of a crime and impeachment for misdemeanor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has expired.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last four words.

The bill makes the clerks and judges Government officers and agents of the United States. Now, the constitution of the State of Pennsylvania prohibits any official in that State acting in the capacity of a Government official, and the same is true in New Jersey.

Mr. PERKINS. And the same in New York.

Mr. MAHON. They can not act under this bill.

Mr. BONYNGE. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] desires to make answer in reference to the State of New York, I would like to have him do so.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman has said there is a provision similar to the one he quotes in the State of New York. There is one somewhat analogous in our State court, and under such a provision they have held that while that language is in the constitution, while judges there are so restricted they can not even run for an office except the judicial office——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman pardon an inquiry for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] has the floor.

Mr. BENNET of New York. While the constitution there is so specific that a supreme court judge can not even run for an office except a judicial office, there have been from time to time powers other than those conferred by the constitution conferred on the supreme court judges by legislative action. The judges have exercised those powers; they have been upheld by the court, and they have not been removed or impeached.

Mr. PERKINS. Is it not a fact that in the exercise of all these different parts of jurisdiction they have continued to act as State officers? The trouble with your bill is that when they act in naturalization, you say expressly they shall act not as State officers, but as United States officers.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I think the answer to that is very plain. You can not compel a State court to naturalize an alien, but when a State judge acts under Federal statute he acts with the expressed or implied consent of his own State.

Mr. MAHON. Now answer my question. When you make them officers of the General Government of the United States, they are not acting as State officers?

Mr. BENNET of New York. We do not make them that.

Mr. MAHON. You do.

Mr. BENNET of New York. We say that while performing this function they shall be deemed for this purpose to be Federal officers.

Mr. MAHON. You better strike that out if you want your bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 82, noes 35.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization is authorized from time to time to make or cause to be made by an agent or agents of such Bureau examinations of the methods employed in naturalization proceedings by any court or courts, to copy any records pertaining to naturalization in said court or courts, and to examine under oath in connection with this part of the business of such Bureau any clerk or other person connected with said court or courts, and to make from the records of said court or courts lists of persons who have been or shall be naturalized.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I rise for the purpose of moving to strike out section 4 of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I would not place the whole responsibility of good citizenship upon courts or officers whose duty it is to see that the citizenship of the United States is guarded in every possible manner when naturalizing aliens. I would preserve a high standard of citizenship by closer inspection of immigrants rather than by creating complicated machinery for the naturalization of those who have been admitted to our shores.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what a humiliating spectacle it would be to see a bureau clerk go into the courts of the several States of the Union clothed with power to take the judge from his bench and the clerk from his desk and put them on the carpet and bring them to book at his will and pleasure. Why, no man has a higher regard for a bureau clerk or chief than I in the exercise of proper power in the bureaus of the Government, but I object to extending their power beyond proper limits. The humiliation is complete when a bureau says to a committee of Congress that a bill ought or ought not to become a law. They may exercise a censorship over legislation, but I object to their saying to a court that it has or has not administered the laws properly or justly.

Mr. OLMSTED. Where does the gentleman find any such power conferred on the Bureau?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Section 4 extends the power of the Bureau of Immigration so as to authorize that Bureau "from time to time to make or cause to be made by an agent or agents of such Bureau examinations of the methods employed in naturalization proceedings by any court or courts," and to examine all court officers under oath.

Mr. OLMSTED. That does not authorize him to change it or to do anything to the judge.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It authorizes them to go out and make an examination of the methods and proceedings of the courts and to examine all court officers under oath, including, of course, the judge.

Mr. OLMSTED. What is the objection to that?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Why, the objection is that it would be humiliating to the courts to be examined by a bureau clerk touching their proceedings and to be praised or censured by him for their action.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not already the privilege of any American citizen to inspect the public records of any court?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Certainly it is. Any Government officer has that power to-day. Throughout the whole country the officers of the Government, inspectors of immigration, and officers of the United States courts are arresting and prosecuting those who are charged with violating the immigration laws or the naturalization laws of the country, and they have access to the courts the same as any other officer or any other citizen without the additional and unwarranted authority that is conferred here.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Would the chief of a bureau have the authority to call a judge before him and require him to answer a series of questions now without this law giving him that authority?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; and he ought not to have; but a subpœna of the United States district court would undoubtedly bring a judge or his clerk to court in a proper proceeding just the same as it would bring any other citizen, which would answer every purpose this section could serve, and the whole section ought to go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "bureau," line 20, page 3, the following words: "within the usual business hours."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the remarks of the gentleman as to the extensive power given in this paragraph. It certainly seems to me that there ought to be a reasonable limitation put upon the agents of the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and I believe it is but fair and just to put in the words that I have offered in this amendment.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, as far as the committee is concerned, we are ready to accept the amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I insist on my motion to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Any amendment to perfect the section is in order before the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to strike out the whole section.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first put the motion on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. I now offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 23, page 3, strike out the words "and to examine under oath in connection with this part of the business of such bureau any clerk or other person connected with said court or courts."

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the part proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. SHERLEY. I believe, Mr. Chairman, I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has the floor, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania afterwards.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to accomplish what is desired by the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas striking out the section, with this distinction: That I do believe it is important that you should have a proper examination made by some Government official looking to the gathering of statistics and information, to see that the courts are properly performing their functions.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And looking toward a uniform procedure.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does not the gentleman believe that the courts of the United States may now send an officer into the several courts of the States to gather information?

Mr. SHERLEY. I know of no law now existing that authorizes an officer of the United States courts to go in quest of any such information; but it is desired by the proposers of this legislation, as I understand it, to bring about a uniformity in procedure, and in order to accomplish that it is proper that an official of the Department should gather information. The improper point lay in giving that officer the power to put under oath an officer of the State court, and make the clerk and the judge testify as to their procedure. It was undignified; it was humiliating to the State courts and State officials. It ought not to be; but with the amendment I propose adopted, you will then have simply a section authorizing an employee in the Department of Commerce and Labor, from time to time, to make an investigation and examine the records of the court and report back to the Bureau of Commerce and Labor, against which I think no one ought to object.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I have consulted with my colleagues on the committee, and we are satisfied to accept as far as we can the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to address the House for a minute upon the subject of the amendment offered
